The business people of the District of Columbia and all the residents depend upon the Government for all the beautificiation there is here.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I was wondering what authority Congress had to pass an act saying the Board of Commissioners should prevent this concern from loading a carload in the District of Columbia and shipping it to Baltimore.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Search me. There are 260 men who will be deprived of employment. The Central Trades Union, the other night, held an indignation meeting of protest against this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. I have just read this bill for the first time, and I am looking at it from the viewpoint of statutory construction. If the gentleman will look on page 4, line 16, there are several words left out. Then on page 5, it is stated "which use shall be no greater than the greater of—"

Following that there is not anything. Then down on line 15 there are the words "during such 5 years" with nothing following.

I am looking at this from the viewpoint of statutory construction. Is it proper to consider a bill which does not say anything? I do not want to hurt the gentlewoman's feelings, but this bill is written in a slipshod manner.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I want to know. I am asking a conscientious question.

Mrs. NORTON. We have amendments that will cure all the defects you speak of.

Mr. MAVERICK. I want to make this observation, and I feel very friendly to the gentlewoman from New Jersey. This bill does not say anything, and we should not be called upon to vote on a bill that does not say anything.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is not unusual.

Mr. MAVERICK. I cannot vote for a bill that does not say anything.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman made a remark a minute ago about apartment houses in New York not being bothered by these slaughterhouses nearby. Is it not true that the water is more grossly polluted around that area in New York than anywhere else in the United States?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Not from the slaughterhouses. That has nothing to do with it. There is no reason why water should be polluted under the modern scientific methods available, as has been testified to before the Senate committee. Every bit of offal can be disposed of without odor and without polluting the water.

Mr. Speaker, here is a bill that has never been considered by the committee, although the people interested in this bill asked and begged for hearings. There is no great rush about it, I submit.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. It is not fair to make statements on this floor that are not true.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I did not intend to, I assure you.

Mrs. NORTON. The committee was not asked for hearings on this bill. Hearings are now being held in the United States Senate and certainly it seems entirely unnecessary to hold hearings simultaneously in both Houses of the Congress on identical bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. By the same token, may I suggest that the gentlewoman might have waited until the hearings in the Senate were concluded? I was informed that representatives of the New York company were present and asked to be heard and were not given the opportunity.

Mrs. NORTON. A representative from the Gobel Co., a very high-priced lawyer, came in and was heard by the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It was from committee members that I heard there were no hearings.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman please say what committee members stated that? I would like very much to know. I was present and presiding.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it the usual procedure for a House committee to forego hearings on legislation if a Senate committee is having hearings on similar legislation?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, I do not follow that procedure. I believe in connection with a matter like this, where you are going to take away property worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, we should at least give them the courtesy of a hearing.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In just a second. The bill coming from nowhere, from some nebulous source——

Mrs. NORTON. Oh, now, the gentleman is most unfair. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman consider the Committee on the District of Columbia nowhere?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I did not mean that. I know the committee reported it.

Mrs. NORTON. I know the committee does not receive too much consideration.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I refer to the source of the bill prior to its introduction. I know it came from the Committee on the District of Columbia, a committee for which I have the greatest respect.

A number of trades are described in the bill as being "nuisances"; none of those businesses is now being conducted in the District, but sandwiched in there, as item 15, is a covert attack on this one business, this one concern, and against the wishes of all the cattlemen of that section and against the wishes of all the consumers, against a business located out in a neighborhood where it could do no harm, and has not been complained against for 40 years. What is the harm in taking the bill back to the committee and holding hearings on it, in justice to everybody, including the District of Columbia, and to particularly find out what and who are behind the bill? [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. RICH. I am wondering whether the radio is now on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to inform the gentleman.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, in fairness to an industry which processes the product of my State and of the West, I want to take this opportunity to say something I have had in my mind for a long time.

First, if we are going to carry this thing to its logical conclusion, if we are to do away with all odors in the District, and if we are going to clean up the District and make it worthy of the Capital, as the proponents of this bill insist, I think we should amend this bill by an addition to line 6, on page 3, so that the item will read:

Slaughtering of animals, including fowl, and the cleaning and preparation of fish and sea food.

If any of you have had an opportunity to go down on Water Street and see the barges come in laden with sea food and fish, you certainly cannot take issue with me on the fact that their odor outodors that of any slaughterhouse you have ever passed. [Laughter.] These fish have to be cleaned in a manner which compares with the preparation of cattle, hogs, or sheep. Just because they come out of the water is no sign their scales and the material from their insides are any cleaner than those from an animal. Therefore, in taking the position that because a slaughterhouse happens to be located at a place where somebody wants to build some houses we are going to stop this slaughterhouse from operating, we are also going to close the door to the operation of any slaughterhouse for any purpose in the District from now on, unless the present licenses are to be continued by the Commissioners.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I am pleased to yield.

Mr. KLEBERG. I may call the gentleman's attention to the first section on page 3 of the bill, which reads:

Incineration, for others, or reduction or rendering, of dead animals, garbage, offal, or refuse, except in a municipal plant.

Will the gentleman explain to me what the major difference in odor may be between a rose called a municipal plant and some other plant?

Mr. FERGUSON. I think the point of the gentleman is well taken. In fact, I think by the time all this refuse would be collected and taken to a municipal plant its odor would be greatly increased.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it not an absolute, inescapable fact that, in connection with the operation of a municipal plant, you have to get rid of waste somewhere, and according to modern methods the best way to get rid of it is by the use of an incinerator? You have to incinerate this waste whether you want to or not, or else put it on a dump, which is worse. If we have to dispose of this waste by incineration, anyway, why add to it by bringing in some more waste?

Mr. FERGUSON. I may say to the gentleman, in regard to packing houses, that if he has ever visited a packing house he will realize the waste from the slaughter of animals is absolutely nil. Every part of the animal is utilized in the name of efficiency. The packing houses do not haul waste out and dispose of it in the river any more. They make fertilizer out of it. If the gentleman will visit a large packing plant in a big city, as I know many of you have, the gentleman will find every bit of the animal is utilized for commercial purposes. [Applause.]

It has long been my conviction there is a conspiracy of the restaurants and food shops in Washington to make the entire city fish and sea-food consumers. For the enlightenment of the House I would like to read from the House Restaurant menu of today. After a long list of sea foods and clams and a dietary platter which consists of crab flakes, we have under the title of "Chef's Suggestions": "Broiled boneless bluefish, fried scallops, lump crab flakes, and sea-food patties", not to mention shrimp salad and sardines.

As a Representative from a Western State that produces beef I want to take this opportunity to complain of this continual fish diet with the hope that beef and pork may sometime find a more prominent place at more reasonable prices on the menus.

To legislate all local packing plants, regardless of their sanitary provisions out of the District, while leaving fish and sea foods free to fill the air with their odors, we would aggravate an already bad situation. Out-of-town packers would absolutely control the price of beef, pork, and mutton. Farmers in the surrounding country would lose the advantage of a local market, and the consumer would be forced to meet the impossible situation of paying an exorbitant price for real meat such as beef, pork, and mutton, or resigning themselves to a steady diet of sea foods every day. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. RICH. I just want to find out if the radio is still on. This is a good vaudeville show.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is beyond the knowledge of the Chair.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I may first say, in regard to the witticisms and the facetiousness that have taken place with respect to the fact this is an incomplete bill that if the gentlemen who have made these facetious remarks will just read a little bit further, they will find that, after all, those are not incomplete sentences, but language such as is very often used in a zoning ordinance.

May I say just a word about the genesis of this bill and the condition which provokes it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not just now. I can say this with very good grace, because I opposed the bill in committee.

Out on Benning Road the Gobel Packing Co. maintained a packing plant and slaughterhouse for many years. In 1933, as a result of the depression, they got into financial stringency and difficulties. In 1934, as I recall, the plant was partly destroyed by fire. Since that time the operators and proprietors of the packing plant have been seeking the necessary funds with which to finance the opening, the enlarging, and the building of a new plant. I understand they have been successful in securing the money, and as a result they have made application to the District Commissioners and to the Zoning Board for a building permit, which permit cost $628.

Now, the fact remains there is nothing in the District laws at the present time under which or whereby the District Commissioners or any agency of the District government could refuse to give them a permit. This is the law today, and if that had been refused, the chances are they might have gone into court and sought a mandamus whereby the District Commissioners and the Zoning Board would have been compelled to issue this license.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a fact they did seek that remedy?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, I think so. So the license that was granted was very properly granted under existing law. I do believe, however, it is unfortunate that the bill came up just at the time when this particular matter was pending.

I think every Member of this House and every Member of the Senate and everybody who has any interest in the Nation's Capital would like to see this the most beautiful city in the United States of America. I think everybody who has an interest in the Nation's Capital is truly interested in keeping it beautiful and free from noxious fumes and noises and odors and all those things that detract somewhat from the beauty of a city, but at the same time it is very unfortunate that this bill should have come up at this particular time. However, I can see what the proponents of the bill have in mind.

I do not know that I speak with authority when I say that, perhaps, the Secretary of the Interior was responsible for this bill. I do not speak with authority, or pretend to speak with authority, when I say that the P. W. A. Housing Division owns a plot of ground near this packing plant. There was a privately organized limited dividend corporation a few years ago that tried to secure this ground for the purpose of building low-cost houses, but something happened. Their option expired and after it had expired, the P. W. A. Housing Division, as I understand, took title to the land. They had in mind building some low-cost housing units, but the building has not started. However, they own the fee to the land and, perhaps, they had in mind preventing any enlargement of the present building or the construction of a new slaughterhouse, because it might impair the value of their property. I may say, however, this is all unfortunate, because it does appear to me that the people who own this packing-plant property still have a vested interest there that ought properly to be safeguarded.

We have another packing plant in town and I do not know what we are going to do about that. We have the Auth Packing Co. right across the street from the huge building purchased by the Federal Government, which houses the Procurement Division. The Auth Packing Co. manufactures these very succulent, skinless frankfurters and other products, and they slaughter lambs, hogs, cattle, and that sort of thing. I do not know whether it is contemplated they are to be put out of business under this or not.

I notice also that no ammonia plant is to be permitted. I am wondering in my own mind a little whether or not the ammonia plant which is incident to a dairy establishment or an ice-cream establishment could very well operate under the provisions of this bill.

However, I do say, in deference to and on behalf of the chairman of the committee, I think she was well motivated in the matter of introducing this bill and had a proper regard for the members of the District of Columbia Committee, who are busy on all sorts of tax legislation and every other conceivable kind of legislation under the sun, and, since there was a disposition to hurry this matter now and since they have had rather full hearings over on the Senate side, I can very well understand that point of view, even though in the meetings of the committee I was opposed to the bill. We are somewhat in the position of that committee of the House that brought in an amendment to the Neutrality Act in the hope of heading off a shipment of airplanes that was about to leave for Spain.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PALMISANO. Is it not true that the gentleman from Illinois is opposed to the bill and voted to reconsider for the sole purpose of offering amendments to cure some defects in the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is substantially true. I wanted to see that these people were properly taken care of under the due-process clause and that no injury might be inflicted upon anyone. However, there may be other cases that may have been handled under the safeguarding provision, and I must say in deference to myself and the committee, we certainly did not have a proper opportunity to consider the bill. I wanted to do the gracious and gentlemanly thing and go along the best I knew how.

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say that by an 8-to-7 vote the gentleman was refused such reconsideration at the suggestion of the Corporation Counsel.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As the gentleman knows, I voted against it in the first instance and then made a motion to reconsider in the hope that something might be done about it, I may say further that two propositions are involved here, first of all with respect to the Gobel Packing Co. and, secondly, the larger aspect of doing something now in behalf of safeguarding the beauty of the Nation's Capital. Maybe this was hasty and, perhaps, the bill ought to go back to the committee, but at least this precipitates the whole proceeding before the House and there must be action before outside capital comes in for the purpose of securing, ultimately, a vested right in some enterprise regarded as undesirable so that we can no longer stop them. We can stop them at the present time and something must be done. It is, perhaps, somewhat unfortunate because it so happens that this came at a time when these people had made application for, and had secured, a permit for the purpose of enlarging what was once a slaughterhouse.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Did the committee ascertain from any evidence or from any report the extent, if any, to which the property of this concern would be depreciated or confiscated in the event this bill passed and became law?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The amount is in controversy, I may say to the gentleman. The amount claimed and the amount that would, perhaps, be acknowledged by the District officials, would vary immensely.

Now, I understand that the citizens' associations, the members of which live in proximity to this plant, are opposed to the bill and in favor not only of retaining the plant but in favor of enlargement because there are prospects that 500 men will receive employment. Secondly, I may say that the Central Labor Union of this city opposes the bill and they are in favor of permitting the Gobel Co. to proceed with the construction of this slaughterhouse.

Mr. MAY. Even though it is a District of Columbia matter, does not the Congress put itself in the attitude of setting a bad precedent as affecting industry generally throughout the country if it should pass this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I doubt it very much. I listened to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], when he spoke of New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia. I think those are well taken. However, I do not believe anybody wants to set the Nation's Capital on all fours with any other town in the United States. We have taken a particular pride in trying to limit the number and kind of industries that come in here. You have the smoke evil that must ultimately be abated. I do not think you can compare this city—the Nation's Capital—with some of the other metropolitan centers of the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to lend what little support I can to the distinguished chairman of this committee. I dislike very much to differ with my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], but I am firmly convinced that there has never been a slaughterhouse that did not produce, in addition to meat products, a lot of noxious effluvia and foul odors. I have one in my district which has been the subject of a great deal of controversy for many years. In the process of rendering, in the process of turning into profit offal substances for fertilizer, a packing house necessarily produces a great deal of foul smell. The neighborhoods are polluted several times a week when this process is necessarily resorted to. A packing-house district becomes, as a rule, a blighted district insofar as real-estate values are concerned.

In the District of Columbia we, as representatives of an entire Nation, have some interest; and the interest of the people as a whole is paramount to that of a single packing-house concern. It is my impression that it is within the power of Congress in this particular instance to prescribe highly restrictive rules and regulations under which a packing house might be built here, and likewise that the Congress may state definitely that a packing house or any other industry is undesirable and should not be permitted to locate here. Washington was to be the seat of government, not an industrial center.

One of the things that is really disappointing to me, as I watched the consideration of the District of Columbia bill, is the fact that on so many occasions the hard-working and distinguished chairman of this committee presents her problems to the House and it seems she stands almost alone. She seems deserted by her committee colleagues. This bill is not the particular concern of the gentlewoman from New Jersey. This is something that should interest every Member of this House, because it involves a definite policy, and I believe that the House should go along with the gentlewoman from New Jersey in this instance. I think the Members have sufficient information before them to intelligently pass upon the subject matter in this bill. They know whether or not they want to permit the construction of a slaughterhouse and whether they want to industrialize the District of Columbia. They know from what they have read and learned and heard in the discussion whether the Capital is to be made a second Chicago or Pittsburgh. There can be no argument whatsoever that we must have a packing house in the city of Washington for the benefit of the people of this community, nor is there any argument that will hold water to the effect that it is necessary for the cattlemen and stock producers here or near the District to have a slaughterhouse for their products.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a short time?

Mr. PARSONS. I withhold it for a moment.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I repeat, there can be no question regarding the necessity of having a packing house located in the city of Washington in order to accommodate the cattle producers and hog raisers in our immediate vicinity. In the first, place we can get all the meat we want from Baltimore, Philadelphia, Chicago, New York, and elsewhere. But once we industrialize the city of Washington, we will destroy its beauty and attractiveness forever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the unfair opposition that has developed to this bill, and because the Members seem to think that full consideration has not been given it, and because the District of Columbia Committee desires at all times to have the membership of this House feel that we are serving in the interest of all of the Members of the House, as chairman of the committee I feel that it would be well to withdraw this bill and hold hearings on it. May I state I believe that very little, if anything, will be gained by holding hearings, but at any rate it will satisfy some of the objections that have been raised here today. The committee is prepared to present several amendments that would perfect it.

However, since apparently it is the opinion of the House that the bill should be withdrawn at this time and be recommitted to the committee and I so move.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey moves that the bill be recommitted to the committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman withhold that for a moment and yield me 5 minutes?

Mrs. NORTON. I shall be glad to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this should be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask unanimous consent that the bill be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman has withheld her request or motion, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. Mead, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have given this subject a great deal of consideration in the past, and I am reluctant to agree to the request made by the gentlewoman from New Jersey for the withdrawal of the bill at this time.

This is the United States Capital. It is growing by leaps and bounds. At this rate it will be difficult in a few years for Members of Congress to provide themselves with decent housing facilities. I do not want this city turned into an industrial city. [Applause.]

As far as I am concerned, I would request that the Committee on the District of Columbia bring in a bill in the very near future adopting a restrictive building program for the United States Capital. [Applause.]

This city was laid out by a great engineer, Major L'Enfant, a friend of the Father of his Country. He intended it to be the seat of government, and, in his judgment, only essential service industries were to be permitted to locate in the city of Washington.

We now have several Government hospitals in the city of Washington. One of them ought to be located in some other part of the country. We have an Army base and a navy yard with headquarters and shops here which ought to be bringing prosperity to some community that you or I might represent. Almost every agency of the Government in the last 25 or 50 years has been attempting to move activities to Washington that ought to be located somewhere in the South, the East, the West, or the North. Let us decentralize these agencies. [Applause.] Let us give the people back home some service, some opportunity for employment. Let us notify these industries, the nonessential industries, that there are other cities in America, cities for which we are appropriating money because their people are on relief, that can accommodate them and their needs. We are building a great Capital, a beautiful city, a city that will give us no end of problems of every nature and description if we industralize it. I say to you it is high time we had a restrictive policy, a policy that would not permit industries of a nonessential, unnecessary character to come within this city. I hope the Committee on the District of Columbia will forthwith bring back a bill with a restrictive policy for our future building plan for the District of Columbia; one that will insure here a city magnificent in its beauty and its buildings; one that might go so far as to prevent not only the industries mentioned in the bill but also railroads, if you please, from operating trains into the District of Columbia except under the use of electric power, no longer covering the Capitol and office buildings with a deluge of soft-coal smoke.

I am sorry this bill is going to be returned to the committee, and I hope it comes out again very soon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be returned to the committee in order to hold a hearing on it and be brought back to be acted upon in the House at the first possible moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on the District of Columbia with a view to holding a hearing, and to be brought back at some future date. Is there objection?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me, addressing myself to the gentlewoman from New Jersey, that it makes very little difference whether a bill is worded in Chesterfieldian language or whether it is not, or whether hearings have been held before this committee or not, we are facing a condition, as I understand it, and not a theory. The condition is that unless we act now these people will build——

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the bill is sent back to the committee under the unanimous-consent request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey or under the motion embodying the unanimous-consent request, are the proceedings by which the bill was reported out of committee vacated?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If it is rereferred to the committee and would come out again, it would be an entirely new proceeding.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the gentlewoman's request was that it be sent back to the House after hearings. I surely would object if that is the understanding. We want the bill recommitted, and, after hearings, voted upon by the committee the same as if the bill was never reported out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the bill be recommitted and come back to the House the proceedings would be entirely new and there would be a new report.

The question is on the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a recent address of our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REAL ESTATE COMMISSION

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6563) to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers and real-estate salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the question of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill and make a point of order against its consideration on the ground that the bill does not comply with clause 2a of rule XIII, the so-called Ramseyer rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Mississippi point out to the Chair specifically where the bill attempts to amend existing law?

Mr. COLLINS. Section 18 on page 30 reads—

all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of order until the Chair passes upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. PARSONS. I withdraw the point of order for the time being.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Is the radio still on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can at last inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not and has not been on since the reading of the President's message. [Laughter.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DREW of Pennsylvania (at the request of Mr. DALY), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota (at the request of Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana), indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. REECE of Tennessee, for 4 days on account of illness in family.

To Mr. KLOEB, for 1 week, on account of sickness at home.

To Mr. CROWE, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. KVALE (at the request of Mr. BOILEAU), for the rest of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. MILLER (at the request of Mr. DRIVER), for the week, on account of important business at home.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BOARD OF COSMETOLOGY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6869) to regulate the occupation and practices of cosmetology, to create a District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology for the examination and licensing of persons to carry on or to teach such practices, to insure the better education of such practitioners, to provide rules regulating the proper conduct and sanitation of cosmetological establishments and schools, for the protection of the public health, and to provide penalties for violation thereof, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

ADJOURNMENT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 25, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs in room 1310, New House Office Building, at 10:30 a. m., Tuesday, May 25, 1937, for further consideration of H. R. 1608, to provide for the common defense by acquiring certain commodities essential to the manufacture of supplies for armed forces in time of emergency, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WARREN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort. We praise Thee for the Lamb who taketh away the sins of the world. That we may be generous to the wayward, kind to the cruel, gracious to the unthankful, is to join hands with our divine Teacher. As we draw near to Thee, Heavenly Father, we pray that this day may assume a fresh meaning of responsibility. Merciful Spirit, be with us, that we may be exalted in understanding and fellowship and be enabled to avoid discord; thus we shall emulate and foster the spirit of concession, peace, and brotherhood. Rebuke us if we leave unexpressed the helpful words. O God, search our hearts and know our thoughts; and if there be any wicked ways in us, we beseech Thee to lead us in the way everlasting. By the law of mutual aid, may this suffering world be redeemed from its crushing poverty, ignorance, and shame. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ARENDS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COLDEN and Mr. SCHULTE asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that on Monday next the Senate Judiciary Committee will report to that body what is commonly known as the Supreme Court plan to increase the membership of that Court. I understand some 100 petitions have been filed in this House in opposition to the President's plan, none of which contain more than 200 names. May I inform the House I am filing at this time a petition signed by more than 7,000 voters of the Fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania in support of the President's Supreme Court plan. [Applause.]

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 68]

Arnold	Crowe	Fulmer	Harrington
Buckley, N. Y.	Culkin	Gambrill	Hunter
Cannon, Wis.	Delaney	Gifford	Johnson, Minn.
Celler	Dempsey	Gilchrist	Keller
Clark, Idaho	Ditter	Goodwin	Kelly, N. Y.
Cluett	Duncan	Griffith	Kniffin
Creal	Fernandez	Halleck	Kvale
Lemke	Miller	Poage	Smith, W. Va.
Lesinski	Mouton	Randolph	Sumners, Tex.
Long	Pearson	Reece, Tenn.	Taylor, Colo.
Lord	Peterson, Ga.	Rutherford	Treadway
McGranery	Pettingill	Sadowski	Wolcott
Maas	Peyser	Schuetz	Wood
Mason	Pierce	Sheppard
Millard	Plumley	Smith, Maine

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and seventy-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. WOODRUM, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] under a previous special order was allowed 10 minutes to address the House, but the House adjourned rather abruptly. I ask unanimous consent that the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] may have permission to address the House on Thursday next following the consideration of the relief bill or the "hot oil" bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Michigan that there is already a special order for that day.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I modify the request and make it next Wednesday instead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection, if the request is modified to address the House after the business on Calendar Wednesday has been disposed of.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special order for next Tuesday I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOLVERTON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation at this time.

The bill has been read through the first section. All the committee amendments to the first section have been adopted. The first section is now open to amendment. The Chair will try to accommodate as far as possible all Members offering amendments. The Chair feels obliged, however, to give preference in recognition to members of the Committee on Appropriations in offering amendments.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], who offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACON: Strike out all of section 1 and insert the following:

"That to provide relief and work relief and to increase employment, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,500,000,000, which shall be available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938.

"SEC. 2. (a) Not more than $1,400,000,000 of the sum appropriated by section 1 shall be available for grants-in-aid to States to assist them in financing and administering such forms of relief and work relief and methods of increasing employment as may be determined upon and undertaken by them. Such amount shall be allocated by the Federal Relief Board (hereinafter established), with the approval of the President, among the several States upon the basis of the Board's findings and conclusions with respect to the facts concerning and weight to be given to unemployment and living costs in, and population and financial resources of, the several States. Not more than 15 percent of such amount shall be paid to any State.

"(b) The sum allotted to a State under subsection (a) shall be paid quarterly by order of the Federal Relief Board to the State if—

"(1) The Governor (or in the case of the District of Columbia, the District Commissioners) has certified to the Federal Relief Board that there has been established a board of relief trustees in such State, the membership of which is not composed solely of individuals who are members of the same political party, and that such board has the power and duty of receiving and disbursing sums which may be granted such State under this section;

"(2) The State board has certified to the Federal Relief Board that the State, or its subdivisions, or both, have provided or are prepared to provide an amount equal to not less than 33⅓ percent of the amount allocated to it under this section, for relief, work relief, or methods of increasing employment; and

"(3) The State board has agreed to furnish to the Federal Relief Board such reports (respecting the administration of the relief, work relief, or methods of increasing employment with respect to which funds allocated to the State under this section are used) in such form and containing such information as the Federal Relief Board may from time to time require, and to comply with such provisions as the Federal Relief Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

"(c) If the Federal Relief Board finds that any part of an amount granted to a State under this section has been diverted to a purpose not reasonably within the purpose of furnishing relief, work relief, or increasing employment, or that more than 75 percent of the amount devoted to such purposes has been expended out of grants under this section, the amount of future grants to be made to the State shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount the Board determines has been diverted or the amount the Board determines to be such excess.

"(d) The Federal Relief Board shall allocate, out of the sum specified in subsection (a), such sums as it deems necessary on the basis of the needs of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone for relief, work relief, and increasing employment. Such sums shall be expended as the Board prescribes as necessary for such purposes and subject to such requirement, if any, as the Board may prescribe for contribution by the possessions to such purposes.

"SEC. 3. Not more than $100,000,000 of the sum appropriated by section 1 shall be available to enable the Federal Relief Board, with the approval of the President, in its discretion and on its order, to make such grants or loans to States as it deems necessary in order to meet extraordinary and unforeseen emergencies, and such grants or loans shall be made without regard to the provisions of section 2. The sum specified in this section shall also be available for all administrative expenses of the United States in carrying out the provisions of section 2 and this section.

"SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established the Federal Relief Board, which shall be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two of the members of the Board shall be members of the same political party and the President shall designate one of the members as chairman. Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

"(b) The Board shall have the power and duty of carrying out sections 2 and 3 of this act, and such powers and duties shall be exercised under the direction and subject to the approval of the President.

"(c) The Board is authorized to make such expenditures, and, subject to the civil-service laws and rules and regulations made thereunder and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, as may be necessary to carry out its powers and duties.

"SEC. 5. Any person who knowingly makes any false statement in connection with securing a grant or loan or making any report or furnishing any information under section 2 or 3, or who solicits or receives political contributions from any person who directly or indirectly receives any part of a grant or loan made under section 2 or 3, or any person who, in administering any such grant or loan, discriminates against any person on account of race, religion, or political affiliation shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both. For the purposes of this section, each payment made by a State to which a grant or loan has been made under section 2 or 3 for relief, work relief, or increasing employment shall be considered to consist one-fourth of funds of the State and three-fourths of funds of the United States.

"SEC. 6. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000,000, which shall be available for carrying out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the provisions of written contracts made prior to the date of the enactment of this act under authority of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936. Except the sums appropriated under this section, no part of the sums appropriated under this act shall be available for carrying out such acts. No contract shall be entered into under such act of 1935 or 1936 after the date of the enactment of this act.

"SEC. 7. As used in this act, the term 'State' means the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 8. This act may be cited as the Relief Appropriation Act of 1937."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, this is a substitute proposal, which is offered in good faith and without any sort of partisanship at all.

For the purposes of this discussion, this proposal accepts the amount of $1,500,000,000, the amount guessed at by the President and accepted by the committee on last Friday. I do not want any discussion of the amount to take place, because this has already been discussed. I want to direct attention to the new approach to the relief problem which is offered by this substitute proposal. It attempts to eliminate Federal bureaucratic control of relief, and looks to the eventual complete absorption by the States of the relief machinery.

The proposal returns the administration of relief to the control of the States, aided by Federal contribution. It attempts to wipe out the present duplication of effort, waste, extravagance, exploitation, and politics that have grown up in our relief administration in the past few years. The proposal returns the administrative control of relief to the several States and leaves to each State the decision as to what type of relief shall be provided. It restores the only effective restraint of which I can think by which we can ever hope to police a system of this kind, namely, the power of home responsibility and neighborhood opinion. I think it is recognized that the longer the Federal bureaucratic administration of relief persists, the harder it will be to eventually get rid of it.

This plan starts right now to return the administration of relief to the several States. The plan accepts Federal responsibility by providing a financial backlog for relief. It is analogous to Federal aid to States in carrying out the good-roads program.

The proposal would set up a bipartisan national relief authority to aid the President in allocating the relief contributions of the Federal Government to the States, based upon relative size, relative unemployment, resources, and needs.

The plan requires that each State shall put up at least 25 cents for every 75 cents put up by the Federal Government, and provides that administration in the States shall be under bipartisan State boards. It thus establishes, I think, a clean-cut definition of State responsibility, althought still providing liberal Federal assistance.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, I have accepted the figure of $1,500,000,000 adopted by the Committee on last Friday, but my proposal would require the States to add to this amount on the basis of 75-25 an additional sum of $375,000,000, thus giving for relief the coming year a total of $1,875,000,000, or a greater amount for relief purposes, if the State contributions are included, than is provided for in the bill of the committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. It is believed that by the elimination of the present Federal costly overhead, the proposal will offer the best assurance that the largest possible proportion of every relief dollar shall go to those on relief who will need it.

When this proposal was introduced in the form of a bill as a substitute for the pending bill, the Democratic New York Times commented on it favorably in a leading editorial. The Times states:

Doubtless the bill that Senator VANDENBERG and Representative BACON have introduced to revise the Federal relief system has no bright prospect of immediate passage. Its sponsorship is Republican, and if there is going to be any credit for forming relief the Democratic majority in Congress will want that credit itself. Yet the Vandenberg-Bacon proposal must not be dismissed as a mere partisan gesture. It is carefully considered, and any sound reform of relief must adopt its leading principles.

Those principles are local administrative responsibility and nonpolitical control. To be eligible for Federal relief funds each State must agree to disburse those funds through a bipartisan board. Penalties are provided for false statements, political contributions, or discrimination against any relief applicant on account of race, religion, or political affiliation. Provisions of this type would obviously reduce the possibilities of using relief as a political weapon.

The foregoing is from an editorial in the New York Times of May 12, I think.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming a State would not make application for relief, would the money which would be allotted to that State be distributed among the other States or go back into the general fund?

Mr. BACON. That would be entirely in the hands of the Federal Relief Board. I do not limit their authority.

This proposal has met with considerable favor in other quarters. Two distinguished Democratic Senators in another body have made speeches in favor of this principle. Only on yesterday a very distinguished Democratic Senator made a speech in another body in which he endorsed the principle of this proposal. I call attention to the very eloquent speech made by the Democratic whip of the United States Senate, who took as his text a quotation from the President's message of yesterday, in which the President stated—

No State is justified in sitting idly by and expecting the Federal Government to meet State responsibility.

With that as his text, in his speech the Senator from Illinois endorsed the principle of this proposal 100 percent. I merely cite this speech to show that this plan is not a partisan effort. This is offered in good faith as a new approach to this very serious problem. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. To save time, let the Chair state that all Members now have up to the close of 5 legislative days after the completion of the consideration of the bill in which to revise and extend their remarks.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], I may state that in an editorial of one of our leading newspapers of the State of New York I was attracted by a unique heading, "Wanted a New Party." It may be a little early to declare the Republican Party dead, but it can be assumed safely that it will never be the same. Any political party that claimed to be "the only party fit to govern" some years ago and meets with four consecutive crushing defeats in a row in the national elections in 1930, 1932, 1934, and 1936, and winds up with its standards barely visible in 2 States out of 48, indicates it has reached the vanishing point and "has signed off the air" in the political life of this great Nation.

Now, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] I will repeat the answer that I made last year to another gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who made the same claim with respect to the administration of relief in this country. He spoke about transferring the administration of relief to the States and municipalities, when, as a matter of fact, the public history of administration of relief in the city of New York is the result of legislation passed by a distinguished representative, a member of the gentleman's own party, a Mr. Wicks, of New York, and as a result of the administration of the provisions of the Wicks Act in New York some 3 years ago, when we conducted an investigation of the relief situation in that city, we found that over $3,000,000 per month was paid there for chiselers. Now, we find that the gentleman comes in here and is asking for the same sort of change in the administration of relief.

I find from practical and actual experience, as well as from the testimony brought out in the recent investigation of relief in the city of New York, that some 10 or 15 percent, and even up to as much as 20 percent, of those on relief, as testified to by a member of their own administration, a Mr. McNulty, as well as Hon. William Hodson, at that time commissioner of the emergency relief bureau, were chiselers on the relief list of the city of New York. So, judging from the experience we have had in that great city, we find that administration of relief in the city of New York has been far better under the Federal Government than it can be under the State or the city government. As a matter of public record in the investigation of relief in New York City, Commissioner Hodson, the chairman of the emergency relief bureau, in answer to the question by Counsel Lloyd Stryker:

So that by reason of improper investigation, or at least insufficient investigation, the taxpayers of the city of New York are losing approximately $24,000,000 a year through plain, ordinary grafting and chiseling on the part of people who are on these rolls; this is so, isn't it?

Replied:

I should say substantially so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment conclude in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly the principle set out in the Bacon amendment has much merit. Perhaps, sometime we will reach a situation in this relief business when we will have to get down to the proposition of devising some permanent method of meeting relief. At the present time, however, we have not reached that point.

I do not subscribe at the present moment to the statement of Mr. Hopkins that the Federal Government is now permanently in the relief business. [Applause.] I do not deny, however, present need of Federal assistance. I think there is a present need. There probably will be such need for several years, but I still cling to the hope, perhaps a little forlorn, but still I cling to it, that the time will come in our economic set-up when, as the President has said, the Federal Government can get out of the relief business and when States and localities and municipalities will be able to carry that part of the burden; at any rate, Mr. Chairman, certainly, the Federal Government should not step in permanently to the relief picture at a time when many States and many more localities are absolutely lying down on the job and not making any reasonable effort to carry the problem that is theirs under any form of democratic government. Undoubtedly, in my mind, the States and localities must be made relief conscious. We must impress upon them the fact that it is their primary duty. Then, if they need help and cannot carry the burden, of course, the Federal Government is going to help. Nobody wants to see honest, American citizens, who are able to toil and want to toil, go hungry or without clothes or without food, neither do we want to create a situation where American citizens will not feel impelled to get out and provide for themselves.

So, Mr. Chairman, the time has not yet come, in my judgment, for us to set up a permanent Federal relief agency, and until that time does come, I do not believe we can handle it in any better way than to provide funds which we think are adequate, and give the Chief Executive, whoever he may be, pretty wide discretion and authority in the handling and administering of such funds.

Of course, there is a difference of opinion about how much funds ought to be provided in this bill. The committee has passed upon that, and I may say, while I am on my feet, there is no difference in the Appropriations Committee on the question of earmarking these funds. We do not think it is possible to earmark funds in this bill for any purpose. If these are to be relief funds, then we must give the President the discretion and the authority which we have given him in the past to handle these funds.

I had hoped that enough money would be taken out of this relief so we could have a works program, a public-building program, so we could go on with the fine, splendid public improvements that are so much needed, but if this money is to be for relief, whether it is to be one billion or a billion and a quarter, which it will probably be ultimately, when it comes back from the Senate, then it should be for relief purposes and not be tied down. As much merit as there may be in these splendid suggestions which are going to presently come about highways, public buildings, roads, and so forth, the committee is going to be compelled to resist any effort to earmark these funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BACON) there were—ayes 70, noes 172.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STARNES: Page 2, line 18, after the sign and figures $630,000,000, insert the following: ", of which amount not less than $20,000,000 shall be available to augment funds otherwise provided to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 702–a), as amended by the Flood Control Act, approved June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1508), and not less than $25,000,000 shall be available to augment funds otherwise provided to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1570–1595), as amended: Provided, That these funds are expended under the provisions herein established for the use of relief labor: Provided further, That the requirements hereinafter established that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to duly authorized flood-control projects."

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to definitely earmark the sum of $45,000,000 for flood-control projects, projects which have been authorized by an overwhelming vote of Congress, projects which have been surveyed and approved by the Engineers of the War Department. You will recall that in the Seventy-fourth Congress, in the month of June 1936, the Congress passed and the President approved two flood-control acts, one known as the Overton Act, which provided for a flood-control program covering a period of 6 years and authorizing an expenditure of $272,000,000 for the lower Mississippi. The other was the so-called Copeland-Snyder Act, which authorized the expenditure of $300,000,000 over a period of 6 years for flood-control projects in other sections of the country. Today we are $70,000,000 behind the authorized program—the program which has the expressed approval of the Congress. The Budget recommendation for the next fiscal year, 1938, recommends only twenty-two and one-half million dollars for use under the Overton Act, and $30,000,000 under the Copeland-Snyder Act, although the testimony before the subcommittee handling the appropriation shows there are projects which will total $150,000,000 on which the engineers of the War Department are ready to begin immediate construction.

I call attention to the fact that this amendment will do three things. First, it will make available $20,000,000 to augment funds to be provided through the regular budgetary appropriations for the lower Mississippi Valley under the authority of the Overton Act, and $25,000,000 to augment funds otherwise provided to carry out provisions of the Copeland-Snyder Act. Second, the amendment expressly provides that in the expenditure of these funds relief labor shall be used.

Therefore it does not interfere with the program of Mr. Hopkins to spend a billion and a half, a billion and a quarter, or a billion, whatever amount the Congress may ultimately approve, on relief labor alone. Third, it carries a provision that requirements established by this bill, that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion, shall not apply to duly authorized flood-control projects. This will permit the initiation of a larger number of flood control projects than we would otherwise be permitted to do. It is estimated by reliable authority, the Chief of Engineers of the Army Engineers, that in the Ohio Valley alone this year the property loss suffered amounted to more than $400,000,000, and during the years 1936 and 1937 this Nation suffered from floods a property loss of more than $1,000,000,000. This loss was suffered by every section of the country, including the Connecticut Valley, New England, New York State, Pennsylvania, the Ohio Valley, the Mississippi and its various tributaries.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. Briefly, for a question.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the gentleman's amendment it merely tells the Works Progress Administration the things upon which the money shall be expended, and provides it shall be expended on people who are on relief?

Mr. STARNES. Absolutely, and on projects already authorized by Congress.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I did not understand whether the gentleman's amendment covers all authorized flood projects or only those in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys.

Mr. STARNES. It covers every section of the country where the States concerned have met the provisions of the acts of Congress and especially the Overton Act and the Copeland-Snyder Act.

Mr. PARSONS. And if the Congress should not ultimately before adjournment pass a new authorization bill for flood control, then the funds provided in this bill could be used in these authorizations.

Mr. STARNES. Absolutely.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit me, the Flood Control Act of 1936 carries projects in 39 different States.

Mr. STARNES. I thank the gentleman for that observation and information.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does the gentleman feel that there is enough relief help available in the areas where flood-control projects are necessary—that is, enough relief workers to carry on such work?

Mr. STARNES. Yes. The greatest number of people on relief rolls in the country are in New England, New York State, Pennsylvania, and States adjacent to the Ohio Valley. That is where the relief burden lies heaviest today.

Mr. LANZETTA. But does not the gentleman feel that in these parts of the country where flood conditions exist there might not be available enough needy persons to carry on such work, and that the pay for W. P. A. workers is not sufficiently compensatory to bring in relief workers from other areas so as to benefit other needy persons who are not within the immediate vicinity where such projects may be necessary?

Mr. STARNES. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further. I only have a very short time in which to finish my statement.

I think the time has come when the Congress of the United States should keep its fingers upon the purse strings of this Nation. [Applause.] I think it is high time that we should fully assume our duties and our responsibilities to the people of this country as their legistators in every respect. I think it is the duty of this Congress, if I may be so bold as to say it, to say where these huge sums of money are going. [Applause.] If we are to vote to tax the taxpayers of America to provide these huge funds for relief, we owe them an obligation, and it is our duty to give definite directions as to the expenditure of those funds.

The question of flood control is a national problem in every sense of the word. As these turbulent, turgid tides sweep on to the ocean, laden with the finest soil of America, sweeping everything in their path, destroying towns and cities, laying waste and devastating the countryside, they take their toll of life and add to misery and want throughout our fair land. This huge annual loss of soil, property, and life impress upon flood-control projects the character of paramount importance. This amendment will provide protection as well as relief.

When we speak of relief, I say to you that the people living in the Ohio Valley, the Susquehanna, the Connecticut, and the lower Mississippi, and throughout the country, are entitled to relief from floods. There is a well-developed program in this country for the control of floods. Instead of permitting a useless waste and loss of life and property year after year, we owe it to ourselves and we owe it to this Nation to carry out the express will of the Congress and definitely earmark money under this relief program in a manner which will give permanent relief to the people of the Nation from the floods from which they have suffered in the past years. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES to the Starnes amendment: Strike out the figures "$45,000,000" and insert the figures "$55,000,000"; strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and at the end of the Starnes amendment add the following: "and not less than $10,000,000 shall be available for the construction of ponds and small lakes and for water conservation in the Great Plains area."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an extremely important amendment. If we are not to have any earmarking at all, that is one thing, but if we are to have earmarking, and in that connection have earmarking for flood relief, I think the work should be started at the right place, and that is at the source. [Applause.]

We started a long time ago treating water as a curse instead of as a blessing. We started channeling up levees along the mouths of the rivers, and by plowing up the hillsides and chopping down the trees and digging up the rocks we permitted the soil to wash away with the water and to build up the mouth of the rivers above the surrounding territory. The place to start is at the source, where the water first falls to the ground; where it first becomes a problem. This will accomplish a double purpose. Water is a different problem up there. It is a question of conserving the water. By conserving water on the prairies and at the heads of the draws and small streams we also help the flood situation. I have seen the hot winds come and sweep with blistering trail across the Great Plains area, a great productive area in this country, the heavens become brass and the earth iron, and the water rush off into draws and streams and on to the sea. By building small ponds and small lakes and damming up draws and building small reservoirs, which can be done at very small cost, a great deal of the water can be kept from going into the complicating areas near the mouths of the streams.

You men who live on the great rivers and want the problem solved, I think should help on this amendment. If you are going to have your amendment, certainly this one should be adopted also.

I read a story one time about a fellow who was dipping up muddy water in a stream and trying to throw the water out on the land.

They asked him what he was doing. He said: "I am trying to dip the muddy water out of the stream."

Somebody told him: "Go up yonder to the source of the stream, scare the old sow out of the spring, and it will clear up itself." [Laughter.]

If we start at the source of the rivers, make ponds, and dam up the draws it will help the flood-control problem. It will really solve the problem and it will be solved in no other way. We will be attacking this problem at the proper place. Then follow it on down to the mouth of the stream and we will have attacked the thing logically.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MICHENER. I am very much interested in what the gentleman has just said, but if the gentleman's amendment carries, is it contemplated that there will be authorized the beginning of the construction of a series of ponds that will not be completed within the appropriation here provided but will require future appropriations?

Mr. JONES. It will require no more future appropriations than the annual rainfall will require. We have always had this problem and we shall have it so long as we have rivers and streams, and water is something we have in the plains area as well as in other areas. You are not, of course, going to solve this whole problem this year; you are not going to solve the river problem this year. I am not attempting to argue that.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JONES. I am sorry, but I must yield now to somebody else.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman's amendment works right into and improves the Starnes amendment, and fits into the soil-erosion program of the Department of Agriculture with its plans to grow cover crops to hold the rainfall back.

Mr. JONES. Certainly, it dovetails into the whole picture and fits in with the Great Plains Committee's report. The gentleman will remember that the President appointed a Great Plains Committee. This covers one phase of that committee's report, and it gears into the whole program.

I do not know whether it is wise to begin earmarking this fund, but certainly if any earmarking is to be done funds should be earmarked for this purpose. It really ought to be adopted in order that we may attack the problem all along the line.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. I think the proviso on page 3 beginning in line 8 answers the question of the gentleman from Michigan. This proviso reads:

That no Federal construction project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until there shall have been allocated and irrevocably set aside Federal funds sufficient for its completion.

Mr. JONES. As a matter of fact, if that is what was worrying the gentleman from Michigan, building these small ponds and damming the draws are small earthen or concrete projects; they are not big undertakings like some of the river projects. Practically all of them will be completed during the year they are taken up. The individual cost will not usually be large. I am not trying to get the Congress committed to an undertaking that I think is vital and fundamental by getting a small appropriation to start a big project. The proposition in its general aspect is big, yes; and it is fundamental, but the nature of the individual pieces of work to be undertaken is such that the work on any one can be done in 1 year.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am very much concerned over the Dust Bowl area. I think it is becoming a constantly increasing menace to the entire West and perhaps eastward as far as the Mississippi Valley. Does the gentleman feel that he is earmarking enough money?

Mr. JONES. I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that I first drafted this amendment for $20,000,000, and then, after consulting with others who are interested, I thought we had better start modestly, at least insofar as this bill is concerned. So, to try it out, I am seeking to get $10,000,000 earmarked. Then, if the work justifies itself, we can proceed in future years with whatever is necessary.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am thoroughly satisfied that if we can carry out an intelligent, comprehensive plan of water conservation that the Dust Bowl problem will solve itself.

Mr. JONES. I am certain that it will. The district I have the honor to represent is in the heart of the so-called Dust Bowl. We have an average rainfall of about 20 inches. This is enough usually to make a productive area, but when the drought comes for a certain period the land becomes hard and the water rushes right off.

Mr. KNUTSON. The creation of a number of these ponds all over the West will make for greater condensation, which, in turn, will mean greater precipitation, and this will cure the evil.

Mr. JONES. I think that is correct.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. What contributions does the gentleman contemplate will be made by the States or local interests under this amendment?

Mr. JONES. Some of the States and local interests are doing work along this line. No contribution is required at all. That is a matter that is left to be determined by the administering authorities.

The Great Plains area is the productive heart of this country. A few millions spent in this way will accomplish more than anything else that might be done.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 2 minutes in order that he may answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not requested any further time. A great many amendments are pending. It would not be fair to other Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, may we have some understanding as to time? There are a great many amendments to be offered. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Starnes amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. There has already been 10 minutes' debate on the amendment. The Chair can divide the time any way it pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say that there have been four requests for time on this amendment. There are additional requests from the floor at the present time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, there are a great many amendments to be offered, and consideration of this bill has to be completed today. It seems to me that if these gentlemen will take 2 or 3 minutes apiece, that would be sufficient. There is nothing fundamentally involved in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is one of the most fundamental amendments that has been offered up to this time. It strikes at the very root of the question. It is constructive. It is not destructive.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, under those circumstances I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the Starnes amendment and the Jones amendment to the Starnes amendment close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Starnes amendment and the Jones amendment to the Starnes amendment close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the two pending amendments could be considered separately because the theory of the two amendments involves two separate propositions. The theory of the two amendments is different and for that reason, as I stated, I should like to have them considered separately. Personally I am in favor of the upstream control. I may say that the Congress of the United States has already appropriated, this session, in the regular fund approximately $25,000,000 for soil conservation that may be utilized for upstream control, and, in addition to that, the Congress of the United States will be called upon to appropriate for the next fiscal year $300,000,000 for C. C. C. camps. Their activities are largely utilized in upstream control. I am in sympathy with the program.

May I therefore emphasize if it be desired to earmark $10,000,000 additional for upstream control, it would be better to do it by a separate provision and separate amendment. I make that statement for the reason the Starnes amendment proceeds on the theory that the flood-control projects heretofore approved by Congress shall be constructed as provided by laws passed by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, in 1936 the Congress passed two flood-control acts, one the Overton or Mississippi Flood Control Act for the lower Mississippi River and certain tributaries. The Budget has recommended for that act twenty-two and one-half million dollars. We knew when the bill was passed that it provided for a 6-year program and it contemplated an annual expenditure or appropriation of approximately forty-two and one-half to forty-five million dollars.

The Starnes amendment, out of flood control relief funds, not diverting them for any other purpose, augments the Budget recommendation. The gentleman from Alabama is a member of the Subcomittee on Appropriations, having charge of flood-control appropriations. He proposes to supplement the Budget estimate from flood-control funds in the pending bill.

Mr. Chairman, in the omnibus Flood Control Act the Congress has adopted flood-control projects aggregating authorizations of $310,000,000 covering some 270 projects in more than 30 States of the Union. The Budget has recommended $30,000,000. The omnibus bill contemplates a 6-year program, an annual appropriation of $52,000,000.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, offering the amendment, now proposes to earmark from funds to be designated by this act for flood-control works an additional $25,000,000, so that the declared purpose and intent of the Congress of the United States shall be carried out. If the Starnes amendment is adopted, no more money will be appropriated this year than Congress twice declared last year by approving the authorization of those two flood-control acts should be appropriated.

In my judgment, inasmuch as all of those projects have been approved by the Congress, and inasmuch as thus far this session not a dollar has been appropriated for flood control, the Congress of the United States owes it to itself, at the very first opportunity, when we are appropriating money that may be used for flood control, to earmark the money at least for the projects that Congress itself has approved and for which authorizations have been made.

Mr. Chairman, I extend my remarks by saying it may be suggested, if not urged, that the Committee on Appropriations will increase the recommendations of the Director of the Budget from $30,000,000 to $55,000,000 as contemplated by the omnibus flood-control bill. It may also be urged that the Committee on Appropriations will increase the amount recommended by the Director of the Budget under the Overton or Mississippi Flood Control Act from $22,500,000 to $42,500,000, the amount contemplated by the bill.

Personally I have advocated such increases. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations should make the increases; moreover, I believe the Director of the Budget should increase his recommendations. I therefore did not offer the pending amendment. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, is in sympathy with plans to increase the amounts recommended by the Budget in both bills; so is the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]. Mr. STARNES felt that the committee might not override the Budget; he felt that the proper procedure would be to earmark $20,000,000 for the Mississippi River bill and $25,000,000 for the omnibus flood-control bill, as provided by his amendment to the pending bill.

The pending bill contemplates flood-control works in aid of relief. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama definitely earmarks $45,000,000 to augment the contemplated appropriations that will be reported by the Committee on Appropriations in accordance with the recommendtions of the Budget.

The gentleman from Alabama, the author of the amendment, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER], are cooperating to provide funds for the execution of the two flood-control acts adopted in 1936. They have indicated that the proper procedure is to adopt the pending amendment to augment and supplement the amounts that will be recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has repeatedly insisted that the Budget be followed. The subcommittee has been urged to follow the recommendations of the Budget, but Mr. STARNES, of the subcommittee, believes that the Budget recommendations should be augmented. I repeat to emphasize that I think the Committee on Appropriations should make the appropriations authorized by law. Personally I think that the Budget should recommend as authorized by law. Moreover I think the Committee on Appropriations should appropriate as provided by law. If there were any assurances that the Committee on Appropriations would increase the authorizations of the Budget to the amounts contemplated in the two flood-control acts for the projects authorized in them, there would be no occasion for the passage of the pending amendment. No such assurances have been given.

The advocates of the two measures have been given to understand by members of the subcommittee on appropriations that the only way to augment the recommendations of the Budget is to pass the pending amendment. This amendment provides for projects already authorized.

I believe that Congress, before it adjourns, should pass a flood-control bill for additional flood-control projects in the light of the great flood of 1937. Moreover, I believe that Congress should provide for the execution of the priority and emergency projects in the next fiscal year. The best way to promote additional flood-control legislation is to provide for the execution of works already authorized in legislation already passed by Congress.

The pending amendment has nothing to do with the flood-control act that should be passed by Congress. I repeat to emphasize that it deals only with projects that have heretofore been approved by Congress. I shall continue to urge the passage of adequate flood-control legislation before Congress adjourns to provide for the priority and emergency projects in the light of the 1937 flood in the lower Ohio Valley, and I shall continue to insist that adequate authorizations be made for such projects and that adequate funds be made available for their construction. Additional authorization for additional projects is necessary without regard to the pending amendment.

The relief bill contemplates flood-control works. The pending amendment definitely allocates, of the $630,000,000 mentioned for flood control and other works, $45,000,000 to the construction of the projects that Congress has approved.

Appropriations to build projects approved by Congress will best promote flood-control authorizations for projects not yet approved. I believe that flood-control projects should be approved by Congress and that regular appropriations should be made for their construction, as provided by the authorization, but in the absence of sufficient appropriations through the regular channels, allocations from relief appropriations intended for flood-control works are in order.

The earmarking of relief funds in the relief bill has limitations. In order to provide for the works adopted in the two flood-control acts of 1936, I trust these limitations will be removed in another body.

The friends of flood control in Congress are uneasy because the authorizations passed by Congress were practically cut in two by the Budget. Again, for the first time, two military bills are being reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Heretofore only one bill, which has combined military and nonmilitary activities, has been reported. The friends of flood control and rivers and harbors see no more reason for segregating into two bills the military appropriations than they see for two bills for the Interior Department, so that there might be a separate bill for reclamation. Moreover, there is just as good reason for two bills for the Department of Agriculture. The annual agricultural bill provides for highways. There is no more reason for putting flood control and river and harbor appropriations in a separate bill than there is for putting reclamation and highway appropriations in separate bills.

Mr. Chairman, for the reasons indicated and for other reasons, I favor the adoption of the Starnes amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota for the amendment offered by Mr. STARNES: Strike out the period at the end of the amendment, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "of which amount not less than $15,000,000 is to be expended for the construction of check dams, storage dams, and diversion dams in the Great Plains area for the purposes of providing livestock, water, and supplemental irrigation for lands already under cultivation; one-half of this $15,000,000 to be assigned to the Department of the Interior to be administered by the Bureau of Reclamation and one-half of this $15,000,000 to be assigned to the Department of Agriculture to be administered by the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering and the Resettlement Administration: Provided, That preference shall be given to projects where not less than 75 percent of the land to be watered is already under cultivation and that no more than $50,000 of the $15,000,000 shall be expended on any one project and no more than $1,500,000 in any one State."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation not provided by law, and, in addition to that, it provides for the construction of projects, no matter how meritorious they may be. The pending bill provides for work relief and allied objects. I make the point of order that the construction of projects by the Department of Agriculture or by the Department of the Interior is foreign to the purposes of this bill and, therefore, the amendment is not germane.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the point of order. This bill lodges a discretion as to the expenditure of this money. Where a discretion is lodged the Congress undoubtedly has a right to limit the discretion.

If the bill here gives the President or anyone else the right to spend the money appropriated, in his discretion, then there is not any question but that under the rules of the House it may limit and designate where the money is to be spent. No direction is given in the bill, but the Congress can exercise its discretion. It would be preposterous to say that the Congress can only appropriate money to the Executive or to any head of a department to do as that individual sees fit, without in any way limiting or qualifying or even suggesting where the money might be spent for relief purposes.

The Members of Congress possibly understand where the money could be spent in our respective districts to the most advantage for relief purposes. We control the purse strings, or at least we used to, and we should again assert ourselves. Here is the opportunity. It seems strange, indeed, the question should be raised that under the rules of the House we are limited in exercising that constitutional right and duty.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. As I understand it, this amendment against which a point of order has been raised undertakes to change the jurisdiction of construction of flood-control projects, to take it out of the hands of the Army engineers and put it into the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. May I ask the gentleman if it is permissible to do this sort of thing in an appropriation bill?

Mr. MICHENER. I might agree with the gentleman as to the merits. I believe in the Army engineers. However, under the rules of the House it seems to me that where we are appropriating $1,500,000,000 for relief purposes, to be spent by the Executive as he sees fit for relief purposes, we may add limitations and specify the agency which is to spend the money. This is not an appropriation bill. It is a legislative bill, and the rules preventing legislation on an appropriation bill do not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No, Mr. Chairman. I understood the Chair had already ruled in previous debate on this bill that this is a legislative bill as well as an appropriation bill. I may point out that this bill does not seek to provide for anything except work relief. It still would be work relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

In view of the ruling of the Chair just referred to by the gentleman from South Dakota, the gentleman's amendment, if offered to the bill, might be in order. The Chair does not rule on that question at this time. However, the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Dakota is to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES]. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama pertains to flood control. The substitute of the gentleman from South Dakota pertains to irrigation and places it under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation.

Therefore, the gentleman's substitute is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the Chair feel the control of water where it falls is not flood control?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has before it only the language of the amendment and cannot go outside of the written amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand it, then, the ruling of the Chair is that the amendment might be in order to some other part of the bill, and the Chair does not sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order only insofar as the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota is not germane as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] for 2 minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall use my time to speak on behalf of the flood-control amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

The question the Committee will decide is whether the Members want these relief funds which are already earmarked in this bill for flood control to be spent on projects authorized by Congress and investigated by the Army engineers, or whether the Members want flood-control projects to be determined by some other agency than Congress and the Army engineers.

In defense of this amendment to the relief bill, the appropriations of which should be primarily for providing work, I have here a detailed report on the whole Muskingum Valley project, which includes the construction of 13 dams, that absolutely control the floods in this whole valley. Fifty-eight percent of the money spent to complete structures went for labor. When I say "labor" I mean labor taken from the relief rolls to work on these projects.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It strikes me the Starnes amendment does not apply to any proposed improvements except those included in the Overton Act. Am I correct in this?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; the gentleman is incorrect. Twenty-five million dollars is for the omnibus bill and $20,000,000 for the Overton bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FERGUSON. This includes all projects which were authorized in the omnibus bill, H. R. 8455, passed by the last Congress.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is the Copeland bill?

Mr. FERGUSON. The gentleman is correct.

I also at this time wish to support the Jones amendment to the Starnes amendment, which, in addition to providing $45,000,000 for carrying out the flood-control projects authorized by Congress, makes $10,000,000 available for the construction of ponds and lakes in the Great Plains area.

Only a man who has seen the devastation caused by years of drought in the western part of Oklahoma and the surrounding States can realize the need for water conservation in this area. It has now reached the place where the conservation of water actually means life to the people in this area. They are destitute today; they prefer to work for what the Government gives them. This $10,000,000 makes it possible for the people in this area to work, and at the same time it helps us solve the problem of saving this area.

Gentlemen, let me say in conclusion that if the House adopts these amendments I have advocated, and also adopts the Public Works Administration amendment, the roads amendment that my colleague from Oklahoma will offer, we will have earmarked $500,000,000 for worth-while projects that will add to the wealth of the Nation. At the same time, there will remain available $1,000,000,000 for relief, the exact sum the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and his subcommittee recommended necessary for relief purposes.

I repeat what I said in my previous remarks on this bill, that with one-half billion earmarked for public-works projects, as directed by this Congress, and one billion for relief purposes, I am well satisfied with this measure. But if this House fails to earmark this money for flood control, roads, and public-works projects, I for one consider a billion and one-half excessive for relief, and will be constrained to vote against the whole bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the committee I am opposed to the Starnes amendment and to all amendments to the amendment, for this reason: While I am in full sympathy with flood control, I can think of no enterprise in which the investment is so great and the return to labor so small as flood-control projects. I think of this bill as a relief bill in the hope this money may be diffused to cover the largest number of people and flood control makes a very poor relief investment.

I used to be a drainage contractor, if you will pardon a personal allusion, operating a dirt-moving machine which originally cost $100,000. When you talk about flood control, you are speaking first of all of the condition which is caused by melted snow and heavy precipitation, where streams, rivers, and creeks overflow their banks and resultant damage to riparian property.

Now come those who want flood control. What kind of control? There are basically only two kinds. One is to build reservoirs, which you cannot do out of these funds, and the other is to build huge earthen levees and dams for the purpose of impounding the water or confining the water in the stream courses. How are you going to build these dams and levees? By teams? By hand work? Certainly not; it would cost you $1 a cubic yard or more to move the dirt.

You can move it for 8 or 10 cents a cubic yard with machinery, with dredges and draglines bearing 100-foot booms. They represent a tremendous investment and the cost of oil, food, heavy repairs, and all the rest of the things that are necessary will require practically all the funds made available, and the residue for labor will be very small. It is the poorest kind of investment and the poorest kind of an amendment to a relief bill, and I hope the amendment is voted down. [Applause.]

I reaffirm that I am in full sympathy with flood control, but I am not unmindful that we are today dealing with a relief bill under which we hope to extend the benefits of this appropriation to the maximum number of people and accomplish the greatest amount of good. How the authors of these amendments hope to accomplish that objective is certainly not apparent.

If you undertake to build flood-control levees or conservancy districts by hand labor or with teams and scrapers, there is not enough money in the Federal Treasury to accomplish the job. If you expect these funds to be used for engaging heavy-duty machinery with which to move earth for levee building and earth-construction works, you fly in the very face of the basic purpose of this bill, because such heavy-duty machinery with dippers ranging in capacity from 3 to 20 cubic yards is today being operated with a complement of men that ranges from 2 to 8 or 10. For every dollar of a project that goes for labor there will be many, many dollars to go to fuel, repairs, capital investment, and other items, and you defeat the purpose of the bill.

I know there are many in this House to whom this amendment will have strong appeal, especially those who come from flood-stricken areas. I submit that common sense should dictate, that this amendment, bearing the provision that relief labor shall be used in the construction of these flood-control projects means that no flood control will be accomplished and relief labor will get no benefit. It will be a futile gesture and nothing more.

There are many other classes of useful projects where the labor item bulks large in the cost, and such classifications might readily be incorporated in the bill, but building levees and dams, all of which, if to be done efficiently, must be done with costly heavy-duty machinery, is not one of them, and I trust that in the interest of needy people and in the interest of diffusing these funds to achieve the greatest amount of good, this amendment will be rejected.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in behalf of the Jones amendment.

This amendment provides for constructive relief. It provides for the rehabilitation of the soil and of men. I would rather vote $5,000,000,000 for constructive relief than to vote for $1,500,000,000 to be passed out as a dole and obtain no results. The great problem in this country is to find permanent employment for the great army of unemployed, and these homeopathic doses we are passing out are not reaching the real roots of our trouble. I am for the Jones amendment because it does set up a program of constructive relief that will return dividends to future generations. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLDEN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not also true that the Jones amendment will provide for the impounding of water in small communities where most of the work will be done by teams and scrapers and by men handling such machinery?

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman from Michigan is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly; and anyone who knows the territory knows that is true.

Mr. COLDEN. And it will make a permanent contribution to that entire country.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. Is it not equally true that under the Jones amendment the impounding of these waters would largely tend to restore the lost subterranean water level, the loss of which is the cause of dust storms and all that sort of thing?

Mr. COLDEN. I agree with the gentleman from Texas.

Thousands of refugees are pouring into California from the Dust Bowl. A recent check disclosed that of the thousands crossing the California border, the largest number were coming from the drought-stricken Great Plains. These people arrive hungry, poorly clad, and unhoused. They are desperate for employment. Frequently they displace local labor, reducing wages and increasing hours. The result is heavier burdens on relief and increased relief rolls. It has placed a vexatious, added burden on the backs of the California taxpayer and disastrous competition to the workers seeking jobs.

I am opposed to that brand of economy that would save Government money by taking it out of the half-fed, half-clothed, and half-housed unemployed. It is a wise, humane, and patriotic investment to strike at the root of unemployment and rehabilitate men and women and relieve them of the humiliating necessity of the dole.

Mr. Chairman, some of my colleagues berate waste and extravagance. The greatest extravagance of a century was 10,000,000 unemployed. If these idle hands were employed at a reasonable wage of $5 per day it would add $50,000,000 daily to our national income; a 5-day week would add $250,000,000 weekly and $1,000,000,000 a month, and the stupendous amount of $12,000,000,000 annually. It would convert the hungry, the ill-clad, and ill-housed into happy and prosperous citizens and vastly increase the Nation's purchasing power. It would provide further employment in the factory and on the farm.

The Jones amendment would provide work in the Dust Bowl. By conserving the floodwaters and moisture of that great area, these refugees now fleeing to the westward would be kept at home reclaiming their own farms and homes. This amendment provides for constructive relief and an investment for the present and future generations of real Americans.

MORE SMALL DAMS AND PONDS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I speak in support of the Jones amendment. It accomplishes, I think, the same purpose as the amendment I planned to offer, but, perhaps, in not quite as much detail. I would like to have fifteen million for small dams but ten million will help. The aim is to provide work relief now and insurance against drought distress for all time to come.

We need to realize that a shortage of water in one area can be just as much a matter of national distress and national concern as too much water at some other point. A drought takes longer to kill a man than drowning. That is the only difference. And the gentleman from Texas knows that storage of rainfall in the headwaters not only means drought relief but also reduces flood problems downstream.

I have here a report on this year's rainfall in the Great Plains area. It shows that a drought again impends.

SHORTAGE OF RAINFALL THIS SPRING

Up to the 1st of May, in north-central Texas, the rainfall was 35 percent of normal, and up to the 21st of May only 22 percent.

In western Oklahoma, rainfall has been only 39 percent of normal.

In central Kansas the rainfall up to the 1st of May was 27 percent of normal and up to the 21st of May only 39 percent. In western Kansas, 20 percent of normal.

In South Dakota the rainfall in the eastern part of the State was normal up to the 1st of May but only 41 percent since then. Small grain is suffering. In the western half of the State rainfall has been only 42 percent of normal the entire year.

In North Dakota a similar situation obtains. Eastern Montana had only 5 percent of normal rainfall in the first 3 weeks of May. That means another drought and drought means distress.

This situation comes after a series of dry years. The Great Plains area has lost its subsoil waters and it is necessary to conserve the water that falls when it falls. These small ponds and dams will save the people in the Great Plains area.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. Is not this the most constructive form of relief we can have in the Great Plains area?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I agree with the gentleman. It means relief in the form of work relief now and it means putting these people in a position where they can take care of themselves in times of future distress.

Our people want to help themselves. The figures given in the hearings on this bill show, in spite of any opinion to the contrary, that a large part of relief costs are provided by the local communities. Every W. P. A. project has to have a sponsor. The tables in the hearings show that the average contribution of the sponsor for the whole country is about 13 percent. In my State of South Dakota it averages 15 percent—14.9. You add to that the larger percent provided locally on P. W. A. projects—those on the 45-55 basis—and you have a percentage of local contribution not far from the 25 percent proposed in the Bacon amendment.

I cite these figures here merely to show that people do want to help themselves. And if we could earmark these relief funds for work of the dam-building type, projects that increase the ability of people to provide for themselves and to meet adversity, we would not only provide the emergency relief they need today but equip them to meet future drought so they could go off relief.

RELIEF FOR TODAY AND PROTECTION FOR TOMORROW

This type of water conservation, flood control, or whatever you want to call it, is sound. It does not mean bringing new acres into cultivation. It means guaranteeing water for livestock on the ranges. It means supplemental water for subsistence gardens rather than for commercial irrigation. If our western ranchers can always be sure of a good garden and alfalfa for the milk cows, they will not go on relief.

The Indian Irrigation Service has demonstrated what can be done. Last year it used $24,938 and provided water storage for 46 garden plots totaling 490.7 acres on 9 different reservations. That was only 10 acres to the average plot. They kept track of the expenses of watering those gardens. They charged up 20 percent of the initial cost to the year's operation—that is, figuring the dams to pay out in 5 years. The returns showed an average yield of $35.71 per acre against a cost of $23.20 per acre, a net return of $12.84 per acre.

When every ranch has permanent stock water and a watered garden, our folks will get by these dry years. We are adjusting the size of our herds to the amount of summer range and winter feed. We are building up 2 and 3 years of winter feed. Let us store our run-off waters and we will be willing to take our chances on the years as they come.

I earnestly urge that you vote for this Jones amendment to earmark not less than $10,000,000 for small dams and ponds in the Great Plains area. It is relief for today and protection for tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a better friend of flood control in the country than I am, I do not think there is a better friend of conservation than I am, and I am utterly surprised at the able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], chairman of the great Committee on Flood Control, in supporting this amendment. The gentleman from Mississippi could have, and I hope does have, a well organized and a well formed flood-control policy. We have ceased to talk about relief here today and we have begun to talk about specific projects.

In my opinion a friend of flood control, a friend of the committee that the gentleman is chairman of, wanting to see flood control come along in an orderly way, with specific projects named, will realize that such action as is contemplated by the amendment offered here today will wreck instead of help a flood-control program, and let me say further that in the adoption of such an amendment earmarking this amount, we can readily see where we will get. My colleague, the gentleman from Texas, has an amendment, and if this amendment is to be adopted, then why not adopt the amendment of my colleague from Texas? If that amendment is to be adopted and the appropriation earmarked in that amount, who not consider the very necessary project and one that has great merit in it, mentioned by the gentleman from South Dakota?

I say to you that this is a relief bill, and when you earmark these amounts and divert them in ways such as the one mentioned in the amendment now pending, in my opinion you do great harm and destroy some of the great programs we are trying to inaugurate. [Applause.]

And what I say about the pending amendment goes for the amendment earmarking $150,000,000 for roads and also the Beiter amendment. This is a bill for relief, not a specific-projects bill. Do you know that with the amount provided in this bill with other appropriations authorized, more than $500,000,000 will be available for the coming year for roads, with a small amount of this sum for streets and small projects. I caution you to go slow in these matters. I do trust caution be exercised, and a well-ordered program be enacted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in drafting my amendment to the Starnes amendment I made an error, because the Starnes amendment had been changed. I ask unanimous consent to correct the amendment to make it conform to the Starnes amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified Jones amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: At the end of the Starnes amendment strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "and not less than $10,000,000 shall be available for the construction of ponds, small lakes, and for water conservation in the Great Plains area."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the proposition presented in these amendments is one of great merit, and has been ably presented, but as our distinguished leader has indicated, is leading us afield, and getting us away from the fundamental proposition before us.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I regret I cannot do so; I am very sorry, but I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the question before us is not the question of flood control. That is provided for in another bill. The question here presented is whether we shall make this a project bill or a relief bill; whether we shall provide "pork" for ourselves and our districts or whether we shall feed the destitute, care for the halt and the blind, and find work for the unemployed. That is the real question we decide when we vote on this amendment. We are at the turning point in this bill. If you admit this amendment to earmark funds, you will have to agree to the numerous other amendments which will follow it to earmark funds for other purposes. Mr. Chairman, there is on the Clerk's desk now a pile of amendments earmarking funds in this bill for every conceivable purpose. You must adopt all or none. If you admit this amendment, you must admit all the rest. If you earmark this bill now, we have to let every other man in with his earmarking proposition, and so you are going to decide now as to whether you are going to earmark everything in the bill and take away from it the purpose for which it is created, or are going to pass a relief bill, which is the proposition before us.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am sorry I cannot yield at this point.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am sorry I have not the time. Only a minute or two remains.

We cannot put this in a strait jacket. Latitude must be allowed in its administration to permit allocation of relief where it is most needed. The relief load varies from time to time and from city to city. In some the relief situation is acute and in others comparatively light.

Unforeseen emergencies are constantly arising. In the past year we have had to deal with fire, flood, and famine, with drought, pests, and catastrophes, and, according to the law of averages, will have to meet them again in the coming year. The administration must be free and unhampered in order to be in position to give prompt and adequate relief at any time and wherever required. To earmark the funds withdraws them from the common reservoir and renders them unavailable except for specified purposes and under limited circumstances.

In voting for these amendments you are to that extent voting against mobile relief and in some cases any relief at all.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I regret that I cannot yield. All debate closes in 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There is pending before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations at this time a bill in which ample provision will be made for flood control. The subcommittee on the War Department bill is now holding hearings on the nonmilitary section of the bill in which the annual appropriations are made for national flood control. The only question before the committee on that item is the amount of the appropriation. The danger is that in our overenthusiasm here this afternoon we will lose more for flood control than we will gain. If we earmark funds in this bill, then it can very well be said that provision has been made for flood control and a smaller sum can be written into the War Department bill. If we refuse to earmark money for flood control here, funds can still be allocated to flood control from this billion and a half dollars, but will not militate against an adequate appropriation in the War Department bill. Let us not chase a dime of relief money in this bill against a dollar of flood-control money in that bill.

Mr. Chairman, let us render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; let us provide for relief the money that should be provided for relief in this bill; and for flood control an adequate appropriation for flood control in the regular annual supply bill where it properly belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 132, noes 84.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 142, noes 90.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. STARNES and Mr. WOODRUM to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 156 and noes 89.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Page 3, line 18, after the words "may determine", strike out the period, insert a colon and the words: "Provided further, That the amounts expended, if any, during the first 6 months of the fiscal year 1938 for salaries, printing and binding, and other obligations incident to information service or publicity shall be reported to Congress in January of 1938 for each agency of the Federal Government receiving any

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this is not an earmarking amendment. This amendment is designed to give Congress proper control over expenditure out of relief funds carried in this bill for the purpose of informational service or publicity. I think the amendment is almost self-explanatory.

I know there are many Members on both sides of the aisle who have become concerned by the amount that has been expended recently for the general purpose of publicity by various agencies of the Federal Government. The Members will recall that when the independent offices appropriation bill was under consideration I pointed out that three of the agencies alone provided for in that bill were asking for upward of $1,000,000 for the general purpose of information service or publicity. The Rural Electrification Administration, as the Members will recall, asked for about $163,000. The Social Security Board asked for about $233,000. The Federal Housing Administration, which at one time spent as much as a million and a quarter dollars in a single year for this purpose, asked for about $513,000. You will recall the large staffs maintained by these agencies and the amount of publicity work done by each of them.

I may say, incidentally, that when the bill went to the other body a material reduction was made in the sums asked for.

Today we are about to appropriate funds for relief purposes aggregating $1,500,000,000. Those funds will be expended by numerous agencies of this Government, if we can judge by past experience. No one knows exactly what agencies will expend the money. No one knows exactly how much any agency will be allocated out of the funds made available. The normal control over expenditure by the House Appropriations Committee is entirely lacking.

This much is clear, however, if I read the hearings correctly: In the present fiscal year the Resettlement Administration, for a staff of 33 persons, is expending about $75,000. The Works Progress Administration, for the same period, for a staff of 108 at home and in the field, is expending for salaries about $267,000, and for other obligations about $600,000. In other words, these two agencies are spending during the present fiscal year almost a million dollars for publicity purposes. I may add that this amount is in addition to printing and binding items for the two agencies, amounting to $1,346,000, and in addition also to an item of $120,000 for the Works Progress Administration for a mimeographing section of 47 persons.

As I have said, no one here today knows exactly what agencies are to spend the money carried by this bill. I understand that a sincere effort is to be made to reduce the expenditure for publicity purposes. I sincerely hope that effort will succeed. But whether it succeeds or not, one thing is certain. Every dollar taken from the funds carried by this bill for the purpose of information service or publicity is a dollar which otherwise would be available for the relief of people in distress in these difficult times.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of my amendment is to serve notice to all Federal agencies concerned that we believe expenditure for publicity purposes should be reduced to a minimum. The effect of the amendment is to put the Congress in a position to control this expenditure intelligently in the light of definite information. It merely requires a report in detail of expenditure for publicity purposes during the first 6 months of the next fiscal year. The least we can do at this time is to make sure that the bill specifically calls for this information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I am in thorough accord with the objective of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH]. I suppose every subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has been concerned about the amount of money spent by some of the agencies for so-called informational service. It is true, however, that in the relief agency and in the Public Works Administration it has been necessary to be able to answer inquiries, to furnish certain printed information and reports. But the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not necessary to accomplish what he desires. Section 13, page 10, of the bill, requires a report of the operation of the appropriation, including a statement of the expenditures made and obligations incurred by classes and amounts, to be submitted to the President and to Congress before the 15th day of January. So we will have on the 15th day of January a comprehensive report of all of the operations under this expenditure. Just to make a special report on the question of informational service will simply mean to load up this item with an additional clerical force down there that is not necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH) there were ayes 44 and noes 182.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 3, after line 18, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Of the appropriation made herein, the sum of $50,000,000 shall be allocated for grants for the purpose of relieving suffering of persons and repairing damage to private property occasioned by the floods in the winter and spring of the year 1937; such grants shall be made for the respective States affected by such floods in the proportion that the number of persons affected by such floods in any such State bears to the total number of such persons in all of such States, and the amount so determined for grants within any such State shall be utilized for that purpose by such Federal agency as the President may designate for that purpose and under such rules and regulations with respect thereto as he may prescribe."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, this is not my amendment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] was obliged to return to Indiana to attend the dedication of a post office in Batesville, I think it is, Indiana. He requested me to offer this amendment on his behalf in order that it might come before the House. I told him very frankly that I was not in favor of allocating any of the funds in this bill in any way, that I felt that it should be passed as it came from the committee, but that in order for his amendment to get before the House properly I would take the floor and explain the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read so that the Members may know exactly what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that I have done my duty by my dear friend from Indiana [Mr. CROWE] and that the House knows exactly what is in this amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this being a bill for the relief of human beings an amendment is not in order which undertakes to make it possible for Congress to appropriate funds for the relief of property damage also.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is no different from any other limitation. This is a relief bill. The amendment provides for the allocation of certain funds to relieve flood sufferers. I think it is germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment pertains to relief and to work relief, subject matters carried in the pending bill. The Chair carefully examined the amendment when it was first presented to him several days ago. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is germane to the bill.

The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition against the amendment and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts for the gentleman from Indiana illustrates, of course, just how far we can go if we want to keep on adopting earmarking amendments to this bill: Here is a man who went through a flood, lost a team of oxen, a team of mules, or a barn, or a chicken coop, or a horse and buggy, or something else. This is a bill for the relief of human suffering, for the relief of the poor, distressed, starving human beings over whom we were weeping a few days ago, yet here we are in a perfect frenzy taking the dollars we voted to give them and allocating them to pet projects over the country. As I say, Mr. Chairman, it just demonstrates how far we can go with this earmarking business; and I want to say to my friends, to you who are really interested in relief, that a few amendments of this kind on this bill will absolutely destroy the relief program and will tie the hands of the President so that he cannot relieve human suffering and human misery.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: On page 2, line 20, after the semicolon, add: "Provided, That from the amount specified for the foregoing classes $300,000,000 shall be allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that it is not in order on this bill to, in effect, appropriate money to an agency that will be out of existence at the time the funds become available; and that is what this amendment does, because this Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works expires by operation of law on the 30th of June this year. This amendment, constituting as it does, an appropriation for an activity that is not authorized by law is not in order.

I make the further point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not germane to the subject matter of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

In this bill it is provided that the President may make allocations to certain agencies of the Government.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, which is in substance the same as the so-called Beiter amendment which the Chair has examined, provides that part of the appropriation in this bill shall be allocated to one of the agencies of government, the Federal Administration of Public Works.

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is germane to the bill, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the language of the amendment speaks for itself. It is identical with the Beiter amendment which the Chair has examined. It simply allocates for the Public Works Administration the sum of $300,000,000.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is identical with an amendment I proposed to offer at the proper time. However, the gentleman is a member of the Appropriations Committee and is entitled to recognition prior to another Member, according to my understanding. He offers my amendment at my suggestion and with my approval.

The amendment makes no change whatsoever in the class of work to be undertaken for which this relief appropriation is made. The purpose of the bill is to continue to provide relief and work relief on useful public projects throughout the United States. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is equipped to do just that.

The bill appropriates the sum of $1,500,000,000 to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President for specific classes of public projects, such as highways, roads, streets, public buildings, parks, sewer systems, and so forth. The amendment merely provides that out of the various sums proposed to be appropriated for these various classes of work projects $300,000,000 shall be set aside for the financing of projects of similar nature by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

It is my understanding that a subject presented in an amendment which is of the same nature as that incorporated in the bill to be amended is germane if the bill is not an individualistic one. My amendment sets aside a portion of the proposed appropriation for certain work-relief projects—the purpose for which the bill under consideration is drawn.

This appropriation bill is not individualistic—it appropriates a large sum of money to be used for general relief purposes and does not specifically state which agency or agencies will be utilized to administer the funds. It infers that relief agencies already in existence will be empowered to administer the funds.

It is implied throughout the bill that the Works Progress Administration, the National Youth Administration, and such other agencies within the Government concerned with the administration of relief and work-relief projects will receive allocations under the terms of this bill. My amendment covers the same subject as that contained in the bill. It is for the relief and work-relief of our destitute unemployed—and I might state here that in New York City alone there are 50,000 skilled building-trades workers out of employment that could benefit by my amendment. In fact, the building-trades workers all over the country would benefit and the fact that they are in need of this type of relief is proven by a report received from the American Federation of Labor that a conservative estimate places the unemployed in this one class alone at 40 percent and indicates that any statement to the effect that there is a shortage of skilled building-trades workers in this country is erroneous and without foundation.

This amendment, then, is designed to bring about just what the bill intends and merely cites that a certain sum be allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works—one of the agencies within the Federal Government alluded to in the bill.

Therefore, my amendment specifying that the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall receive a part of this money for public-works projects is in order and entirely in keeping with the inferences of the bill.

The amendment that has been offered takes care of all the projects that have been approved by the Examining Division of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works on the effective date of this act. It further takes care of all the projects where bond elections have been held by municipalities. I have not a project pending in my district, nor have I a project pending where a bond election has been held; however, I am deeply interested in seeing funds appropriated, set aside or earmarked for these projects that have been submitted in good faith by various municipalities with the understanding that funds would be forthcoming. Last year I offered a similar amendment and the House turned it down under a parliamentary procedure. Are we going to permit the Senate this year to earmark this same bill?

According to Saturday's newspapers word was passed around among administration leaders of the House that the President would not be averse to a cut in the work-relief bill.

This occurred after the House had voted down all amendments to reduce or increase the amount, having been led to believe by these same leaders that the fifteen-hundred-million fund was what the President wanted.

I submit that we do not any of us know what the President wants on this. He has not said definitely that he wants fifteen hundred million, three thousand million, or just one billion.

Also he has not said he will oppose earmarking a portion of it for P. W. A., as I propose.

The matter, gentlemen, is left up to you. From word I have received from Members of the upper Chamber I can safely predict that the Senate will earmark a portion for P. W. A. if we do not.

Last year the Senate took the matter in their own hands and added a provision to the work-relief bill for P. W. A. after the House was prevented from doing so by a parliamentary ruling.

We can, of course, continue meekly to accept all appropriation bills as presented, leaving it up to the Senate to make any changes the country demands. And if the country calls us rubber stamps with no backbone, then we deserve the title.

Mr. Chairman, I have letters here from Members of the Senate saying they are in sympathy with this movement. If you will permit me, I will read a letter from Senator MURRAY, in which he says——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, on its own responsibility, makes the point of order against the reading of a letter from a Member of another body.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I refer to a letter I received from one of the Members of the Senate in which it is stated that he approves my proposals with regard to the continuance of the P. W. A. program and earmarking a portion of the relief funds for this purpose. He further states that such a move would be in accord with the desires of his State.

This distinguished Member of the Upper House relates that there are a number of water projects in Montana which, if constructed, would be of great economic value to his people that are regenerative in character and would largely aid in the problem of relief. In other words, they would contribute to making certain sections of his State self-supporting and relieve the necessity of W. P. A. activities. He emphasizes that this is particularly true in the drought sections.

He approves my activities and assures me that when the matter comes to the Senate he will be in accord with my objectives.

Another distinguished Member of the Senate from the State of Wyoming writes me to the effect that he is, of course, in favor of the continuance of the P. W. A. program. Many others have also indicated to me by letter or telegram their desire to go along with my proposals.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not true that mayors and administrative officers all over the country are asking that some of these particular funds be earmarked for the P. W. A.? The mayors of Arizona cities have so requested.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think that is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not also true we are less likely to get an additional appropriation for P. W. A. than we are for flood control? A real flood-control bill may follow this bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think that is probably true.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That makes a difference in the case of earmarking these two. I favor earmarking for

P. W. A. now, for I fear we shall get nothing for that purpose later.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is aware of the fact that there are 501 schoolhouses in the United States that are now considered fire hazards. In addition to that, there are 437 of them that are health hazards, 50 that are safety hazards, and 33 that are so bad they have been condemned from the safety standpoint. The gentleman will recall the catastrophe that occurred in New London, Tex. Look at the picture! Here is a boy crushed in that tragedy. Stretcher after stretcher bearing torn and mangled children from the ruins. In the State of Texas alone there are 91 such schools that have been condemned. The other day the floor leader, one of our spokesmen, said he did not want his hands dipped in the blood of some of these men who are now unemployed. Do you want to dip your hands in the blood of these innocent children who are now compelled to attend schools that are considered fire hazards, or do you want to continue the public-works program so that every one of these projects can be completed?

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will assure labor the maximum benefit per dollar expended on public works. No one can deny the integrity or efficiency of P. W. A. I have continually cited statistics from the Department of Labor, P. W. A., and other agencies irrevocably proving those facts. I have only time for a brief plea.

Do you know that 47 States have P. W. A. school projects pending to replace hazardous school conditions? The P. W. A. has 1,178 school projects pending. All of them have been submitted to eliminate conditions hazardous to the lives of their children, many of them could not reconstruct the buildings without Government aid. Is this not a worthy relief program?

Observe the ramifications of this type of work relief. A group of buildings in Washington, D. C., cost $21,000,000. Three million dollars was actually spent here, the other $18,000,000 went to 28 different States and placed men to work in your districts. Indiana received $2,500,000; Michigan, $1,100,000; New York, $1,125,000; Virginia, $1,000,000; Pennsylvania, $2,500,000; and so it progresses on and on, taking in over half of the States of the Union. You cannot get around these facts. If you want to produce work for our unemployed, P. W. A. gives you the efficient opportunity.

Public-works projects have created more than 1,297,000,000 man-hours of direct labor at the site of the construction, and 2,204,000,000 man-hours of indirect labor. These are the unemployed put back to work in your districts and mine. They produced the materials, fabricated the products and transported them to the site of the work. These figures are not mine—they were determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. To these figures may be added the man-hours of employment directly affecting the consumer-goods industries. These three employment factors comprise a grand total of more than 7,000,000,000 man-hours of employment.

The Public Works Administration has demonstrated that economic recovery can be effected through careful expenditure of public funds for permanent public works. I urge that you adopt this amendment in behalf of the P. W. A. It will then be possible to complete the splendid program now at a peak.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL], and all amendments thereto, close in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have not had an opportunity to speak on this bill, but I desire to do so. I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure the distinguished gentleman who is now presiding will see that the gentleman gets 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to speak for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that 10 Members are standing who desire recognition on this amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is 4 minutes apiece.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I see no reason why 40 minutes should not be sufficient. There will be perfecting amendments offered later if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman's request include the pending amendment and all amendments thereto?

Mr. WOODRUM. Amendments to this particular amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Not the section?

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will a subsequent amendment proposing a different amount be considered an amendment to this amendment?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is not a relief bill, and we might just as well realize it right now as at some other time.

The amount of direct relief paid for by the Federal Government in the current fiscal year, according to the statements we have had from the Treasury and from witnesses before the committee, will be about $11,500,000 from the F. E. R. A., approximately $30,000,000 from the Resettlement Administration, and approximately $380,000,000 from the Social Security Board, or approximately $420,000,000 total expenditures out of an expenditure of $4,400,000,000 for what they set up in one way or another as recovery or relief. The rest of the money has been spent for the promotion of pet projects and rackets.

We might just as well look this situation in the face. The way this bill is set up, it provides for the continuation of this kind of operation. Under P. W. A., funds have been allotted for different things, for building such enterprises as that Jersey settlement, where, to build housing units for 206 families, $3,000,000 has been spent, or $15,000 per family. Over in Greenbelt they will spend $10,800,000 to provide for 1,000 families, or over $10,000 per family. In Green Hills, Ohio, they will spend practically a similar amount for the same kind of an operation. In New York City, for the Harlem flats which they have put up for colored tenants, they will spend $4,200,000, or $7,500 per family. In Williamsburgh, in New York City, they will spend over $12,000,000, or practically $9,500 per family. This is all spent so that certain groups may live in luxury at the expense of the taxpayer, which is not relief.

W. P. A. has spent over $1,000,000 getting up a Baedeker on Washington and other places, and these books have been distributed gratis to Members of Congress. The book is a large, well-bound volume 3 inches thick. This is the kind of activity this money can be used for if you vote for this amendment, and if you adopt the amendment the gentleman has offered. They can use the money for just the things of which I have told you, and they will so use it. [Applause.]

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the President of the United States sent us a message in which he stated:

> The overwhelming majority of our population earns its daily bread either in agriculture or in industry. One-third of our population, the overwhelming majority of which is in agriculture or industry, is ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed.

If this amendment is agreed to, a great many of the men who are now employed in the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works in the construction of municipal buildings, sewage plants, schoolhouses, and so forth, will be continued in their line of work.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. In the judgment of the gentleman, does not good faith require that preference in expenditures for these projects should be given to those projects for which local communities have voted bonds, and upon the terms under which the bonds were voted?

Mr. BEITER. Of course, there is a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government. I believe if these communities had the right to sue the Federal Government they would have a just claim, and that any jury which might sit in the case would award to the municipality the amount of money which would be involved.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. LAMBETH. The amendment of the gentleman refers only to non-Federal projects?

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Is it not a fact that the finest construction work done by the Government has been done by the P. W. A.? [Applause.]

Mr. BEITER. Most emphatically, yes. There has not been one iota of criticism of any project which has been constructed by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works thus far.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, there are several good reasons why this amendment should prevail. As has been stated here, in the case of many local subdivisions of Government, elections have been held and bonds have been voted to pay the local communities' part of the cost of the improvement. In many instances the funds are now in the treasuries of these various subdivisions. In addition to this, the improvements which are possible under P. W. A. are of a permanent nature, which add something to the wealth of the local community and will be usable for years. They are of a type of which we can all be proud, as having been built during this period when relief was so badly needed by so many people.

Moreover, these will be contract jobs and as a result there will be increased hiring of the unemployed in private industry—something for which we are all striving. Likewise, this building and construction program, if initiated, will result in further activity in the heavy industries giving the manufacturers of products usable in new construction an opportunity on their part to employ new labor. This will stimulate the building industry and will have a most wholesome influence upon it.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. Briefly.

Mr. GREEN. Does this amendment require the use of relief labor on these projects?

Mr. HARTER. It is my understanding it does. There will be a further amendment covering that phase of it.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I cannot yield at this time.

Our Public Works Administration program has been worth while. There are many communities which were unable to take advantage of the opportunity of receiving Federal aid because of the financial condition in which they were when Federal assistance was first offered, and this oftimes occurred in communities where the relief load proportionately was the greatest. This was true in my home city of Akron, Ohio. In the early days of this administration, under the original $3,300,000,000 appropriation, it was unable to get approval of its projects, for while they were satisfactory to the engineering and legal divisions of the Public Works Administration the financial section would not approve because Akron had to default upon its bonds. This situation has changed, the credit of the city having been reestablished, and it is now in position to carry its portion of the cost of much-needed improvements if it is given the grants on the basis of 45 percent for which application was made many months ago. This is not only true of Akron but of other cities and school districts in Ohio.

This amendment should be adopted. I extend my remarks by including two letters of officials of Akron which clearly state the city's position.

The letters are as follows:

CITY OF AKRON, OHIO,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE,
May 5, 1937.

Re: OH–1609, OH–1579, OH–1589, OH–1584, OH–1580, OH–1597, OH–1251, OH–1592, OH–1560, OH–1578, OH–1581, OH–1564, OH–1562, OH–1561, OH–1559, OH–1563, OH–1565, OH–1566.

Mr. L. A. BOULAY,
State Director, P. W. A., New Post Office Building, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of April 28, 1937, stating terms of a new policy relative to loans and grants, I beg to submit the following:

Akron, Ohio, as is well known, between the years 1910 and 1920, was the fastest growing city in the world. During that period of time extensions of sewers, water mains, street widening, and grade elimination became doubly necessary because of congestion and public need.

Any community having to make all of these improvements had to issue large amounts of bonds. Akron was one of the first cities in the country that had to default on payments on bonds. We were the first city in the United States, however, to establish a sound refunding program.

Akron immediately endeavored to cooperate with P. W. A. for the purpose of constructing the many worth-while public-works projects. Bond issues were passed by the electors in November 1933, covering projects under four headings: Sewers, grade crossings, street widenings, and repaving. All of the legislation and even the ballots on these bond issues provided that the bonds could only be issued in conjunction with Federal aid. The elector's approval was secured on the representation that the Federal Government would contribute a very substantial portion of the cost of these improvements.

After bonds were authorized, a citizens' group was formed to tell Akron's story to official Washington, and every public agency and organization was in wholehearted support of an expansive public-works program for Akron.

A hearing was had before the Board of Appeals of P. W. A. at Washington, and a whole day was set aside to hear Akron's cause.

At the conclusion of the hearing, Akron was informed that the engineering and legal divisions approved the projects, but that the financial division had denied Akron on the ground that the Public Works section of N. R. A. required a city to offer reasonable security, and that Akron was not offering reasonable security because it was in default on its bonded indebtedness.

As a result thereof, Akron, which was entitled to better than $7,000,000 of allotment under any method which was used by the Government to distribute the $3,300,000,000, got nothing.

As a result of these facts we think that a moral obligation has been created which the Federal Government should recognize and now make it possible for Akron to secure the approval of its projects on the basis of participation by the Federal Government on substantially the basis represented to the electorate in November 1933 and which projects, from the standpoint of public necessity, engineering, and legal detail, were approved by the Government immediately after the advent of P. W. A. in 1933.

The officials of the city of Akron desire to keep faith with their moral obligation to the people who voted this bond issue and therefore must decline your offer as being much less than the citizens of Akron have a right to expect, and it does not coincide with the information relative to grant basis at the time of vote on the bond issue.

Very truly yours,

W. F. PETERS,
Director of Public Service.

CITY OF AKRON, OHIO,
May 21, 1937.

Re P. W. A. program.

Hon. DOW HARTER,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You will, of course, recall the comprehensive public improvement plan devised by the service department in 1934 and 1935 during the administration of I. S. Myers, mayor.

A considerable portion of the Akron projects received Federal approval and 45 percent grants were made by P. W. A. and a substantial contribution by the Bureau of Public Roads for the grade-elimination project in south Akron.

All of the P. W. A. projects attained the construction stage after the new administration came into power, and they will all be completed in a month or two. The grade-elimination project has just been put under contract and will be completed in 1938. Not to exceed 50 relief workers can be employed in this at anytime, so that it will not be a great help in reducing unemployment.

The remainder of our 1935 program, which did not reach the approval stage in 1935, is now the largest part of the 1937 program which has been approved by the Columbus office and forwarded to Washington. These items are as follows, in the order of their importance, as it appeared to us at the time:

Docket no.	Description	Estimated total cost	Grant requested
OH 1565	South High St. extension from Steiner Ave. to South Main St.	$352,000	$61,000
OH-1251	Domestic water-impounding reservoir	460,000	193,500
OH-1579 OH-1589	Sanitary sewers	550,000	247,000
OH-1580 OH-1584 OH-1597 OH-1578	Storm sewers	516,700	231,765
	Total	2,242,700	896,465

To these groups there have been added (in 1937) six (OH–1559, OH–1561, OH–1562, OH–1563, OH–1564, and OH–1566) street-improvement projects, estimated to cost $662,000, and requesting grants totaling $274,050; also, OH–1609 for swimming pools, estimated to cost $128,000, with requested grants of $57,650.

You will observe that South High Street extension is first on the original list, and that the grant requested is quite small, since a large part of the cost is for land and damage. The completion of the grade-elimination project will leave the consolidated improvement of street widening and extension and grade elimination about 85 percent completed as to cost, but less than half completed as to transportation facilities, which will still be bad until High Street is completed and added to the State highway system, as is contemplated. This is well shown on the aerial photograph which I am enclosing.

The sewers, waterworks, and highway improvements are likewise well-selected improvements, for which bonds were authorized by popular vote in 1933 to pay the city's cost under Federal cooperation.

There is absolutely no other improvement plan, and none can be undertaken except with Federal participation, since Akron's independent bond-issuing power has long since been exhausted by reducing the tax values.

The threatened suspension of P. W. A. grants would leave the city "out on a limb" in respect to employment of labor, and probably empty the engineering division quarters, translating us back to 1932 and 1933, because of the short notice given after the city had been led to believe that the P. W. A. activities would be continued as provided for in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936, wherein the Administrator of Public Works is authorized to use $300,000,000 funds on hand to provide grants only for projects that can be completed by July 1, 1938.

I am in complete accord with the remarks of the Honorable C. ARTHUR ANDERSON, of Missouri, who made a memorable speech in the House of Representatives on May 10, in which he called attention, among other things, that there is still $131,000,000 of the $300,000,000 available, and that it ought to be used to gradually taper off the Federal aid so that the local authorities can have sufficient time for preparation to resume their full responsibility in relation to public works and unemployment.

It appears to me that the proposal of Congressman ANDERSON to have Congress earmark $350,000,000 of the 1937 relief appropriation for P. W. A. projects is altogether sound and timely.

I trust that it will be possible for you to persuade the Administrator to approve the most useful of the Akron projects on a basis better than 115 percent of cost of relief labor grants.

I would also like to take this occasion to again thank you for the substantial help that you gave to our efforts to secure Federal improvements all along the line since 1934.

Cordially yours,

E. A. KEMMLER.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Caldwell and Beiter amendments. The Congress of the United States declared in 1933 that widespread unemployment and disorganization of industry were prevalent throughout the country, and because the standards of living of the American people had been undermined it was further declared that a state of national emergency existed. Thereupon the National Industrial Recovery Act became a law. Title II of that act deals with public works and construction projects. Recognizing the necessity of increasing employment quickly, it empowered the President to make grants to States, municipalities, or other public bodies for the construction, repair, or improvement of any public project, and it further provided that the Government should finance 30 percent of the cost of the labor and materials used on such projects. Later that grant was increased by Executive order to 45 percent.

You and I recall that action upon the part of municipalities was suggested by the Government in order that they might aid in relieving the unemployed. Agents of the Government who were on the public pay rolls visited the various communities and explained to the citizens what was necessary in order that they might obtain a grant of 45 percent from the Federal Government. Acting upon the theory that the Government was in good faith, many a municipality in this Nation has gone forward and raised the money by bond issues or otherwise for the purpose of constructing a public building on the theory that they were to obtain from the Government 45 percent of the cost thereof.

A number of projects in my district have been completed. There is also a number which are not completed because of the recent rules and regulations laid down by the Administrator of the Public Works Administration. You are all familiar with those drastic regulations. No community can comply with those terms. Just why regulations of that kind were ever submitted to any community that had acted originally upon the basis of a 45-percent grant is more than I can comprehend or conceive. I cannot believe that Secretary Ickes inaugurated such an absurd and unworkable policy. Under the present rules and regulations municipal projects for which bonds have been voted become nothing more or less than Works Progress Administration projects. In fact, the Public Works Administration is more of a relief administration than the Works Progress Administration. My colleagues, Colonel Hackett, of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, has in recent letters to me specifically pointed out that they were always careful in advising an applicant that no assurance could be given that an allotment would be forthcoming regardless of any action it might have taken in an effort to have its application favorably considered. Notwithstanding the statement of Colonel Hackett, I know what has been done in my own district. I know that five communities have been led to believe that if they raised the balance of the money necessary for their projects through the issuance of bonds or otherwise a 45-percent grant from the Government would be available. Acting upon that belief, the communities of Waverly, Patterson, Pittsfield, Chapin, and Meredosia, in my district in Illinois, are now in the throes of a financial plight from which there is no relief unless the Beiter amendments are adopted.

A waterworks and sewerage system project at Waverly, Ill., has been approved by the examining divisions of the Public Works Administration. The people there voted a bond issue of $105,000, solely upon the theory that an $81,000 grant would be forthcoming from the Government.

The same thing is true in the town of Patterson, Ill. A school project is in the making there, and $7,000 worth of bonds have been contracted for by the White Hall National Bank on the theory that the Government would cooperate by making a grant of $11,454.

In the city of Pittsfield I am advised that special assessment bonds for a large city improvement have been sold on the assurance that a grant of some $209,087 would be forthcoming from the Government.

In Meredosia the people voted a bond issue of $40,000 for the establishment of a high school. Today that community leases for high-school purposes part of a grade-school building, and unless they receive some relief from the Government it will be impossible for them to operate a high school during the coming year because of the expansion of both grade and high schools. The bonds for this project were voted after a careful examination of the situation by Government agents who advised the community that a grant of 45 percent would be made in the event $40,000 could be raised. These bonds have not been sold, but there is an open market for them the moment a law is passed which will carry out the intent and purposes of the original act.

In Chapin, Ill., a bond issue has been voted for a new high-school building. The present one is in a delapidated and deplorable condition. I had occasion to visit this school last year at the request of the directors. It is a fire trap; it is a hazardous spot for children; it lacks all of the modern facilities and equipment which are so vital to the proper education of the youth of today. This community, by an overwhelming vote, passed a bond issue of $45,000 solely upon the theory that the Government would aid them in their dilemma by a grant of $24,545. And the tragedy of this last example is that the bonds have been sold. Unless that community receives from the Government the grant it expected, not only will it be compelled to continue with a school building which should be junked, but it also will be in a financial predicament which will be burdensome to the taxpayers without obtaining any value for the money spent.

Mr. Chairman, the Public Works Administration has done the most constructive work in the most efficient and economical way of any department during the recent emergency. And the attempt upon the part of those in power to shelve this Department and make it purely a Works Progress Administration agency is not in line with what is for the best interests of the people of this Nation. I submit that it is absolutely necessary to earmark these funds in order that we may have definite assurance that every project which has the technical approval of the Public Works Administration here in Washington will be completed. It may be that, in line with Colonel Hackett's theory, there is no legal obligation to take care of them, but certainly no one will deny the fact that there is a moral obligation to take care of these communities which have acted in good faith in helping the Federal Government take care of the unemployed in this country during the emergency.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize once again that the public-works program has been about the only adventure upon the part of the Government during the economic crisis which has escaped criticism. I submit that the benefits derived from the Public Works Administration program justify its continuation under the circumstances which have been heretofore detailed in my remarks. The benefits derived through the employment of unskilled and skilled labor are so far reaching that it is impossible to accurately recapitulate the gains.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished and brilliant gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has made serious appeals against earmarking any portion of this $1,500,000,000. If the House had followed the gentleman from Virginia the other day, we would have appropriated only $1,000,000,000 for relief purposes. All of these funds that we seek to earmark at the present time will amount to $500,000,000, and this will be strictly in line with the program which he championed here in the House on last Friday. [Applause.]

I sincerely hope these amendments will pass in order that simple financial and moral justice may be done to these communities where bond issues have been voted with the understanding that the Federal Government would keep the faith.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, we, as Representatives in Congress, are confronted today with the issue of whether we are going to continue to write blank checks for someone else to spend, or whether we are going to assume that responsibility which is rightfully ours to legislate with regard to how and for what purposes these relief funds shall be expended. [Applause.]

For one, I am ready to assume this responsibility. I get the blame when the Department heads and others issue these rules and regulations you have just heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] speak of, that impose conditions that are impossible to be complied with. I find some of my school districts have voted bond issues relying upon a promised grant of 45 percent, and now it developes these impossible and unreasonable rules are imposed so they cannot proceed any further. They come to me as their Representative in Congress to know why such restrictions are placed upon these projects. I am ready today to answer and tell them we are going to carry out what they have been promised and comply with the moral obligation that we assumed in permitting them to go ahead under these promised programs. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Were these grants or allocations made to your people by W. P. A. or P. W. A.?

Mr. McCLELLAN. By P. W. A., and they have voted their bonds.

Mr. SNELL. I thought most of them were W. P. A.

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; these applications are pending with the P. W. A. They have voted their bonds, they are ready to go on, they have met every condition that was required of them at the time they started their program or their projects.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. May I ask the gentleman if this earmarking is accomplished here, will the restrictions referred to still obtain with respect to the earmarked funds? If so, we are still without relief.

Mr. McCLELLAN. We may go further after this, but the first thing to do is to say how we want the money spent.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Do I understand the situation to be that the so-called boondoggling is done under W. P. A. and that these approved projects, where the local communities participate, come under P. W. A.?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The gentleman may place his own interpretation upon it. I know and the gentleman knows there have been some good projects under W. P. A., but we do know we get something for our money under P. W. A. projects. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, we all agree that it is the duty of the Federal Government when necessary to help take care of the needy people of the Nation. No party or group has a monopoly on philanthropy and patriotism of this country. The Republicans in Congress are just as anxious that the needy people of the Nation are properly cared for as the President or his party. The difference arises as to the plan of solving this important problem and the way and manner in which relief is administered.

The Republican Party has never failed when a relief appropriation bill has been up for consideration to condemn the favoritism, partiality, and partisanship, as well as the needless waste, shown in the administration of relief. During the last several months we have heard these same things condemned by leading Democrats in the House and Senate, and it has been refreshing during the debate on this bill to hear a number of leading Democrats of the House boldly declare that a lot of the taxpayers' money is being wasted, and that there is a lot of racketeering, chiseling, cheating, and boondoggling going on. These Democrats, like myself and others, are anxious to take care of the needy people of the Nation, but they are unwilling to close their eyes and approve this boondoggling, waste, racketeering, chiseling, and cheating. I wish to commend their courage, and I fully endorse the sentiment expressed by them.

We must bear in mind the money for relief comes from the taxes paid into the Treasury by all of the people, without regard to race, creed, color, or politics, and this relief should be administered for the relief of the needy without regard to race, creed, color, or politics, and it should be done in a sensible and businesslike way.

It is now admitted that from 30 to 40 percent of the money appropriated for relief goes for overhead; that is, to provide a great army of people who do not need relief with political jobs and to pay their expenses. The needy people do not receive more than 60 to 70 cents out of each dollar that we are appropriating.

WE ARE BORROWING THE MONEY

President Roosevelt announced in his campaign in 1932 that we would have to stop the continuing deficits; that is, paying out more than we are taking in, and we must stop increasing our national debt. He warned that if we kept this up it would mean bankruptcy for the Nation. Now, instead of stopping or reducing these deficits or debts, they have increased so that by the end of this fiscal year the deficits under President Roosevelt's administration will have reached the stupendous sum of approximately $15,000,000,000 and our national debt will have increased from approximately $20,000,000,000 to more than $35,000,000,000 and the end is not in sight. Every year since Mr. Roosevelt took office, his subservient Congress has added new taxes and increased other taxes, so that this fiscal year the Government will collect more than twice as much revenue and taxes as it did in the last year of the Hoover administration. With these new taxes and increased taxes we were told that the Budget would be balanced and we would stop deficits and stop the increase in our national debt. However, it is now clear that there will be a deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, of around $3,000,000,000, and there is little doubt now but what there will be a deficit and the national debt will be increased in 1938.

Mr. Buchanan, late chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, shortly before his death recently, stated that the Federal Government had appropriated and expended for relief and recovery more than $15,000,000,000.

Since we are borrowing the money this relief money should be spent honestly and should go only to those who need relief, and to build and promote projects that will add to the permanent wealth of the Nation.

CHILDREN MUST PAY OR REPUDIATE

Our children and children's children will have either to pay or repudiate these huge debts we are piling up, and they, no doubt, will inquire, "What did our fathers do with this money? Show us what they did." It will be some consolation to use this money in a way that will develop the country and add to its wealth. There are many worth-while projects that can be undertaken by the Government that will furnish employment to those out of work, which, when completed, will add to the capital wealth of the Nation, and our children will know the purposes for which we created the debt. [Applause.]

AMENDMENTS SHOULD BE ADOPTED

The President only asked for $1,500,000,000 for relief for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937. This bill not only carries a new appropriation for $1,500,000,000, but as I understand our colleague, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, who is a member of the Appropriations Committee, it also reappropriates more than $200,000,000 of other funds making in all $1,700,000,000. We are turning this over to the President in a lump sum. He, of course, will turn it over to Mr. Hopkins and others to spend as they see fit. In other words, we are giving to Mr. Hopkins and other subordinates of the President a blank check for $1,700,000,000. This policy is wrong.

Before the board of directors of any great railroad or any business concern would turn over to the president of the railroad on his request a blank check for $100,000, they would require him carefully to designate the purposes for which the money would be used.

We have had 30 other Presidents besides Mr. Roosevelt. In 140 years Congress turned over to them approximately $1,500,000,000. Practically all of that sum was turned over to the Presidents while this country was at war. There has been turned over to President Roosevelt approximately $15,500,000,000 in a little over 4 years. I mean as a lump sum—a blank check, and it is more remarkable because this sum has been turned over to him in peacetime.

The greater part of this $1,700,000,000 included in this bill should be earmarked. We should not turn all of this money over to any man to do with it as he pleases. I am supporting the amendment to earmark a part of it for flood control, and the amendment to earmark $150,000,000 of this money for Federal and secondary roads and to aid in the elimination of grade crossings. I also favor the earmarking of $300,000,000 for the P. W. A., so that the P. W. A. projects in the various States, counties, cities, and towns that have been approved and for which these States, counties, cities, and towns have made arrangements to put up their part of the money, may be completed. These will include waterworks, school buildings, other public buildings, and other public improvements of a permanent and substantial character. We have hundreds of thousands of miles of dirt roads that need improvement. We have flood areas that should be protected. These are all worth-while projects. These improvements will mean permanent benefit to the people of the Nation and will add to our national wealth.

Congress, made up of 435 Members from every section of the country and 96 Senators from the 48 States, men of wide experience in legislation and fully advised of the needs of the Nation, certainly knows more how to allocate this money than Mr. Hopkins, or any other one man. Of course, Mr. Hopkins is anxious that all of the money be turned over to him. We must bear in mind that it was under Mr. Hopkins they had the leaves rakings, the boondoggling, ditches dug and filled up again. It has been under Mr. Hopkins that millions have been spent for nonessentials and useless projects.

For one, I am opposed to giving blank checks to the President, Mr. Hopkins, or anybody else for billions of dollars. I am ready and willing to assume my responsibility as a Member of the House to say for what purpose the taxpayers' money shall be used when I know that these useful projects will furnish just as much employment for the unemployed as these boondoggling projects, and then we will have something to show for our deficits and debts. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Why should they not earmark every dollar of it?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. So far as I am concerned, I should like to see practically all of it earmarked.

LIMIT RELIEF TO AMERICAN CITIZENS

We have more than 7,000,000 aliens in this country. Perhaps 3,500,000 of them came into this country in violation of law. They were smuggled over the borders of Canada and Mexico or slipped in from the Atlantic or Pacific Ocean. Five hundred thousand aliens have deserted their ships and have become dispersed throughout this country. Millions of these aliens are either on relief or they have jobs that should go to American citizens, especially when it is reported by the American Federation of Labor that we still have 10,000,000 workers unemployed in this country and Mr. Hopkins reports that this unemployment and this relief problem is a permanent problem.

If we are going to have unemployment and the taxpayers must take care of the needy, they have a right to limit this relief to American citizens. American citizens unemployed, among these a million or more of the defenders of our country and their sons and daughters, should have preference of the jobs over aliens.

Whenever an American citizen finds himself stranded and needing relief in France or other countries, arrangements are made for him to get back to America. They do not keep our stranded people on relief in those countries for years as we have done aliens in this country, and, furthermore, in other countries under their laws and regulations the citizens of those countries are given preference in employment. An American citizen cannot go to those countries and get a job when there is a citizen of that country who can do the job and desires to do it. The most amazing disclosure of all is that a great many aliens have good Government jobs, with fat salaries, here in the city of Washington and other parts of the Nation. Yes; our own Government is employing aliens and paying them good salaries when we have millions of citizens, trained men and women, seeking work and on relief. Could there be anything more inexcusable than this conduct on the part of our own Government?

Our country is going more heavily in debt every year and endangering the credit of this country; therefore I consider it my duty to protect the American taxpayers against assuming a burden that is unfair for them to assume, and I am giving my support to the amendment limiting relief and relief jobs to American citizens.

CHISELING, CHEATING, AND WASTE

If the administration would see to it that the needy alone were taken care of out of these relief funds there could be a large sum saved. As pointed out by some of our Democratic friends on the floor of the House, there is a lot of chiseling and cheating. There has been developed and there has grown up a tremendous system of partiality, favoritism, chiseling, and cheating in this relief work. Many people who do not need relief and are not entitled to relief are getting the money, while tens of thousands who need relief and are entitled to relief are being denied relief. I know that many of you, like myself, have received hundreds and hundreds of protests and complaints about the manner in which relief is being administered.

I sent out a questionnaire about a year ago and received about 5,000 replies, and, with only a few exceptions, they claim that favoritism and partiality were being shown in the relief in their respective communities.

I received yesterday a letter which is typical. I know personally the man who made the statement. I am sure he is telling the truth. He says last year he had a job on the W. P. A. He was able to secure employment with a private concern, and he promptly accepted it. He is a good citizen. On account of cutting out the work, he lost his job some time ago. He has a wife and several children. He has seen better days. He is poor, but honest and industrious. He has made every effort possible to secure work from a certain person in charge of a certain W. P. A. project. I know that man. He is prosperous and independent. He owns two good farms, yet he has a good job with a good, fat salary working for the W. P. A. One of his sons got into a C. C. C. camp. Another son is hooked up with the N. Y. A. The needy man has been denied work and his son has been denied the right to go to a C. C. C. camp.

I know of another family in my district. It is a large and prominent family. Any one of them could get along well without relief jobs or relief work. To my knowledge, at least nine of that family have good, fat jobs with good, fat salaries paid out of these relief funds.

To my own personal knowledge, a son of one of the head officials of a big railroad in Kentucky, a son of a prominent and prosperous well-to-do lawyer, and a son of one of the outstanding physicians and surgeons of Kentucky were taken into the C. C. C. I know of another young man going into the C. C. C. whose mother, a widow, owned a fine river-bottom farm. She and her son, who was about 25 years of age, were the only persons living on the farm. This son was needed there to help take care of that fine farm. He was able-bodied, but by some means or other he got into the C. C. C. I could enumerate many other cases of the well-to-do with two or more members of the family securing the jobs and relief benefits, while on the other hand I could enumerate many, many, many cases where those who needed the relief and were entitled to the relief and who needed the jobs and were entitled to the jobs could not get them, and among these were veterans with families.

Of course, this is wrong. I am satisfied if this money was honestly and fairly administered to the needy people of this country they could be well cared for and well provided for with a saving to the taxpayers of at least 33⅓ percent. A lot of money is wasted and squandered—for instance, in the Resettlement Administration $35,000,000 has been spent to resettle 3,500 families. That is $10,000 per family, but President Roosevelt claimed there were 5,000,000 needy families. If we would treat all the needy families alike, at that rate it would cost $500,000,000,000 to take care of the resettlement feature alone. Of course, these 3,500 families did not receive $10,000 of benefits. A big part of this money went for so-called overhead expenses—furnishing a multitude of New Deal politicians with easy jobs and big salaries. There has been appropriated and turned over to the President in 4 years over $15,000,000,000. Assume there were 5,000,000 needy families in America. This means $3,000 on an average to each and every family. Of course, that number of families has not received relief and none of those families have received $3,000. A great part of it has been eaten up by overhead.

If relief conditions are to continue in this country, one of these days we must come to honesty and common sense and work out a program that will be fair and just to the needy people of this Nation. I have all along urged and shall continue to urge that favoritism, partiality, and partisanship must be eliminated. This money comes from all the people and it must go to all the needy.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, it seems rather strange that men on the floor here today should be advocating earmarking of such huge parts of this appropriation for particular projects when they were not willing last Friday to support appropriations large enough to do the job. I appeal to you this afternoon not to cut down this niggardly amount that is now in the bill which is designed for relief. You cannot take three hundred million out of this bill and give it to P. W. A. without having men and women who are on W. P. A. suffering. I submit I am as much in favor of carrying on the P. W. A. projects as any other man in this House.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I cannot yield. All the time so far has been used by those who favor the amendment. I submit, if you can now or if you had the other day offered an amendment to increase the amount in this appropriation bill, I would support it; but so far as my vote is concerned, it will never be used to cut down the small amount that we have in this bill now for W. P. A. These matters can be taken care of in other bills; and if you Democrats, who seem to be in large numbers in support of this amendment, have any control in your own party in this respect, I submit that you have large enough numbers here to force your committee and the leaders of your party here in the House to bring out increased appropriations for P. W. A., and a lot of us on the other side will support you; but, in the name of justice, do not cut down this niggardly amount. We are not using good sense this afternoon. A little while ago we earmarked some money for flood control, and we are supposed to use W. P. A. labor for that. Do you know what they are getting for W. P. A. labor in the South, where we expect to use a lot of this money? Twenty-one dollars a month for minimum wages for labor.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, recently I made a talk on this floor offering my reasons why I believed that P. W. A. should be continued. The response from my colleagues and the general public has been most unexpected and gratifying.

Today I wish to take a few minutes to recall this situation to your consideration.

The P. W. A. expires June 30, 1937, unless this Congress sees fit to extend its life. Already P. W. A. has obligated the Federal Government to the extent of two hundred and eighty-two millions plus a revolving fund of one hundred and thirty-one millions, which is actually a drawing account on the United States Treasury. I realize full well that the Government is facing an economic crisis and that it is the duty of this body to map out a definite program of retrenchment. However, I am firmly convinced that a cut in P. W. A. appropriations is not a step in the right direction. In my opinion, a curtailment of P. W. A. would be calamitous.

First. Thousands of P. W. A. workers would be out of employment and consequently forced to seek sustenance from direct relief, a condition most unfavorable to national welfare.

Second. It would mean that hundreds of projects on which bonds have been voted, plans and specifications prepared, and other commitments made would have to be abandoned, a morbid reflection on our capacity for progress.

Third. The cessation of buying to supply the needs of P. W. A. would cause an inestimable repercussion in business, tending to defeat a program of recovery.

And finally, the Federal Government would be the object of relentless ridicule and calumny, and confidence in national policies would be badly shaken. One cannot blame a community or municipality for its distrust of the Federal Government if we go back on P. W. A. promises and leave cities, towns, and villages reeking with abandoned projects that will stand as monuments to our lack of understanding and foresight. Permit me to call the following facts to your attention:

Under the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933, the Public Works Administration was authorized to make grants of 30 percent of the cost of labor and materials. P. W. A. statistics show that this system of computing grants netted project sponsors grants amounting to approximately 26 percent of the total project costs. Under subsequent acts the Public Works Administration was authorized to make grants amounting to 45 percent of the total project cost. This was obviously inequitable from the standpoint of a redistribution of wealth. Project sponsors were financially able to pay the entire cost of their projects and communities having relatively little unemployment received the same benefits as project sponsors who were unable to pay more than 55 percent of the cost of their projects and communities which had large numbers of unemployed on relief rolls. If this suggested system of determining earned grant is made into law, it will give communities suffering from excessive unemployment an opportunity to receive worth-while Federal aid and provide useful work for the unemployed.

In order to create a practical basis for computing earned grants on P. W. A. projects and at the same time eliminate the necessity for excessive administrative expense, it is suggested that Congress set a minimum grant of 20 percent of the total project cost to cover indirect relief labor. To encourage project sponsors to employ directly on the projects as much relief labor as possible, it is suggested that Congress authorize the Public Works Administration to increase the minimum grant by whatever amount is expended for relief labor employed on the projects. This system of grant computation would net an average of 26 percent and would be simple and inexpensive to supervise. It would also provide a definite minimum grant, which is all-important to communities in determining whether or not they will undertake P. W. A. projects. In localities where nearly all the labor employed directly on the project could be taken from relief rolls, the sponsors of such projects would receive from 40 to 45 percent of the total project cost. At least three hundred million of whatever funds appropriated for work relief should be earmarked for the Public Works Administration to be used for making loans and grants. In addition to this P. W. A. should be authorized to use for the same purpose the revolving fund now on hand and funds which will be received from the sale of securities now held and those acquired during the next 2 fiscal years. A larger appropriation would be desirable and economically sound in order to make it possible for P. W. A. to materially assist in bolstering and stabilizing the market for political-subdivision bonds. P. W. A. should, in addition to funds for grants, be given funds and authority to purchase and hold until maturity, if necessary, three or four hundred million of political-subdivision bonds. It is now holding about one hundred and thirty-one million of such bonds.

A provision should be incorporated requiring all projects financed on the whole or in part by P. W. A. under this program to be substantially completed by December 31, 1939. This will give 2½ years to complete the program, which should be sufficient time for Congress to observe social and economic trends and determine what subsequent action will be necessary.

The social and economic conditions of this country have actually just begun to adjust themselves. If the Public Works Administration is continued and given a substantial appropriation with which to operate, the process of social and economic adjustment now definitely under way will be given an opportunity to continue undisturbed, at least so far as the construction and associated industries are concerned. It would be a disastrous mistake to interrupt this progress now.

Any one of us can look over our district and see P. W. A. projects now in progress. Certainly we can realize that the Nation is better off as a result of this great public-works program. In my district there are now in the process of construction a number of projects that are almost indispensable to the welfare of the district. There is project no. 1230, providing for the construction of sewers in Lemay, a community of nearly 25,000 people, and where today sewers are unknown and will remain so unless P. W. A. is continued. I am sure all of us can see just what a benefit sewers are to a community of this size and population.

I have another project for the construction of sewers in Ladue Village, which is a modern community in every respect except for a sewage-disposal system. Both these projects are indispensable from a standpoint of public health and impossible with the help of P. W. A.

In Clayton, Mo., just outside St. Louis, there is a project to aid in the erection of a library and another for the building of a school, and I believe that I need not argue to show the merit of such undertakings. We cannot do a better work than to educate our children, and P. W. A. is rendering material aid in this great ideal. At Kirkwood, Mo., there is a project for a school. All these communities are suburbs of St. Louis and are municipal in every respect. Bond elections have been held and carried, engineers and architects have been engaged, trustees have been appointed, specifications and plans have been drawn, and these communities have gone to great expense and inconvenience relying on the promise of P. W. A. to adhere to the original 45-percent grant only to find that it has been reduced to 15 percent. I know that nearly every Member of this House can find the same or similar conditions in his or her district. In all such cases there exists at least a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government to make funds available on the terms proposed and accepted by these communities. In other words, in those communities in your district where bond elections have been held or funds otherwise secured on the assumption that a 45-percent grant would be forthcoming from the Government, the Caldwell amendment will provide for the Government keeping faith with the sponsors. This is most important to you and to the people you represent. It should be the main reason why you should support the earmarking of a part of this work-relief fund for the Public Works Administration. It has never been the practice of this Government, and I hope it never will be, to run out on its promises.

Recently in my district the dreaded disease of encephalitis, or sleeping sickness, took a great toll of human life. This has been directly attributed by experts to an improper sewage-disposal system. At present at least two P. W. A. projects are under way to provide the necessary sewers to protect the health of St. Louis County. A number of projects are in progress to eliminate the fire hazards in schools in order to avert insofar as possible an occurrence similar to the recent disaster at New London, Tex.

I know that you all have the same conditions in your respective districts and I hope you will support the Caldwell amendment, which will enable these great public undertakings to continue.

From a standpoint of general welfare and national economic stability and recovery I believe it is not only obvious but mandatory that P. W. A. be continued and provided with sufficient funds to carry out the Government's good faith commitments.

Everyone realizes that retrenchment in Government spending is imperative. Telegrams and letters from communities which have P. W. A. projects pending indicate their willingness to accept the plan I have proposed. Telegrams and letters from contractors, labor organizations, and material suppliers indicate their unqualified concurrence in my suggestions. It is a definite retrenchment from the straight 45-percent grant. It takes the President's idea of a grant of 115 percent of relief labor and weaves it into a definite and equitable formula for Federal aid in public construction.

The indicated concurrence of project sponsors and labor should be sufficient to encourage this Congress to adopt the Caldwell amendment unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am no more in favor than the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] of taking this money from work relief for a public-works program. I offered a work-relief amendment of $1,800,000,000. But I am crossing my bridges one at a time, and this is the bridge I am at now, in addition to which I have some faith in the President of the United States in taking care of the relief situation as it develops.

It has been stated here a number of times this afternoon that this situation involves a moral obligation on the part of the Government toward municipalities, school districts, and so forth, which have applications pending in P. W. A. in which bond elections have been held. I stated before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, and I am going to repeat here, that in my judgment this situation goes further than that, that it involves violation of a moral obligation on the part of the Government toward these municipalities and school districts. If my information is not incorrect, hundreds of these municipalities and school districts where they complied with the old 45-55 grant and loan proposition they did so under the belief that they would get the money when they complied, when it was known in Washington that they would not get the money.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Some of these communities and school districts have already issued bonds and sold the bonds.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; and are paying interest on them. Let me give you a few figures. Here is a list taken from the P. W. A. report furnished Members of Congress. Down there on the P. W. A. docket there are 597 school projects, every one of which has been approved, in every one of which there have been bond issues, full compliance, the districts and municipalities paying interest on the loans, and the Federal grant and loan denied. What they are offering down there now amounts to practically nothing, not more than 6 to 10 percent, and I want to put a few States which are heavily affected in the RECORD. Take the State of Texas which is on this list; the State of Texas has 90 such approved projects down there.

Mr. Chairman, for the information of Members I submit summaries taken from the official P. W. A. report of April 22, 1937:

List of all pending non-Federal approved projects for which bond elections have been held and carried as of Apr. 20, 1937 — 597

Forty-six States are listed. The States having the largest quotas are:

California	30
Georgia	23
Illinois	35
Kansas	23
Massachusetts	19
Michigan	15
Minnesota	23
Missouri	36
Ohio	32
Oregon	15
Pennsylvania	16
Tennessee	19
Texas	90
Washington	36
Wisconsin	33

List of all non-Federal approved projects for which appropriations have been made by State legislatures as of Apr. 20, 1937 — 77

Twenty States are involved. West Virginia has 23 and Connecticut 11.

Total of both classes — 674

List of pending non-Federal projects for construction and improvement of schools as of Apr. 20, 1937 — 1,178

The largest quotas of these are in the following States:

California	83
Georgia	34
Illinois	47
Indiana	53
Iowa	31
Kansas	44
Missouri	38
New Jersey	35
New York	60
Ohio	98
Pennsylvania	38
Texas	94
Virginia	39
Washington	60
Wisconsin	41

List of pending non-Federal projects approved by examining divisions on the basis of grants for 45 percent of the cost, for which no allocations have been made — 2,962

States and number of projects are as follows—I note specially those having over 100: California, 140; Illinois, 170; Iowa, 104; Minnesota, 106; New York, 187; Ohio, 147, Texas, 365:

Alabama	37
Arizona	30
Arkansas	21
California	140
Colorado	11
Connecticut	36
Delaware	2
Florida	40
Georgia	70
Idaho	31
Illinois	170
Indiana	87
Iowa	104
Kansas	81
Kentucky	64
Louisiana	25
Maine	21
Maryland	14
Massachusetts	31
Michigan	92
Minnesota	106
Mississippi	30
Missouri	88
Montana	35
Nebraska	32
Nevada	6
New Hampshire	10
New Jersey	75
New Mexico	7
New York	187
North Carolina	78
North Dakota	20
Oklahoma	36
Oregon	48
Pennsylvania	60
Rhode Island	14
South Carolina	56
South Dakota	23
Utah	24
Vermont	10
Virginia	87
Washington	90
West Virginia	16
Wyoming	5

So it will be seen that every State and district is interested in the Beiter amendment. I wish to emphasize the 1,178 school projects pending down there in P. W. A. I am for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, under leave granted I append a brief statement made by me before the Subcommittee on Appropriations handling the bill. It will give Members the picture more fully than can be done in a few minutes here in the Committee of the Whole.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN A. MARTIN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF COLORADO

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. MARTIN, if you desire to make a statement to the committee in reference to this matter, we will be very glad to hear you at this time.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, some of this ground has been pretty well thrashed over, but I would like, first, to make two brief general observations. One is that I think the P. W. A. has been very highly beneficial and very successfully conducted. So much so, in fact, that the main criticism leveled at it now, so far as I can learn, is that it has really overdone its work and is not any longer needed, that the lines of industry which it was designed to help are back to normal, and some of them are plus normal. I consider that to be a very complimentary criticism of any governmental activity.

In addition to that, it has done a very fine type of work. I drive all over the country and see what is going on. If I had any criticism of the P. W. A. projects as they appear in many of the smaller towns, it would be along the line of the fellow who has a new hat but needs a haircut and a shave and a shine.

You can pick a P. W. A. project without looking for the sign. They have done a very fine work, architecturally and artistically, all over the country.

The thing that brings me here this afternoon is what looks to me like an injustice that practically involves the violation of a moral obligation on the part of the Government toward the sponsors of hundreds of these projects.

I never heard any mention of this order until Mr. BEITER mentioned it, this order 197 that suspends the 45 and 55 grant and loan.

I went recently to the Public Works Administration to find out what was delaying, so to speak, a project in my district, and I was astounded to be officially advised by a man very high in the Public Works Administration that the suspension of the 45 and 55 grant and loan provision virtually occurred last November, and I apprehend that the sponsors of these projects did not know anything about it.

Mr. TABER. Did it occur before the election?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say this to the gentleman from New York, that it looks to me like they have not always picked their time with respect to elections. They knocked the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the head about 30 days before the election of 1934 with over half a million applications pending, and it made us plenty of trouble. They do not always pick a psychological time to make these drastic changes.

I learned for the first time about 2 weeks ago that this very material change had been made last November and the sponsors of some of the projects in my district that have acted in compliance with the P. W. A. requirements did not know, until I advised them, that they were not going to get any money, and they have had their bond elections. In the city of Colorado Springs, which was terribly damaged by a big flood 2 years ago, they have a city bridge project approved down here by the proper authority, and they have already levied taxes for compliance with the requirements.

The city of Monte Vista, for the purpose of erecting a high-school building, has held a bond election. At Las Animas they have held a bond election, and they have fully complied with the requirements.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Were these projects approved here?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir; these projects were approved here, and none of the sponsors knew there had been any suspension of the 45–55 grant and loan until I had to break the bad news to them.

Mr. LUDLOW. How long after the suspension were the bond elections held?

Mr. MARTIN. The bond election in Las Animas has been held within the last 90 days, and this order was suspended last November.

You talk about how long we are going to carry this activity on. It is all right with me if the administration swings the ax on all future applications, if it stops them and keeps them stopped, but these approved projects should be completed on the original basis.

I want to read you a paragraph from a letter I got this morning from my district. The man who wrote this letter is secretary and treasurer of the Colorado State Farm Bureau, a leading citizen of the town, and a member of the school board. He says:

"It is our information that Greeley has been recently granted a P. W. A. allotment"—that is for a school project—"I was told that this was secured by their Representative's and Senator's persistence." I did not fail to get that. "This may be somewhat distorted, but I do not see how this project was lost."

I will not go into that except to say that apparently there is no rule put into effect as to which somebody cannot go, if he has the combination, and pull a rabbit out of the hat. I got information about this, that some one project in Colorado has been pulled out of the hole within the last 30 days, and I got it by wire from the sponsor of another school project.

If they want to chop this off from now on, as to the filing of any more applications, it is all right with me, but I think the Government is under a moral obligation to go ahead as originally proposed with these projects that have been brought to maturity. I have a few notes here in reference to what the general situation is.

I want to say, first, that apparently most of these projects are school projects. I have in my file a statement showing that the total Colorado applications in the P. W. A. engineer's office in Denver, at the close of 1935, was 41. He had 41 projects on the list, of which 26 were school and school addition and auxiliaries projects. The last statement he sent me under date of February 19, 1937, showed a total of 33 projects, of which 16 were for schools and school libraries, and so forth. There are 14 Colorado projects down here approved now, the majority of them being for schools.

Mr. TABER. Have you any idea how much they total?

Mr. MARTIN. In my State?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the total figures would not run to more than a million dollars in the State, including the 14 projects.

Mr. TABER. Would you know what the allocation was of the $3,000,000 grant, the State providing fifteen million from its funds, that has recently been made, according to the statement on page four that has been furnished us by the Secretary?

Mr. MARTIN. I did not bring that data with me.

Mr. TABER. It gives the recent allocations.

Mr. MARTIN. That is for highways. Our State has recently floated a bonded indebtedness of twenty-five million for a general State highway program, and this is a Federal application on that.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, that could be granted under the terms of the Executive order because of the relief labor.

Mr. MARTIN. Here are a few more figures I have noted from the reports of the Public Works Administration:

They have pending down there now 597 approved projects on which there have been bond elections held and everything completed for compliance on the part of the sponsors. The total cost is $106,000,000. They have 77 with grants made by State legislatures for school projects, at a cost of fifteen million. That is a total of about one hundred twenty-one million on all those projects, the majority of which are school projects, on which compliance has been completed, and all or most of them completed in ignorance of the fact that the consideration for completion had been withdrawn by the Government.

As to this program that is pending now, when I say it is all right to stop this in the future, I have in mind taking care of the present situation.

There is a total number pending down there of 1,178 school projects all over the country. New York State has about 60 of them. Pennsylvania has a lot of them, 38; Texas, 94; Illinois, 47; Indiana, 53; Washington State, 60; California, 83; Georgia, 34; New Jersey, 35; and so forth. They are scattered all over the country. There are 1,178 of them, and the total estimated cost of the whole number is only $177,000,000.

They have pending down there a grand total of all kinds of projects of 2,926, the estimated cost of which is $812,000,000.

You have asked me where you are going to stop. I will say, go ahead and complete this list, anyhow, and stop, if you want to, at the other end of the line.

There are some hung up in Denver in the P. W. A. office, and no doubt there are some hung up in all the other States also. They have not gotten to us, but I think every Member knows where they have gotten to him down here and the responsibility and the burden and criticism it throws on him to get favorable action on a project.

If that whole program were completed, I cannot see why it would be such an undue strain on the national purse, considering the local contribution and the type of construction it is.

Here are a couple of ideas in connection with this matter: I have heard recently—I have not checked up on this but I presume you know about it—that the W. P. A. has limited the material cost to 5 percent as being the top amount that can go for material. That reduces the W. P. A. to a pick-and-shovel proposition. I cannot imagine anything outside of a pick and shovel that can be built for 5 percent of the material cost by the Federal Government, unless the sponsors put up the rest of it.

I understand that on the best type of construction, which has been school buildings—and I have no doubt it is also true as to other municipal improvements—it runs as high as 70 percent for the nonlabor part of the cost of material, site, and other costs, and it is very common for the nonlabor cost to go up to 50 percent.

That simply means that these people cannot build that type of construction. If they want to go ahead and stop any applications from here on, and everybody gets an even break on that kind of a deal, I am willing to take mine.

My State has 14 projects that are being held up down here where there has been complete compliance.

When I was talking down there the other day, when they gave me this new grant formula, I said, "That is too deep for me; break it down into percentages. Here is one project at an estimated cost of $160,000, and they voted bonds and they are ready to go ahead." That is one of the finest towns in the country. But they were hard hit—all banks closed for 3 years. I said, "What would it amount to in percentage of Federal grant on that project under the new formula?" He said, "Well, it is 6 to 10 percent."

That would be twelve or fifteen thousand on that $160,000 project, whereas they were working on the theory that they would get over 70,000 on the 45–55 grant and loan proposition.

W. P. A. has done some very good work. I have seen many beautiful projects under the plan by which they built things in units. They are limited in amount to 25,000 on a project, which is as big a project as W. P. A. can build, but some projects can be built in units. Now it looks like they are out of the picture so far as building construction is concerned.

There is quite a movement on in Congress, with much backing in the country, for a big Federal appropriation for education. There has been a bill introduced providing for an appropriation of a billion dollars on a 5-year program, with $100,000,000 for the first year and an increase of $50,000,000 a year each year up to the fifth year. But it looks like under the economy drive that is out of the picture. The last proposition I have seen along that line is that they were going to cut that amount to $25,000,000 the first year, and it may go out altogether.

So it looks like P. W. A. should at least be permitted to carry on this school-building aid. They have put schools in hundreds of localities over the United States that would not have had them except for the P. W. A. I think all of this work has been beneficial, including waterworks, sewers, and drainage work, bridges, auditoriums, and everything of that character. I have not seen any wasteful type of P. W. A. work.

Mr. LUDLOW. Do you think the P. W. A. aid has been distributed equitably throughout the country?

Mr. MARTIN. I think it has been.

Mr. WOODRUM. Your bill, H. R. 5943, if enacted, would not make these funds available in view of the Executive order.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand that that is only a bill to extend the life of the agency; it does not involve an appropriation.

Mr. WOODRUM. It does not involve a change in policy?

Mr. MARTIN. No. I would feel the bill might be amended if the life of the activity is to be extended, and I think it ought to be; and if it is, we ought to have some hope that what is needed will be added.

Mr. LUDLOW. If the life of the activity is not extended, what would be your idea as to a similar alternative liquidating agency?

Mr. MARTIN. I have not given any thought to that.

Mr. SNYDER. Did I understand you to say you think it would be all right to comply with the application already accepted and then shut them off so they would not accept any new applications?

Mr. MARTIN. I would pick that as the last of two evils, if I have to be hung on either horn of the dilemma.

Mr. TABER. Do you believe it is desirable to balance the Budget?

Mr. MARTIN. I will say this: I would be in favor of balancing the Budget, if I could do the balancing.

I am a good deal like your esteemed colleague the minority leader. He said he would be in favor of another economy act if it was properly administered.

I would be in favor of balancing the Budget, if I could do the balancing. It does not work out evenly. I think it eventually ought to be drawn to a balance, although I am not as excited about that as I might be when I reflect that the national income of this country in 1932 was only $38,000,000,000, while last year it was sixty billion, which is at least seven times more than any pump priming came to on the part of the Federal Government last year.

Every corporation in the country is virtually making as much money as it did before. I am not so sure that we could not collect a little more than we are collecting. It is a serious thing having people, municipalities, and school districts all through the country feel that they have been misled and did not get a square deal, and the worst part of it—who can they take it out on?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] told the whole story on this. This is an old picture. We had it last year. No one would be quicker than I to vote for $300,000,000 increase in this bill for P. W. A.—not allocation but increase to help the building trades in the United States, who have a 30-hour week under the P. W. A., and who get decent, prevailing rates of wages. But when you allocate $300,000,000 out of this $1,500,000,000, you are taking it away from the men who have four or five children, men who are not building-trades men, who are not bricklayers or masons, men who are not members of the building trades, but many are union men. You take it away from the widow, the seamstress, who cannot get a job any place else. They talk about boondoggling. Boondoggling under Harry Hopkins means taking care of the poor people in the United States who cannot get any money in any other way except by so-called boondoggling. If that is boondoggling, I am for it. [Applause.]

As I say, if they want to add $300,000,000 for P. W. A. to this bill, I am for it. I am for the building trades; I am for the men who get decent wages. I am for the 30-hour week; but I do not believe in taking it away from men with five or six children, men who are not building-trades men, but who need that money to support their families just as much as the building-trades men. When you take $300,000,000 away and allocate it to the building trades, those are the men and women you are taking it from. I am in favor of $300,000,000 additional, but I am not in favor of allocating $300,000,000 and taking it away from the poor people now on relief.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I only have a few minutes.

Mr. BEITER. The building trades have endorsed this amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. Of course anybody will endorse an amendment that will give them jobs.

Mr. BEITER. There are over 40 percent of skilled laborers unemployed.

Mr. CONNERY. But there are many others. For instance, members of the musicians' union and other unions who do not belong to the building trades, who have children to feed just as well as the building-trades men.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MILLS. Is it not a fact that if we come back here next year and we find people are in destitute circumstances we can pass a bill authorizing additional appropriations?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; but you cannot get a deficiency passed, because you passed an amendment the other day on this bill preventing the W. P. A. from getting additional funds when these are gone. You will be short of funds. Wait until you get back home and find the people hollering "Why cannot I get some money for relief?" It is because of that amendment that you passed the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, without desiring to tire the Committee unduly, I would like to state an experience that I had yesterday morning. It was in connection with contacting P. W. A. authorities, when it was learned that every bit of labor for any of these projects that are now granted must come from W. P. A. rolls. In addition to that, the borrowing community, or community to be benefited, must put up 100 percent of the cost of the project that is authorized under Public Works Administration since the ruling of April 24. In addition to that, having undertaken to put up this money they are confronted with the proposition of having the Government give them, instead of 45 percent as they expected, only 15 percent, which may be used to retire a part of the bonds.

One such hardship as is worked on the communities was what brought me to the P. W. A. authorities yesterday. They made their application on March 17 and held a special election on March 23; they went along until the 1st of May to be turned down, after a bond issue had been authorized on the expectation of getting 45 percent. It is now absolutely impossible to raise additional funds to meet the new order. Approximately $7,000 will have been wasted, on surveys, engineering, and the special election which authorized the bond issue. I appeal to you my colleagues, is there not a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government, toward this and all other communities similarly embarrassed?

I hope the Committee will support this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the arguments as to the different communities which have voted bonds and have asked for P. W. A. funds. I am for the P. W. A. program, but let us find out who is at fault. We appropriated certain funds for the P. W. A. Those in charge must have known how much they had to expend. Did they deliberately go out to those communities and mislead the communities into putting over their bond issues beyond the amount of money they had appropriated to them?

Mr. BEITER. I can answer that.

Mr. HOOK. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman has his time.

Now, let us find out whether this same organization, if they are allotted this $300,000,000, is going out and mislead some more communities into issuing more bonds when they know they do not have the funds to complete the projects. I believe as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] that if we are going to appropriate money for the P. W. A., let us increase the amount of this bill. Let us take care of the unemployed and relieve the people of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, under the law as it stands today the Public Works Administration goes out of existence on June 30. We have pending before the Appropriations Committee now a bill dealing with the question of whether the life of P. W. A. shall be extended and if so under what circumstances. We have had hearings and our distinguished colleague from New York appeared before us and presented his views. Just as soon as the relief bill is out of the way that bill will be brought out for your consideration and for you to do with it as you please; but as it stands today this activity goes out of existence on June 30. This amendment, however, seeks to set aside $300,000,000 for an organization that goes out of existence before the funds will become available. Not only that, but P. W. A. still has $150,000,000 or $160,000,000 unobligated and unallocated, and they cannot use a penny of it. Why? Because there is an Executive order saying that the money cannot be used on any project unless 100 percent relief labor is used, and Mr. Ickes and his associates testified that under the circumstances not a single one of your projects could be considered. So it is useless to make money available to the P. W. A. unless the effect of the Executive order is changed by law.

We are going to bring you legislation in a few days affecting the Public Works Administration. It will be brought in under such circumstances that you can consider it and do with it as you please, but I ask you not to load up this bill with amendments that mean nothing. Setting aside $300,000,000 or $500,000,000 for P. W. A. would mean absolutely nothing, for this agency goes out of existence by operation of law on June 30, and as things stand they cannot spend the balance of the money they have, $150,000,000 or $160,000,000, because the President has said he did not want it to go to projects unless they employed relief labor.

The pending bill is a relief bill, not a bill to relieve the buildings-trade industry, as the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts pointed out. I ask you gentlemen today, and you my colleagues on this side, do you realize the fact that we are here step by step stripping the President of his authority in the relief program? I do not care whether it is $1,000,000,000, or $1,500,000,000, or $2,000,000,000; whatever it is, we have given it to the President and given him authority to handle it. I appeal to you gentlemen not to destroy this bill by loading it up with this sort of allocation.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman inform us whether the proposed bill extending the life of W. P. A. will carry an appropriation for that agency?

Mr. WOODRUM. Whether this proposed bill will have in it an appropriation will be for the House to say. The committee has not done anything except to hold hearings. I may say that we were interrupted in our consideration of that bill by bringing up the relief bill and reporting it out.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado rose.

Mr. WOODRUM. We have had hearings; they have been printed and are available. Our distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] appeared before us, and other Members of Congress. I see our distinguished friend from Colorado on his feet. He appeared before us, too, and made a very enlightening and helpful statement, as he always does, and I now yield to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the graciousness of the gentleman from Virginia so overwhelms me that it has taken me three-quarters of my time to catch my breath. Does his committee contemplate bringing in a program for the extension of P. W. A. that will carry an appropriation with it?

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to my friend that the first consideration is whether or not we can pass legislation taking down the barriers to this $150,000,000, but all matters in connection with P. W. A. can be ironed out when the bill reaches the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the time has been fixed. I hope the gentleman will not press his request. There must be an end to this.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 172, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state that there are some 20 amendments pending at the desk. In the regular order the Chair would next recognize the gentleman from New York on an amendment which pertains to the subject matter of the last amendment.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Page 3, after line 24, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"In order to maintain or increase employment by providing for useful public-works projects of the kind and character for which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (hereinafter called the Administrator) has heretofore made loans or grants pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is hereby continued until June 30, 1939, and the funds hereinbefore allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be used for the making of loans or grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects, and in addition thereto the Administrator is hereby authorized to use funds on hand which have accrued from the sale of securities and funds which will be received from the sale of securities for the making of loans or grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects: Provided, That after the effective date of this act no allotment shall be made for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works prior to the effective date of this act: Provided further, That no part of the sum made available by this paragraph shall be loaned or granted for any project unless, in the determination of the Administrator, the completion thereof can be substantially accomplished prior to July 1, 1939, and adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied through the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works: Provided further, That this limitation upon time shall not apply to any project enjoined in any Federal or State court: Provided further, That any grant hereafter made by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works to aid in the financing of any project for which an allotment was recommended on a 45-percent grant basis by the examining divisions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and for which bonds have been voted or funds otherwise secured by the project sponsor to finance 55 percent of the project cost prior to the effective date of this act shall be 45 percent of the project cost: Provided further, That any grant hereafter made by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works to aid in the financing of any project for which the initial allotment is made after the effective date of this act, and for which no bonds have been voted or funds otherwise secured by the project sponsor as specified in the foregoing provision shall be 20 percent of the cost of such project, plus an amount equal to the amount paid in salaries or wages to workers employed on such project who have been certified as being in need of relief by the Works Progress Administration or any agency or agencies designated by it: Provided further, That for the purpose of determining the total earned grant on any project the Administrator shall exclude the cost of work, materials, or services which have not been, in his opinion, performed or supplied in accordance with the terms and conditions of the financing agreement between the Government and the grantee. The Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, approved June 1934, as supplemented by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, is hereby amended by striking out from the paragraph authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase securities from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works the colon and the following: 'Provided, That the amount that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may have invested at any one time in such securities shall not exceed $250,000,000', and inserting in lieu thereof a period. The Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, is hereby amended by striking out the words 'in connection with the liquidation' in the provision relating to administrative expenses of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and in addition to the funds made available for administrative expenses, in said act, the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $10,000,000 of the funds allocated in this joint resolution for administrative expenses during the fiscal year 1938."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. The amendment as read differs from the amendment printed in the RECORD, but, as I have been able to follow its reading from a copy handed me by the gentleman from New York, it appears that the amendment goes very much beyond the scope of the purposes of the relief act under consideration. In the first place, it undertakes to extend the life of the Public Works Administration to June 30, 1939, beyond the scope of the present act. In the second place, it amends the Relief Acts of 1935 and 1936 by changing the powers of the Reconstruction Corporation; it amends the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, approved June 1934, as supplemented by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936. In the third place, it amends the independent offices appropriation bill for 1938, which has not yet become a law.

I think the whole purpose of this amendment is an effort to revive an agency that expires by operation of law and to extend its powers, and to amend other acts not in any way connected with the subject matter under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] desire to be heard?

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Chair will be fair in its decision on this amendment in view of the decision it made last Friday in connection with a point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS]. The gentleman from Illinois at that time raised the point of order that the amendment was not proper because it was legislation on an appropriation bill. At that time the Chair stated:

The bill in question is not a general appropriation bill; therefore clause no. 2 of rule XXI does not apply.

And the Chair then overruled the point of order.

The amendment I have offered is legislation, but this is not an appropriation bill. In view of the Chair's decision of last Friday, I ask the Chair to overrule the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman submits a very interesting analysis but mistakes the point at issue. It is not a question of legislation but a question of germaneness. It is true that the amendment proposes changes in law but these proposed changes are in laws which are not affected by this bill. The amendment, therefore, is not germane to the pending bill and is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York does not in any wise come within the ruling of the Chair made last Friday. The ruling then made pertained to a point of order made as to legislation on this bill. The Chair stated at that time that this was not a general appropriation bill; therefore, the rule pertaining to legislation on an appropriation bill did not apply.

As the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has just stated, this is not a question of legislation but a question of germaneness, and that is the test to be applied to this amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] in addition to providing for many matters, provides for extension of the Public Works Administration, an agency of the Government not carried in this bill, and handled heretofore by other legislation. The amendment also pertains to certain powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, about which there is nothing in this bill. As the gentleman from Virginia has pointed out, it also pertains to certain provisions of the independent offices appropriation bill, still pending in the Congress.

Because of the fact the amendment attempts to extend an agency of the Government not covered by this bill and yet to be handled by the Congress, the Chair feels the amendment is not germane to this bill and sustains the point of order.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment pertaining to this same matter, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Page 3, after line 24, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"In order to maintain or increase employment by providing for useful public-works projects of the kind and character for which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (hereinafter called the Administrator) has heretofore made loans and grants pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the funds hereinbefore allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be used for the making of loans and grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects, and in addition thereto the Administrator is hereby authorized to use funds on hand which have accrued from the sale of securities and funds which will be received from the sale of securities, for the making of loans or grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects in accordance with existing law. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $10,000,000 of the funds allocated in this joint resolution for administrative expenses."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this amendment. The amendment, of course, seeks to assume that there is or will be if and when this becomes law a Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. It is stated:

The Administrator is hereby authorized to use funds on hand—

And so forth, and that the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is authorized to use not to exceed $10,000,000 of the funds allocated in this joint resolution.

There will be no Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works when this act becomes law on July 1, as the law now stands. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works expires on June 1 and there will be no Administration on July 1 unless subsequent to this date the Congress takes action. We cannot assume by amending this law that at a subsequent time Congress is going to set up such authority. Therefore this is allocating to an agency which will not be in existence the authority to use part of these funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The only objectionable feature of this amendment from the standpoint of germaneness is the authorization of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works to use funds "from the sale of securities." The contention of the gentleman from Virginia that the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works may not be continued does not apply to this bill because it is effective immediately and is not held up until the 1st of July.

By reason of the fact that this amendment, while it does not continue the Public Works Administration, does pertain to the use of funds from the sale of securities, about which nothing is contained in the pending bill, the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment pertaining to the same subject matter, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 3, after line 24, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"In order to maintain or increase employment by providing for useful public-works projects of the kind and character for which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (hereinafter called the Administrator) has heretofore made loans and grants pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the funds hereinbefore allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be used for the making of loans and grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects, and for the making of loans or grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects in accordance with existing law. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $10,000,000 of the funds allocated in this joint resolution for administrative expenses."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I renew my previous point of order to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

In view of the previous ruling of the Chair and due to the fact this amendment eliminates the provision as to the use of funds from the sale of securities, the Chair overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides a method by which the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works may administer the fund allocated by the amendment passed a few moments ago.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. BEITER. The amendment further provides a working capital with which the Administration can carry on its functions. It impounds the $131,000,000 in the revolving fund, so that it cannot be taken away from them and given to some other agency. The supporting amendment ties up this amount. I hope the members of the committee will support the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman tell me, if this amendment is adopted, how much money will be available to the Public Works Administration?

Mr. BEITER. Four hundred and thirty-one million dollars—$300,000,000 through the amendment which has just been adopted and $131,000,000 which is in the revolving fund. With this $431,000,000 there will be sufficient funds to take care of all the projects approved to date.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. On the basis of 45-percent grants?

Mr. BEITER. No; only the projects where they have had bond elections will be given 45-percent grants on this basis. However, if the law is extended as it is at the present time, they may be permitted to receive a 45-percent grant. A point of order was sustained against the perfecting amendment which I offered. Therefore, when the bill providing for extending the authority of this agency is reported, we will offer the amendment to make it a 45-percent grant.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand that if the Committee adopts the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Florida, no Executive order on the part of the President will keep the Government from going ahead and fulfilling the obligations it has contracted insofar as bond issues are concerned?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not believe there is anything in this amendment which would prevent the administration of the Executive order as first contemplated.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not a fact that if this amendment is agreed to, with the money in here, not one penny can be used on P. W. A. contracts unless the President's Executive order is changed?

Mr. CALDWELL. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Then it amounts to nothing?

Mr. BEITER. It amounts to this: Insofar as the balance of $131,000,000 is concerned, it cannot be taken away from the Public Works Administration. However, there is now a bill pending in the Appropriations Committee providing for the continuance of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works until June 30, 1939, and I propose to offer an amendment to that bill when it is reported out which will specifically provide that funds will be allotted on 45-percent grant and 55-percent loan basis as heretofore in those cases where bond elections have been held or funds otherwise secured by communities. In other words, I propose to protect those communities where project applications were submitted and accepted on the assumption that a 45-percent grant would be forthcoming. The Government has a moral obligation to these municipalities; we cannot let them down. From what I have gathered from Members of this House sentiment is overwhelmingly for this proposal.

The Executive order to which the gentleman from Virginia makes reference is unfair to these communities and should be changed. The House can correct this by amending the bill authorizing the extension of the P. W. A. agency which will later come before us to specifically provide on what basis loans and grants can be made in the future. I believe this explains the situation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we should have a picture of the situation in front of us as we approach a vote upon this amendment. What is the history of the situation which confronts us?

A year ago, when the 1936 so-called Emergency Relief Act was passed, a revolving fund of $300,000,000 was set up. Out of that, funds were allocated by the Administrator of Public Works, down through election. Very soon after election an order was issued by the President, the bill having served its purpose, that no further allocations should be made except those involving a percentage of relief labor of approximately 95 percent. I do not have in my head the exact figures, but this is approximately it. Publicity was not given to this regulation when it was promulgated, and was not given to it until about 2 or 3 weeks ago. Therefore, all these municipalities went ahead and held special elections and arranged for bond issues for which they could not get allotments. The P. W. A. did not disabuse them of their belief in regard to that situation. It did not tell them no allotments would be made to them because they could not comply with the regulations as to relief labor. Now you are going ahead here proposing to provide funds which can or cannot be allocated by the President, or by whomever he directs, to these projects. The President has shown his purpose, regarding what he proposes to do; that is, the P. W. A. having served its purpose, right after election he changed the rule, so the funds are not now available. If you go along with this, you will run up against just the same kind of rigamarole you did before, because this is not an election year.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Awhile ago the gentleman referred to various slum-clearance projects in a way which led me to believe he was against the proposal of slum clearance.

Mr. TABER. I am against the idea of going ahead and spending $10,000 or $15,000 to provide quarters for one family, and letting the poor people of this country be taxed to support one group of people in luxury, while other people are having hard work making a living. I do not believe in that way of doing business. I do not believe the gentleman would be for it if he would go into the situation and realize what kind of a proposition he is supporting. [Applause.]

And you know we were told by the P. W. A. when they were before the Appropriations Committee that the Government was to charge off 45 percent of the cost of these houses and that they were to be leased on a basis to yield depreciation at 3-percent interest on 55 percent of the cost, plus repairs. The interest on the 55 percent of the cost of these Harlem houses runs approximately $69,700. The lease is made on a basis of $69,062 a year. The depreciation on a 60-year projected life of the buildings runs about $39,000. The lease appears to be on a basis of $39,000 less than we were told the property must lease for. This is a fair sample of the way the outfit you are asked to trust with $300,000,000 operates. And yet, under this amendment the operation can take place.

There is now available to the President to allot for the construction of schoolhouses, local buildings, and sewers, $145,000,000. This item will be available through the 30th day of June next. But he will not allot it because election is over. He will not allot it if you pass this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 154, noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTWRIGHT: On page 3, between lines 18 and 19, insert:

"Of the amount specified for highways, roads, and streets, not less than $75,000,000 shall be allocated for the survey and construction of public highways on the Federal-aid highway system and not less than $50,000,000 for the survey and construction of secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, rural free-delivery mail roads, and public-school bus routes. Such sums shall be apportioned in the manner provided by section 204 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act for expenditure by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented. Not less than $25,000,000 shall be allocated for the survey and construction of projects for the elimination of hazards to life at railroad grade crossings, on the Federal-aid highway system and elsewhere, including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of existing railroad grade crossing structures, and the relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings, and shall be apportioned and expended in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 16, 1936, entitled 'An act to amend the Federal Highway Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.' No part of the funds apportioned to any State or Territory under this paragraph need be matched by the State or Territory. The President shall prescribe rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this paragraph."

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this body has shown this afternoon a decided disposition to earmark funds in the pending bill. It appears that Congress has finally decided to have something to say about how funds that it appropriates shall be spent. [Applause.] May I say that I have offered this amendment to earmark $150,000,000 for roads, believing that in no other possible manner can money be spent to a better advantage.

Inasmuch as I have been allotted only 10 minutes' time, I ask that I may be permitted to speak without interruption.

As chairman of the Committee on Roads, I am naturally interested in earmarking a reasonable amount of relief money for roads to be spent through the State highway departments. I am convinced that this is the best way to spend the people's money. It is better safeguarded and there is less criticism over money spent for roads than any other form of relief. About 87 percent goes into labor—directly and indirectly.

The Roads Committee discussed the advisability of earmarking these funds at a full committee meeting, and I appointed a subcommittee consisting of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], to investigate and report to the full committee. After carefully weighing the relevant facts and circumstances, and after going into every phase of the situation, they reported back with a resolution that the full committee go on record for earmarking $150,000,000, or 10 percent of the one and one-half billion dollars in the relief bill.

Anticipating the report of the subcommittee and the action of the full committee, I had prepared the amendment which I have just offered.

The full committee adopted the subcommittee's report, and I was authorized to appear before the Appropriations Committee and ask that they accept the amendment, and, in the event that we were too late for the Appropriations Committee, I was instructed to present this amendment on the floor of the House. I hastened to the Appropriations Committee and on arriving there I found that committee reporting out the relief bill which is before you today and that I was too late. I then conferred with the honorable and distinguished chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. WOODRUM], who is in charge of the bill, who courteously assured us of every opportunity to present our claim on the floor. So we are here and feel confident of the outcome.

I give you this background in order to show you that this is not merely my idea but that in presenting this amendment I have the unanimous support of the Roads Committee, and judging from the correspondence which I have been receiving it is the sentiment of the whole Nation that this amount be earmarked for roads, as provided in this amendment. [Applause.]

The amendment sets out $75,000,000 to be expended on Federal-aid roads, $50,000,000 on secondary, feeder, and farm-to-market roads, rural free delivery roads, and school bus routes, and $25,000,000 on the elimination of hazardous grade crossings.

This money will be expended under the supervision of the State highway departments, the projects approved by the Bureau of Public Roads, and regulations can provide for the fullest possible use of relief labor. That should satisfy all. By expending it in this manner and under this arrangement, the State highway departments will select the projects to be constructed, and certainly no one can claim that the W. P. A. or any other agency is in a better position to judge or more competent to select road projects than are the State highway commissions, with the approval of the Bureau of Public Roads.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. HOOK. I have noticed the chart which the gentleman has placed in the RECORD. Will the gentleman explain on what basis the funds are distributed to the different States?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. That is a very fair question. I may say that the basis on which the funds are allocated is seven-eighths public aid and one-eighth population as under the N. R. A. Act, section 204, which is referred to in the amendment. For the elimination of dangerous railroad crossings the allocation is one-half population, one-fourth mileage Federal aid, and one-fourth mileage of railroads.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I gladly yield to the my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Roads recently placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement showing what each State will receive under his amendment.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I thank the gentleman for calling attention of Members to that. That information can be found on page 6427 in the Appendix of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 21. Incidentally Oklahoma will receive $3,490,000 under my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we should give a blank check to any bureau or individual. [Applause.] I think that we, as Congressmen who come from the "grass roots", know more about what the people of our respective districts want and need than one man or any bureau chief in Washington. [Applause.]

Our highway system is not finished. Our total road mileage in round numbers is more than 3,000,000. More than 2,000,000 of those miles are unimproved as against 1,000,000 miles of roads that are improved and only 175,000 miles of which are hard surfaced. So you see we have merely scratched the surface in road building.

The trunk highway systems of the 48 States need completing. Inferior and faulty roads must be reconstructed to meet safety standards. Thousands of miles of light-traffic and farm-to-market roads must be built.

Rural sections need improved roads. The lack of good year-round, all-weather, farm-to-market roads is greatly retarding agriculture. This is the place where we can help the farmer. The farmer must have good and safe roads over which to haul his produce to market. Forty-two percent of all our farms are on mud roads and more than 5,000,000 motor vehicles are on the farms of the Nation and farmers use 26 percent of all trucks in operation today.

The building of much-needed secondary roads will also expedite the delivery of rural mail. Total R. F. D. mail-route mileage in the United States is 1,359,840, half of which is unimproved.

Added highway construction will also promote educational progress. There are 17,000 consolidated rural schools, operating 70,000 busses over 700,000 miles of highways, carrying more than 2,500,000 children, each and every day of the school year. Additional good and safe roads are urgently needed to carry these precious loads.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Oklahoma asks for 2 additional minutes, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. We have other advantages, my friends, by having this money expended this way. The State highway departments have technical advisers, experienced supervisors, projects already approved, and machinery set and ready to go.

The administrative organization for the expenditure of this $150,000,000, namely, the United States Bureau of Public Roads, and the State highway departments are equipped to handle this expenditure practically without additional expense.

This statement is made to refute a suggestion which has been made that administration or accounting offices would have to be set up in the various States for the expenditure of this money, at a cost of several million dollars. That is bunk. [Applause.]

The present administrative set-up has adequately handled over a billion dollars of emergency Federal road money since the relief work started, with a minimum of engineering and administrative expense—about 1.2 percent.

What is more impressive is the fact that the State highway departments are better organized today than they were 4 years ago and are in a position to take care of more work with greater efficiency than ever before in the history of highway building.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope this amendment is incorporated in the relief bill. I do not see how anyone can object to this money being equitably distributed among the States. We are asking no increase in appropriations, nor do the States have to match. We believe it is just a matter of getting the most for the people's money that will be spent, anyway.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, it should be a source of great satisfaction to all to realize that funds expended for good roads not only give employment in practically every county in the United States but add to the permanent wealth of every community. The work is being supervised with economy and integrity, which should be a source of great satisfaction to the taxpayers as well as all high-minded citizens. I hope and trust this amendment prevails. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM and several other Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the chairman of the subcommitee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLELLAN and Mr. WOLCOTT and several other Members reserved the right to object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the Chair will recognize the distinguished gentleman from Missouri under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Would the committee have the right to close the debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Surely. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that all debate upon the amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes?

Several Members rose, reserving the right to object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20 of the Cartwright amendment, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in the construction of secondary or feeder roads and farm-to-market roads preference shall be given in employment to farmers owing the Federal Government for feed and seed loans made under authority of Congress."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is merely to give preference in the construction of secondary and farm-to-market roads to farmers who owe the Government for feed and seed loans. It is very much needed out in the drought area and I appeal to this generous majority to adopt the amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN and several other Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, we have seen here this afternoon a very good sign. Again Congress is willing and ready to assert its authority and its prerogatives. You know we have been spending a lot of money. Within 2 or 3 months after I came to Congress the $4,800,000,000 relief bill came up for consideration. I supported it then with some reservation. Conditions were different then from now. We have come a long ways from the emergency and distress of that hour, and I think now it is time for Congress to begin to select some of the projects upon which this money shall be expended. I heard the distinguished chairman of the committee in charge of this bill make the statement on the floor this afternoon that any earmarking of these funds is taking relief money away from those who are suffering today. I deny that. There are only two ways to provide relief. One is by an outright dole and the other is by providing jobs for those who are unemployed. I for one favor giving them jobs, and giving them jobs on something worth while. I challenge the chairman of the committee or any other Member of this House today to lay down any other program more extensive, more comprehensive, more worth while and more lasting than the three classes of projects we are voting amendments for here this afternoon. The first is for flood control, which is the need of the Nation today. The second is for more schoolhouses, which makes substantial contribution to education and the youth of America; and the third, that which this amendment provides, is for more and better roads, and there is no better way to meet the distress of this Nation than by providing jobs for the able-bodied on construction work of this character.

These three amendments earmarking these funds should be approved. The money will be expended under the regular and permanent agencies of the State and Federal Governments, and I think we can get better results in that way than we can by expending all these funds through emergency set-ups. Let me tell you something else. In most instances we are accorded the best of treatment and very courteous consideration by the various departmental chiefs, but there are exceptions, and I dislike to see Members of Congress vote appropriations and sign blank checks, and then have to go beg of some subordinate for a little bit of the money for a work project in his own district. I am tired of it. [Applause.] We are the representatives chosen to express the will of the taxpayers of this Nation, and my people want flood control, better schools, and improved roads, and I propose to exert every influence I have here to spend money for the purposes that they approve.

No; this amendment will not wreck the relief program. Listen to this! Secretary Wallace in a national hook-up radio address, speaking on the subject of roads on May 11 this year, said:

Road building is one of the best ways to spend Federal money in time of depression to take care of unemployment in a way to prime the pump and get things going again.

And further said:

Yes; roads undoubtedly rank with C. C. C. camps as one of the best ways of meeting unemployment in time of depression.

We are not wrecking the program. We are providing employment to the greatest number possible on worth-while projects of substantial value, and distributing this relief money equitably. Every Member should join with us in this fight to earmark these funds and thus assume the responsibility of saying how relief funds shall be spent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York to the amendment offered by Mr. CARTWRIGHT: In line 9 of the amendment strike out "$25,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the fact that this is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, in a great many municipalities today grade crossings are simply human slaughterhouses. I have many in my district, and I have no doubt that other Members have many dangerous grade crossings in their districts. The fast trains are making better time each year. The streamline trains will soon increase the grade-crossing hazards. In some communities 40 or 50 people have been wiped out at these railroad crossings and within a comparatively short time.

When the previous relief bill was under consideration, I addressed the House urging that a sum be earmarked in sufficient amount to enable many of the localities where these crossings are a menace to get rid of them. Here is an opportunity to do so, but $25,000,000 is not enough. You will remember the terrible accident at Rockville, Md. The next morning the President issued a statement that he proposed to eliminate all the dangerous grade crossings in the country. We voted the money, but comparatively little was done about it. The cause of the tragedy at Rockville has not been removed. If Congress were to have its way, these death traps would be eliminated.

That is the reason I have offered this amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, the amendment being an amendment in the third degree.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] for 2 minutes.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, objection was made to earmarking this bill this afternoon, because it would do away with the relief program. I submit to the fairness of this House that the amendment now pending to provide for earmarking for road work certainly will do as much as any other kind of projects for the relief program. A large amount of the cost of roads is in the labor. It does not require that the labor be skilled, and every community can furnish its quota.

The bill which is now before us recognizes highways, roads, and streets as projects that will give relief, but the trick in the bill is that it says "not exceeding $415,000,000 shall be used for highways, roads, and streets." Under the phrase "not exceeding", it is entirely within the discretion of the W. P. A. administration to say whether or not one dollar or one dime shall be given to road projects. This House recognizes the great benefit from feeder roads, farm-to-market roads, roads for school busses, and highways, and we have the right, and we should exercise our right, to earmark this bill, for these roads will be a permanent benefit to the country and will at the same time afford the greatest amount of work for relief labor.

I urge your support of the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, if there has been a practical suggestion offered in connection with this legislation it is the Cartwright amendment now pending before the Committee. That amendment is the fruition of investigation and consideration on the part of the Roads Committee of the House. It is not a guess proposition. We know how well Federal highway funds are expended, and, if there is one agency in the Government that functions efficiently and, as a rule, impartially, it is the Bureau of Public Roads. I feel sure that every State in the Union is willing to trust its highway officials to spend this relief money on the roads in the localities where it will do the most good and furnish the most relief to the unemployed.

This bill makes available to the President for relief purposes the coming year a total of $1,723,000,000; that is, the bill calls for a new appropriation of $1,500,000,000 and reappropriates an unexpended balance of $223,000,000. I am opposed to giving the President, or any other individual, the right to spend this vast amount of money without let or hindrance on the part of anyone. The bill gives the President practically unlimited authority. He may use the money for direct relief or for work relief, and he alone is the judge.

Much of the language in this bill follows the language in the last emergency relief bill. It seems to me the days of "emergency" are over. On page 2 of the bill we do designate certain amounts for certain projects. Some call this earmarking. Literally speaking, it is not earmarking, because the bill provides that not more than a certain amount shall be used for certain purposes. This should be more definite. I hope, before the bill is completed, that it will be amended so that every dollar, insofar as possible, must be expended in accordance with the desires of the Congress rather than at the whim and dictation of Mr. Harry Hopkins, or any other administrator.

One thing about the bill I do like, and that is an effort is made to make this appropriation suffice for the 12 months, and not permit the expenditure of the whole sum within a few months, with the sure result of requested deficiencies before the end of the year. Then again, only projects can be undertaken which can be completed within the appropriation.

Now I do not want to be placed in the position of opposing any amount necessary for relief, and I make no such opposition. If we have needy people who must be cared for by the Federal Government, then it is our duty to provide the means as long as our money lasts. There is a difference, however, between needed emergency relief and using for other purposes appropriations authorized for relief.

I have heretofore objected to giving these blank checks to the President, and I insist that my fears have been justified. The expenditure of relief money to harness the tides at Passamaquoddy Bay, the expenditure of relief money to build a canal across Florida, the expenditure of relief money to lay keels for new battleships, the expenditure of relief money to build new irrigation and power dams, illustrate exactly what I mean. These projects were not authorized by the Congress; in fact, many of them were rejected by the Congress. Yet the Chief Executive, with this vast amount of money in his control, instituted, in the name of relief, these fabulous projects and undertakings, undoubtedly believing that once the projects were started and money tied up in them, it would be hard for Congress to refuse to continue appropriating funds for their completion.

This practice of the Congress making appropriations to be spent at the discretion of the President has gone about far enough, it seems to me. Do you realize that the discretionary appropriations made by the Congress between the years 1789 and 1933 amounted to but $1,687,000,000 and covered 30 administrations, while the blank checks given the Roosevelt administration in 4 short years total $15,428,000,000? It is time to call a halt. I am opposed to appropriating any large sums at this time without some earmarking and designation as to when and where the money is to be spent.

So far as the amount actually needed for relief during the coming year, that is a mere matter of conjecture. Mr. Hopkins guesses $1,500,000,000, and the President transmits that guess to Congress. The subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee considering this bill is the only agency, so far as I know, which has attempted to make any investigation as to the absolute necessities. The chairman of that subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is an outstanding leader of the New Deal in this body. At times I have violently disagreed with some of the New Deal philosophy with which he has gone along. I say "gone along" because I do not feel that I am reflecting at all upon the gentleman when I intimate that at times his loyalty to the President has compelled him to pursue a course other than that which he might have charted for himself.

There should be no partisanship in dealing with relief. Therefore, considering the loyalty of the gentleman from Virginia to the administration, considering the fact that he conducted the hearings before the subcommittee on this bill, and is undoubtedly one of the best-informed men in Washington as to how this relief has been expended in the past, I surely cannot be charged with partisanship if I call to your attention that when the gentleman addressed the House on Thursday last, he demonstrated that $1,000,000,000 and not $1,500,000,000 should be authorized by this bill. Among other things, the gentleman from Virginia said:

I shall endeavor to demonstrate to the House the fact that $1,000,000,000 will be a liberal allowance for the real relief. Not a liberal allowance if you are going to keep hanging on at the public trough all of the relief racketeers, all of the political appointees regardless of their merit; not a liberal allowance if you want to continue as a matter of Federal policy all the idealistic and socialistic experiments; not a liberal allowance if you want to continue publishing and have laid on your desks books and stacks of books printed by all of these relief agencies; but if you want money to help the destitute and needy American citizens, if it is administered in that way, $1,000,000,000 is a large amount and an adequate amount for that purpose.

Understand, these are not my words, but the words of a distinguished New Deal leader from Virginia. He wants to furnish every dollar of relief necessary, but he has a heart for the people who must pay the bills. He has gone the limit to help the destitute and the needy.

What the gentleman from Virginia said was most forcibly reenforced and supported by that other outstanding Democrat, the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, Judge MCREYNOLDS, who said, in part:

I say we should stand by this subcommittee. No man is better qualified to do the job of investigation, or as a man on this floor to fight the battles of the President of the United States, than the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and you know it.

I could continue indefinitely calling to your attention the testimony given in this debate by outstanding Democrats in opposition to the $1,500,000,000 appropriation. I do want to quote this statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD]:

It costs the taxpayer $172.80 to have $660 transferred from the blank check Congress has given Mr. Hopkins to the man on relief. This is not in reality a bill for the benefit of the needy. This is a bill to relieve the taxpayer of his money for the benefit of those who are not needy—for those who receive the $172.80 spread. They are the profiteers of relief.

That much of the relief money during the last 4 years has been recklessly and improvidently spent is, I think, denied by no one, and the time has come when this spending must cease. Maybe it was all right to try to prime the pump for a time, but we cannot continue this policy. We now have a national debt approximating $36,000,000,000. Of course, we cannot comprehend what this vast sum means, but we can reduce it to figures that we can understand. Prior to the World War our national debt was $13 for each man, woman, and child. At the close of the World War our national debt was up to $240 per capita. Then during the 10 years between 1920 and 1930, while our taxes were reduced five times, our per-capita debt was also reduced to $130. The spending in the depression has increased the per-capita debt so that today every man, woman, and child in the United States owes approximately $271. As has been pointed out, that means $1,080 for every family of four.

Of course, no one knows the exact number of the unemployed today, but the best evidence I can get indicates that the number is somewhere between six and nine million. We are told in one breath that the emergency is past; that recovery is here. In the next breath we are still urged to make the usual appropriation for the unemployed. Why is it that the cost of relief for 1934 was $2,154,000,000 and that the estimated cost for 1938 is $2,420,000,000—$266,000,000 more under what we are told is recovery than in the darkest days of the depression? Something is wrong somewhere.

We must at last concede that we cannot spend ourselves into prosperity. We must face the fact that the relief dollars have not been providently used. How is this condition to be remedied? I am convinced that the present system is wrong. The matter of relief and care of our citizens in times of financial adversity has heretofore rested upon the local communities, and we all know that the task was well done. Neighborhood responsibility means much in a democracy. Neighborhood pride and friendship and good neighborliness on the part of our several communities have heretofore seen to it that there was no starvation in our midst. The recent world-wide depression was so stringent, so general, and so far reaching that some of these local communities were, for the time being, unable to give the help that was needed. As a result the Federal Government stepped in. No one thought for a minute that the Federal Government was in this field in a permanent way. The very legislation itself declared the contrary.

However, after 5 years of spending, we are still in the field of Federal relief, and Harry Hopkins, the Federal Relief Administrator, stated before the committee that it was his opinion that the Federal Government was in this activity to stay. Can it be possible that from now on to the end of time the Government at Washington is to provide relief to all of our local communities? I repudiate any such doctrine and condemn the statement of any emergency bureau chief who attempts in this way to carry on these bureaucratic activities. Where relief is necessary let us provide it, but let us get out of the business as soon as possible.

The folks back home have begun to realize that in the end all taxes come from themselves. Uncle Sam has no money other than that which he takes from the people in taxes. These taxpayers are now demanding that this spending be terminated, and that the communities be again asked to rely somewhat upon their own resources.

No one denies that there must be some Federal relief during the coming year. It is just a question as to how it is to be furnished. I believe that a vast majority of our people would prefer to have the administration of this relief returned to the States and the local communities. I believe that the States should contribute toward the relief. As to the amount, that is difficult to say, but no State in the Union today is unable to carry at least 25 percent of its relief burden for the next year. The Federal Government contributes to the building of good roads in every State, and this plan has worked well. This Federal money has been spent to the advantage of all our people. The supervision and overhead are taken care of by the States. The same principle should be applied to our relief problem. The Federal Government, if necessary, should contribute, but the States down through the channels to the county supervisors, and through the municipal authorities, should administer the funds provided. Of course, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, that will cut out a lot of political jobs. Just take your home State, your home county, and your home town, and, as a rule, you will find that those administering relief through W. P. A. are not on relief. Many cases have been cited here where those administering relief are holding other jobs—do not need assistance—but, because of political preferment, are favored at the expense of the fellow in real need, for whom Congress appropriated and for whom the taxpayer gives up his dollars. My attention was called today to a case where a State administrator is a trustee in the reorganization of a large corporation, for which he receives thousands of dollars a year, and, in addition, he is State administrator of W. P. A. at a salary of more than $4,000 a year. Now that $4,000 is charged up as "relief."

Who is there among us who does not realize that the best manner of handling relief in the city of New York, for instance, is vastly different than handling the same problem in a rural district in the State of Kansas? No Washington agency can possibly know as much about these local conditions as the people who live there and who are a part of the community. Then why not do away with this Washington supervision and expense, and turn over what relief money the Federal Government is going to contribute to the States, to be handled under State supervision?

I shall vote for every reasonable amendment offered to this bill to earmark this appropriation. The Congress must vote to raise the tax and the people expect the Congress to know where and how the money is spent. Of course, Mr. Hopkins, the Federal Administrator, as well as the President, does not want any interference on the part of the Congress. All they want is a signed check for a billion and a half dollars. So far in the consideration of this bill, the Congress—for the first time in months, even years—has shown some sign of returning independence. We have earmarked by amendment some of these funds so that worthy projects which have been approved by local communities, and which will furnish employment for the needy, will be sure to receive consideration. This is not boondoggling. Where the P. W. A. has promised grants to municipalities, these municipalities having complied with the terms of the grant, where schoolhouses and other worth-while things are undertaken—here are good ways to spend our relief money and give employment to those in the community out of employment. Of course, all relief work is expensive work and that is why we should get rid of it as soon as possible.

I have, within the last 2 days, received a large number of telegrams from villages, cities, and those interested in P. W. A. projects in my congressional district. I am sure all of these people favor the curtailing of public spending and the balancing of the Budget. However, the feeling has grown up in the land that Congress is going to continue to spend, and that it is just a question of every community getting its hand into the grab bag. For instance, at the village of Parma, Jackson County, Mich., as reported by the Parma News, they had a meeting the other night to discuss the possibility of getting a Federal grant in the construction of a water and sewer system. The principal speaker, the mayor of an adjoining city, among other things, said:

> It doesn't matter whether we like this type of Government relief or not, or whether we agree with the various set-ups—it is the order of the day and the money is going to be spent. The President is asking now for an additional billion and a half dollars for this type of work.
> You and your children and grandchildren are going to have to help pay back this money whether or not you get any of it for your community, or whether you like it. The money is being spent and if Parma doesn't get some of it and have something to show for the huge expenditures, other communities are going to do so.
> My advice to you is to go after several of these projects and have something tangible to show for the taxes you are going to have to pay.

Now that psychology must come to an end, and it is up to the Members of Congress to take the lead and make the people understand just what the situation is. Let us stand firm and if this bill goes to the Senate let it be so amended that as much as possible of the money will be used for the benefit of the people—those who pay the taxes as well as those receiving the relief. We are told that at present 39 percent of every relief dollar goes for administration, therefore the person intended to be helped gets but 61 percent. No such condition would prevail if the local authorities administered relief. If relief is necessary, it must be provided. The American people will approve the expenditure of the last dollar in our Treasury when required for honest relief, and by the same token they will and should drive from public life those who would waste the substance of the people in times like these.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY].

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, we have an opportunity here to authorize an appropriation of money for a worth-while project. The people in my district and out in the Great Plains section are sick and tired of appropriating money for all kinds of boondoggling jobs. Here we have got something worth while; something that will be of practical benefit to our farmers and to all those who use public roads. We have thrown away money on some of these big-building projects, such as the nearby Greenbelt project, where we have not received 50 cents on the dollar for our expenditure. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] this money will go to the various States and will be expended under State machinery, which will work in a real, practical way, so that we will get 100 cents on the dollar.

I am heartily in favor of the amendment. I am opposed to giving Harry Hopkins or anybody else a blank check to spend billions of dollars without this Congress knowing what it is going to be spent for. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment and congratulate the author of this amendment in the splendid way in which he has drawn it and the splendid way in which he has defended it. May I say for the benefit of those who have not been in Congress long that this amendment does not involve any new principle? The language of this amendment is well drawn. It is the same language that we have used in road bills for years, and nobody need have any fear in voting for it because it takes care of every class of roads and road improvements in the usual language.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to add my voice to that of those who support this amendment. [Applause.]

The history of the development of Government assistance is an interesting one. It is a gradual growth, as many other governmental participations have been. At first many of the States were vigorously opposed to any governmental participation for the reason that they maintained that the matter of road building was absolutely a matter for the States, and that the Government had no right to use its resources for road building. Gradually and principally with the coming of the automobile it became apparent that roads were being used more by people who did not live in the immediate community than by those who did live in the immediate community. This brought up the agitation in favor of compelling those who live in a wealthy, populous State should help maintain the roads in a State of large area but of small population and of poor appraisal values. At first the Federal Government was limited to main market roads and to a certain limit per mile. It was also limited according to three factors: First, population; second, area; and third, number of miles of roads in the State. When we came to draw the National Industrial Recovery Act, we of the Ways and Means Committee added a paragraph to the law providing $400,000,000 for a road-building program.

The law provided that this money should be allocated to the States in the following proportion: First, the first 12½ percent should be divided among the States according to population; and the remainder, 87½ percent, should be divided among the States on the basis of population, road mileage, and area, as I have already stated. We who had for years been making a fight to have a part of the Federal contribution used for county roads had a provision placed in this bill to the effect that "not more than 25 percent" should be used for county roads, such as school bus routes and rural mail routes. When they came to make the allocations they paid no heed in many States to this provision, for it was a maximum provision, and they could refuse to use any of this money for that class of roads and still it would be "not more than 25 percent." The following year in the next session of Congress we went after this matter in earnest and changed the law to read "not less than 25 percent" should be used on these county roads. We were again thwarted by those interests which were primarily interested in heavy road construction and who were not interested in the improvement of county roads. They were able to win their points with the State highway directors in many States. They adopted a very simple plan to defeat this program. You will note that the language of this amendment provides for school bus routes and rural mail routes. Of course, school routes and mail routes emanate frequently from large towns and oftentimes from large cities. They maintained that those portions of the highways near the cities and towns were part of rural mail routes and school bus routes and consequently were entitled to receive improvements from this 25-percent fund. Although this was clearly contrary to the spirit of this law, yet the highway directors in many States winked at the spirit of the law and permitted these high-powered roadmen to thwart our plan. We have kept after this plan just as we are doing here today, and I am glad to say that we have whipped them out in many States. We must eternally keep on our guard, however. We have shown the country rural people what we have been doing, and they are rallying to our support. If you will permit a personal allusion, I can say that this whole movement originated in my district out of the agitation of a strong, intelligent organization of rural mail carriers assisted by a very intelligent county engineer. I have always been proud of the way Congress has assisted us in this fight. I know this amendment will pass by an overwhelming vote. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of all relief legislation is to give employment. I call the attention of the Members to the testimony of Mr. MacDonald, not only a very estimable gentleman, but a very efficient head of the Bureau of Public Roads. In testifying before the Roads Committee as to the amount of employment provided by the building of highways he told us that after the distribution of profits, interest, rents, and depletion that $910 of every $1,000 goes for salaries and wages. If there is any question or doubt in your minds as to whether we should do away with administrative costs in the giving of this relief, I think this is one of the best arguments that could be used as to why this amendment should be adopted. This does not increase the appropriation. The States will not have to match it. It is the unanimous opinion of the Roads Committee that this amendment should be adopted.

I call the Members' attention to page 6427 of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last Friday, on which is a table showing the amount which each of the States will receive in allocation for these three purposes if this amendment is accepted. Let me call attention to a few of them. Under the plan of this amendment we know that relief is going to be given to this amount. It is not a matter of whether the Administrator of Public Works or W. P. A. wants to give it, we know that this amount is definitely allocated for this purpose under the Highway Act or under section 204 (B) of the National Industrial Recovery Act: For example, Ohio will get $5,958,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Roads Committee, I add my support to the amendment introduced by the chairman of our committee. We in Wisconsin know from actual experience that more people are employed per $1,000 upon a road project than upon any project that has been yet invented by some of the gentlemen who do the project inventing. This is one way through which we can place this relief money into the hands of the greatest number of people. While I admit that some of the people in charge of the W. P. A. projects may not agree with me that Congress should decide how relief money should be spent, yet the fact remains that we can take care of more people through road-building projects in place of ballet dancing and some other artistic endeavors. Furthermore the road workers get their money every week and are doing something that will add permanently to the economic wealth of every State that is represented in this House.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will earmark this bill so that roads and highways will get some money. If we adopt this amendment nobody down at W. P. A. or any other place can prevent this use of the money for needed projects that will save lives and give livelihood to many heads of families who have no special trade. Any man can work on a road. It is a necessary and intelligent use of relief money and needs no starry-eyed idealists to manage the job.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. How will the money be expended if earmarked? Will it be allocated by the Bureau of Public Roads to the States?

Mr. O'MALLEY. It will be expended by the different State highway departments. It will be allocated under the same methods that have always been used, on the basis of road mileage, railroad mileage, and population.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. That is one of the fairest ways that has yet been devised of distributing such money.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is one of the fairest ways ever devised, and that is the way this Congress has been distributing such money since 1916 when the first Federal aid highway bill was passed. I trust the House will adopt the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. If you will vote for this amendment you will have the everlasting thanks of every farmer in your districts. [Applause.]

The building of farm-to-market roads has brought more good will to this administration than anything it has done in the way of expending money for relief, and I say this from the standpoint of one who comes from a farm district.

I urge that you vote for this amendment, that you earmark this $150,000,000 for this purpose. I wish it all could go for farm-to-market roads.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. In addition to furnishing market roads to the farmers, it is going to furnish the laborers with an opportunity to earn money to support themselves and families, and the money will result in the accomplishment of as much real good as if spent in any other way.

Mr. STEFAN. That is the purpose of this amendment, to provide work relief. The purpose of the entire bill should be to provide actual relief. Money spent on farm roads will bring greater returns than any other form of relief activity.

Mr. Chairman, in the industrial East, according to all information I have at hand, the depression is pretty well over; but out in my district of Nebraska the depression is not yet over and we still need the helping hand of the Federal Government to keep unemployed people at work. There have been many amendments offered to this relief bill. Some Members think that the President's recommendation for $1,500,000,000 is too much. Others believe it is not enough. This House has now taken the stand that the figure suggested by the President is about right. So it becomes my duty to call your attention to conditions which exist in my district, where some government aid must continue. I am like many other Members of this body regarding the cost of relief. It is disappointing to me that the relief work gets but 61 cents out of the relief dollar. I now make the plea to the administrators of this relief money to eliminate much of the overhead in order that the relief dollar goes where this membership intends and expects it to go—to the man and woman in need of the relief. I for one believe that the overhead cost of relief is too high. People who are on relief are objecting to the high cost of this relief. Those in my district who are forced on relief have complained to me that it is wrong to pay high salaries from this relief fund to people who are well off financially and who are drawing these high salaries from the people's relief funds. I hope that some of the amendments which we have inserted in this bill will take care of this objectionable phase of relief and that the amendments will result in the elimination of much of the overhead cost. This, I believe, will result in bringing more money to those unfortunate people who still must remain on relief to earn money with which to buy food and clothing for their families.

I have no real objection, Mr. Chairman, to giving our executive branch of government the power to administer these relief funds. I know the task has been difficult, but certain conditions exist now in my district which lead me to believe that this legislative branch should now earmark some of this money in order that we will know just how it is going to be spent. I say this, Mr. Chairman, because I feel that the people I represent want some of these funds earmarked. I feel that if I am to represent these people who pay this relief money and the people who are forced to accept it, I must do everything possible to legislate fairly and work toward the end that all of this money is spent wisely, economically, and that it goes where it is intended to go. I do not want one penny of this money to be used for any purpose other than the purpose intended—actual relief. The people in my district are not proud to be on relief rolls, but most of them have been unable to help themselves. We felt the depression last because we represent the greatest farm district in the world. When we have crops we have good times. All of the people in my district depend upon the farmer for their living. The merchants, professional men, the railroads, everybody, depends on this real producer and customer—the farmer. After the depression came we had droughts and crop failures. Even today hundreds of farmers are leaving their lands. We are 50 percent on moisture today. Hundreds are going and have already gone to other States. Thousands of acres of tillable land will lie idle. Hundreds of farmers and farm workers have gone to our towns and cities. The counties and towns and cities have been taxed to the utmost by the increasing population which was driven from the farms to the towns. Relief loads gained by leaps and bounds. Federal relief for feed and seed came very slowly, and even today it is not satisfactory. Government agents furnish me with lists of figures from most of my counties to show that many people have left the land because they had no money with which to buy feed for livestock nor seed to plant in the ground. We have had some rains in the district during the past few months but the subsoil is still dry. I am not so optimistic for the future out there. If we do not get a crop this year, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what thousands of farmers are going to do. So you see the need to be on the alert for emergency relief and the need for a proper program of earmarking so that any emergency can be met.

A billion dollars for this year might have been enough to carry out this program if we could eliminate much of the overhead and waste in relief administration. But we have settled down to the original figure of $1,500,000,000. Mr. Chairman, none of us here can realize how much money this is. None of us could really count that much money. It is a fund which attracts everybody. Let us guard it because it represents the taxes we have taken from the people. Outside of the little money we receive from the customs, all the money we have to run this Government and all its functions is the money we take from the taxpayers. We know that we are spending $2 for every dollar we collect. We know that our national debt is reaching close to the $40,000,000,000 mark. We begin to realize that half of everything we eat, wear, feel, or see is represented in interest and taxes. The people in my district know this. So I plead again for safeguarding this gigantic sum of money which represents the taxpayers of America.

Mr. Chairman, I have joined other members of the House Committee on Roads, of which I am a member, to earmark this huge fund for a total of $150,000,000 for roads. Our committee has included in this $50,000,000 for farm-to-market roads. This is a praiseworthy cause because the building of farm-to-market roads or feeder roads is more necessary today than the building of great trunk tourist roads or superhighways. I realize that the Cement Trust, the Steel and Bridge Trusts are not so favorable to farm-to-market roads because we do not use so much of the materials they sell. This material is represented in these superhighways. So our committee is pleading with you and I join them in this plea, that we earmark this fund for roads. I hope that those of you who favor farm-to-market roads will see fit to use the entire $150,000,000 for farm-to-market roads. We have built numerous of these farm-to-market roads in my district. We have many, many more to build before all of our farmers will be actually out of the mud and in a position to reach these superhighways in all kinds of weather. That should be our objective here today. That will give many men work. It will take care of most of the relief problem.

Whether or not there is any specific earmarking of these funds for expenditure on future public-works projects, I feel that the Federal Government should not now abandon those communities that have already substantially acted in reliance upon the at least implied invitation of the Government, and I feel that we should now protect these communities by voting specific funds sufficient to enable them to carry their projects to completion. I speak of and in behalf of municipalities, school districts, and so forth, that filed their orginal application months and even in excess of a year ago. In many of these cases, the applications have been fully approved in the district P. W. A. offices and there are actually existing cases in my district wherein the application has been approved in Washington but without allotment. According to the present situation and unless we provide the money, specifically, here and now, allotments are not likely to be made even in those cases where procedure has been absolutely completed all the way up to allotment. The disappointment of the sponsors at the failure of their projects when in sight of success is one thing. The action of the Government in abandoning these sponsors after the latter have contributed their share of the bargain is quite another and more serious matter. These sponsors have gone to substantial expense incident to the submission of their proposals. Some of the municipalities in my district have held special bond elections and through such elections have produced overwhelming community support for their projects, relying upon the Federal Government to stay with them following the time that they had done their part locally. It cost them money, time, and effort to do this. It is, of course, well known that these communities can ill afford to lose anything of value. Let us avoid the travesty of causing them to lose what they have invested in an effort to participate in the recovery program. They have relied upon us. We should keep faith with them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I have consistently voted against every amendment offered to this bill, and I shall continue to do so, for the simple reason that we voted the other day for $1,500,000,000 for relief purposes to be spent by the regular relief agencies. When you come here and cut this bill up, as you are doing today, you are endangering its getting by the President, you are endangering it in the Senate, and you are endangering every phase of it. I say you have made this not a relief bill but a "pork barrel" bill. [Applause.]

Let me add this: I am in accord with the purposes of every amendment offered if they come to us in individual bills; but I repeat that these amendments as adopted so emasculate this relief bill that its original purpose is completely defeated.

In the course of the debate on this resolution, when an attempt was being made to persuade the House to limit the relief appropriation to $1,000,000,000, we listened to some very eloquent appeals by those favoring the $1,000,000,000 sum. One appeal in particular was predicated on the proposition that continuing relief tended to destroy the morale of the recipients, making them wards of the Government, and thus breaking down that rugged individualism that has, ostensibly, meant so much to our ideals of liberty which have contributed so much to our national greatness.

This is a philosophy with which I am in total disagreement. For the reason that in a great crisis, such as we faced in 1933, if the Federal Government had refrained from rendering aid to the individual in order to preserve that morale that is supposed to be a concomitant of individual liberty, the Government would have been preserving the individual's liberty, sure—his liberty to starve, to lose his home, to walk the streets, head high, shoulders thrown back, but taking a hitch in his belt every 10 steps, and, looking starvation in the face, boldly crying out, "I stand for liberty, liberty to starve, because I am a rugged American individualist."

Because that is one type of liberty that I do not want labeled American, I opposed the one-billion appropriation and voted for every amendment designed to increase it.

And because I believe that the one billion five hundred million is too low, I am opposed to further cuts in it by the earmarking process.

If the P. W. A. needs more funds—and I agree that it does and should have them—let Congress provide them in a special appropriation, and I will vote for that. If good roads need more funds—and I agree that they do—let us provide them, but not at the expense of the relief appropriation. If flood control needs more funds—and I agree it does—I will vote for that.

In the words of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, let us not get hysterical on the subject of economy.

Humanity is far more important. At least, I believe it is, and, so believing, I want the relief bill left intact.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the speeches which have been made in the last half hour indicate a wide misapprehension as to the effect of this amendment. Let us consider a minute what will be the situation if we agree to this amendment and what will be the situation if we do not agree to the amendment.

If we do not agree to the amendment, we will spend this money for farm-to-market roads as we have been spending it in the last year according to a program under which we employed 2,280,000 people and built thousands of miles of farm-to-market roads.

If we agree to the pending amendment the money will be spent under a program which this year employed 37,000 people and will give us a comparatively few miles of primary roads, feeder roads, and grade crossing. Under the bill as it stands we will continue to build serviceable gravel farm-to-market roads, employing the farmers and their teams, and linking their farms with the great primary systems. Under the amendment the money will be turned over to the State highway commissions, who will build monumental concrete primary roads and grade crossings, in which most of the money is spent for material and skilled contract labor, and the farmer will have neither employment nor roads. During the past year we have built thousands of miles of farm-to-market roads the highway commission refused to build.

We have built thousands of miles of rural roads on which the highway commissions, even if they could have been prevailed upon to build, would have charged more for the blueprints and engineering than the Relief Administration used to build the entire road. As a result, we have in every rural congressional district in the United States farm-to-market roads you would not have had if the State highway commissions had been in charge.

I do not have to call this to the attention of the country Congressmen here. Every one of them knows that the best spent money for relief in their districts is the money spent for the gravel and labor on these farm-to-market roads.

The farmers of your district would not have a mile of them today if there had been an amendment like this in the last relief bill. You would not have a single mile of them if the money in the last relief bill had been turned over to the State highway commissions as provided in this amendment.

Someone said just now that he was tired of going hat in hand to ask for projects.

Mr. Chairman, just let him try going to his State highway commission for one of these farm-to-market roads. They would not build one of these roads we have been giving the farmers all over the United States this year to save your immortal soul. They would not build any road in which a large part of the money did not go for engineering and blue prints and the remainder for material and skilled labor. Now, I am not objecting to that. When they build a road it is built right. But we have provided $165,000,000 for such roads in the agricultural appropriation bill and an authorization for $214,000,000 more. We have provided more for such roads this year than ever before. But the bill before us is a relief bill. We want this money used to pay farmers for labor and teams and we want it used to build farm-to-market roads the highway commissions will not build.

Now, if you have any doubt about how this money will be spent if you pass this amendment read the law it specifies. How many of you have read section 204 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act under which this amendment proposes to spend the money? Not one out of a hundred of you have read it. It takes the employment away from the farmers and their teams and gives it to contract skilled labor. It takes it away from gravel and spends it for concrete and steel. It takes away the road from the farmer's gate to the highway and puts in another peacock highway for interurban traffic. It is unfortunate that the farmers who were saved last year and were able to feed their families and their stock with money spent on these roads do not have a chance to vote on this amendment.

Go back to your districts and look at the roads that have been built this year by the relief administration. We have been building roads in my county and my State that we begged the State highway commission for years to build, and they laughed at us. Mr. MacDonald, the Director of the Bureau of Roads, testified before our committee that he would not approve the building of any road that cost less than $7,500 a mile. How many miles of roads could you build to the farms at that rate? And how much employment would the farmer get out of it?

Mr. Chairman, we have provided money for the State highway departments. We have provided money for primary roads and grade crossings and feeder roads and for the concrete and steel and skilled labor entering into their construction. We are providing in cash and authorizations at this session of Congress the greatest amount ever provided for the purpose in the history of the Nation. And still they are coming here now and wanting to crowd into the relief lines and take away the small amount we have provided for the farmer and his teams and for a practical common-sense gravel road to get his crops from the farm to the slab. It is unfair. It is unreasonable. And it defeats the purpose of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the Knutson amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 51, noes 122.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York to the amendment offered by Mr. CARTWRIGHT: Line 9, strike out "$25,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,000,000."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 165, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 2, line 15, after the word "including", insert the following: "electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations", and then insert a comma.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I am proposing authorizes the building of electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in the rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations. It does not allocate any specific amount for that purpose, but leaves it to the discretion of the administration to use as much of the $630,000,000 carried in this item as may be deemed necessary.

My amendment simply gives the administration the authority to do for the people in the rural districts what the bill authorizes it to do for people living in towns and cities. There is no reason on earth why the administration should have the right to build, or help to build, a municipal light plant or distribution system and not be permitted to aid rural communities in building electric lines to serve their homes.

The funds spent for this purpose will do more good, dollar for dollar, than any other expenditures provided for in this bill. It will employ just as many people for the amount of money involved as that used for any other purpose and will go just as far toward relieving unemployment. There will be poles to cut, peel, haul, and creosote. There will be rights-of-way to clear, holes to dig, cross arms to make, poles to erect, wires to stretch, and other labors to perform. In fact, I am not sure if it will not employ more laborers for the amount involved than would be employed by the expenditure of a like sum on any other project or projects provided for in the entire bill.

Besides, the money spent on these rural power lines will be a permanent investment that will yield untold dividends in the years to come. It will take to the farmer and his family the joys, comforts, and conveniences of city life without the attendant noise, strife, turmoil, extra taxes, and other expenses and demoralizing influences. It will greatly increase, if not double, the value of every farm by bringing light and comfort to the home, adding conveniences the farmer has never enjoyed before, and lifting the burdens of household drudgery from the shoulders of his wife and children.

It will turn many a drab farmhouse into an attractive home, stimulate the children's interest, and so strengthen the home ties that they will not want to leave it. In other words, it will keep the young people on the farm who are there now and will cause others to return.

We can never have a prosperous country with an impoverished agriculture. If this country is to be great, rich, and powerful in the years to come, we must have an enlightened, prosperous, and contented rural population that can have and enjoy all the blessings of this modern advanced electric civilization.

The greatest thing this administration could possibly do would be to electrify every farm home in the whole United States at T. V. A. rates. This amendment will go a long way in that direction. It will be the greatest step in that direction we have ever taken, and I hope it will result in the ultimate electrification of every farm home in America.

I should like to see at least $200,000,000 of this $1,500,000,000 used in building these rural power lines. Subsection (b), to which I am offering this amendment, carries an appropriation of $630,000,000 for parks, recreational facilities, public utilities, airports, conservation, work projects, and so forth. I submit that if we will take $200,000,000 of this amount and spend it in building rural power lines to the farmers' homes, it will do more good than all the rest of the entire $1,500,000,000 carried in the bill. It will add $20,000,000,000 to the Nation's wealth by increasing the value of farm homes, to say nothing of the untold blessing it will bring to the toiling masses who till the soil, from whose homes have sprung the great leaders of the past and from whose homes no doubt will spring the leaders of the Nation in future years.

Some of you gentlemen who are willing to spend money by the billions in the large cities of the country seem to think I am unreasonable when I ask that a reasonable proportion be spent for rural electrification. Well, you might as well get used to it. I have started in to electrify the farm homes of this Nation, and I am going to see that a provision of this kind goes into every one of these bills from now on or until we get an adequate amount provided for this purpose.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Is the gentleman going to vote for this amendment?

Mr. MAY. I think I shall. I may say to my friend the gentleman from Mississippi that he and I have rarely agreed on any of these electrical propositions.

Mr. RANKIN. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. However, I am a great believer in rural electrification, but the Government is getting the bad part of that under present management.

Mr. RANKIN. I hope the gentleman has been thoroughly converted. But he is wrong about the Government getting the worst of the bargain.

Mr. MAY. May I ask the gentleman whether we did not pass a bill in the last Congress known as the Norris bill which appropriated $50,000,000 for the R. E. A.? What are they doing?

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will recall, the Norris rural electrification bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee changed the measure by sticking into it a provision for loaning this money to private power companies. That one change almost wrecked the whole program. In addition to borrowing money to prevent cooperative associations from getting it, private power companies have been building "spite" lines to cut the rural territory to pieces and prevent the spread of rural electrification.

I am glad to say that since Mr. John M. Carmody has been placed at the head of the Rural Electrification Administration conditions have greatly improved. He is carrying out the real intention of the Norris Act and dealing with cooperative associations that are organized for the purpose of securing electricity for the people in the rural districts. Since that fact has become known to the farmers throughout the country the demands have far exceeded the amount provided in the Norris bill. The R. E. A. is now moving forward with this program as rapidly as their limited funds will permit. But they need this additional help.

Let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] that I have probably had more experience with rural electrification than any other Member of the House. I know the difficulties this problem presents. Many communities cannot be reached at all under the strict provisions of the Norris Act unless they get help of this kind. Many counties can never be electrified without assistance.

Other nations spend large sums of money to build rural power lines to serve their farmers while we lag behind. Less than 10 percent of the farmers in the United States even have electric lights in their homes, while in Norway, Sweden, Holland, Switzerland, France, Germany, and even Japan more than 90 percent of their rural homes are electrified. That is what I hope to see in this country within the next 5 or 10 years. Here is the place and now is the time to begin. If you want to help the man who is doing something for himself, for God's sake vote for this amendment, and help to do something for the farmer, who is working out his own salvation and is not begging for a dole. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Have the regulations of the R. E. A. prevented that?

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman is familiar with the law, he must realize that there are many localities that cannot be reached without assistance of some kind. If the gentleman had been as diligent in trying to get rural electrification to his farm as he should have been, he would know that.

Mr. MAY. My home has electricity.

Mr. RANKIN. There is not 1 farmer out of 50 in the gentleman's district who ever sees an electric light except when he goes to town. His district is no worse than the rest of them. The same thing is true of every other district represented here, except for a few right around the large cities.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman that I feel the Works Progress Administration, perhaps, would have authority in any event under the language carried in the bill to do what the gentleman seeks to accomplish, but if it would not, the gentleman's language is permissive, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from Virginia for withdrawing his objections. I hope every other Member will take the same course. I wish I could impress upon each and every one of you the importance of this amendment.

I know what rural electrification will do for the farmers. I have a cooperative power association organized in every county in the district which I represent, and I have devoted my time and energies to the task of getting these rural lines extended so as to reach every farmer possible.

I have before me reports from large numbers of them. I sent out a questionnaire the other day and have already received 89 replies. Of that number, 89 had radios, 81 had electric irons, 66 had refrigerators, 24 electric ranges, 56 electric fans, 11 washing machines, and other appliances in proportion.

I know there are some Members who think it is extravagant for a farmer to own a radio. But why shouldn't he? Nothing brings so much life, so much hope, so much joy, so much wholesome entertainment, so much splendid music, or so much of the news of the world at such small expense as does the radio. I hope to see one in every farm home in the United States. The radio uses so little electricity that you cannot even tell it on your bill; especially is this true when electricity is supplied at the T. V. A. rates.

I have three letters here, Mr. Chairman, which I have been given permission to insert in the RECORD. All of them are from farmers who are using T. V. A. power at T. V. A. rates. The first one is from a man who lives 6 miles from the railroad. He uses the following electrical appliances: Lights in his home, in his yard, and in his garage, a radio, electric iron, electric refrigerator, electric fans, electric toaster, electric waffle iron, and an electric pump. In the month of April he used 62 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which he paid $2.36. Here is what he has to say:

> I am enclosing herewith completed questionnaire, together with my last month's electric-service bill. I believe it would be difficult to explain to you the degree of satisfaction which we are receiving from T. V. A. service. In other words, it is nothing short of complete satisfaction. The only complaint I hear is among those people who do not have the T. V. A. service. They are apparently in a mad scramble most of the time trying to devise ways and means that will bring cheap electric service to them.
> The T. V. A. program has done more to make life easy, added more comforts to our homes, inspired more hope, and stimulated more enthusiasm among our people of this section than all other developments in history.
> T. V. A. is a godsend to the rural development of our country. More homes are being constructed, old homes repaired, and the surroundings thereof beautified, all because of the added advantages for comfort and convenience through cheap T. V. A. service. Keep up your good work, bearing in mind that we are still with you.

Here is another one from a farmer who uses the following electrical appliances: Lights in his home, in his yard, and in his garage, a radio, an electric iron, electric refrigerator, electric range, electric water heater, electric fans, an electric heater, and an electric water pump. In the month of April he used 319 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which he paid $5.69. Here is what he says:

> We are delighted with our T. V. A. It is by far the greatest convenience and the greatest help a farmer could have. We are enjoying it to the fullest. I never realized that anything could be such a wonderful help. The T. V. A. service has been all that could be expected, satisfactory in every respect. It means more to us and to our community than anything that has ever come our way. In fact it brings city life and conveniences to the country. For all of this we want to thank you. Your efforts were untiring. We shall always remember your services to us and your district.

Mr. Chairman, I have hundreds of letters of this kind from farmers who are being served with electricity at T. V. A. rates but I am only going to quote one more. Here is one from a man who lives 9 miles from the railroad, in a village that 3 years ago was without electricity. Today it has taken on new life. This man has lights in his home, and in his yard, he has a radio, an electric iron, and an electric washing machine. In the month of April he used 35 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which he paid $1.40. He writes me as follows:

> As to what I think of the T. V. A. and my views on this service, I am glad to state very frankly, that it is, in my opinion, the greatest help to the poor homes of anything that has been done through the New Deal. My property has been doubled in value and money could not buy the pleasure and happiness we get through this service. Had it not been for the cheap rates that we are getting, I could not have had lights, or any of the modern conveniences we now enjoy. Frankly, I prize the T. V. A. more highly than any other one thing that you have done through Congress in all your years of service.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I could quote hundreds of similar letters from farmers throughout that section of the country who are now enjoying electricity at T. V. A. rates, but the unfortunate thing about it is that a great number of them are being left out because they live in sparsely settled communities or in areas that we cannot reach without help of this kind.

Adopt this amendment and it will start a movement that will ultimately result in the electrification of every farm home in America.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 2, line 21, beginning with the colon, strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 22, 23, 24, and 25, all of lines 1 and 2 on page 3, and down to the colon in line 3, and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "and (e) the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, the amount of the unexpended balances of appropriations hereinabove reappropriated."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, as this amendment simply has for its purpose the appropriation of the unexpended balances to the Public Works Administration, and as the substance of the amendment has already been adopted, I desire to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is much left to earmark, and I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MAGNUSON: On page 2, line 19, after the word "professional", insert "and self-help."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, this is my first opportunity to speak to the House [applause], and I have sat here and listened with a great deal of interest for about 4 or 5 months now, and I have sat here and listened to the debate on this relief bill with a great deal of interest during the last 2 days.

If I could put myself in the place of someone who knew nothing about relief, someone sitting in the gallery coming from some foreign country or from some unknown planet, I would come to the conclusion, after listening to all this debate, that we still have a lot of people who are unemployed that we want to help out, Republicans and Democrats alike, but we do not want to spend any more money than we have to.

With that in mind, I think this bill has overlooked one of the finest things in the whole relief program—the self-help cooperative program. I do not see any place in the bill where there is provision for it. Therefore I propose this amendment: All the money, as the gentleman from Montana has said, has been pretty well earmarked. The purpose of this amendment is merely to encourage the self-help programs. Do any of you know what they are? Well, I have heard the cry over here on the other side for 4 months, "Where are you going to get the money?" This is a familiar ring to most of you, and I wish the gentleman from New York would pay attention to this. Do you know that the self-help program, sponsored by the emergency relief, has paid back in goods $7 for every dollar put into them? [Applause.]

What are they? Well, I have here a report which states:

Their combined activities resulted in about 15,000,000 man-hours worked by October 31, 1936, with a conservatively estimated saving of $2,753,218 relief costs. Relief budgets have been reduced through these cooperative activities and some families have succeeded in removing themselves from the relief rolls entirely. Food, clothing, shelter, medical and dental services, etc., have been supplied through the effort of cooperatives instead of through regular relief channels.

On October 31, 1936, there were 182 active associations, with a membership of 10,029. However, it is estimated that over the total period about 30,000 participating families have benefited from these special grants.

By comparing the amount of grant funds expended with the value of equipment and inventories still available, it appears that the net cost of the program to date has been approximately $600,000. Comparing this amount with the value of benefits received by the members of self-help cooperatives through their participation, it appears that each Federal dollar used up in this program has helped to create benefits valued at nearly $7.

This information is taken from a letter from Mr. Udo Rall, Director of the Division of Self-Help Cooperatives, written to me on May 24 of this year.

This is not earmarking any money. Like the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], it simply provides that where these self-help projects are feasible, the Government shall go ahead with them; and I hope the gentleman from Virginia will have no objection to the insertion of this amendment in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STACK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STACK: Page 3, line 16, after the word "funds", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in the event any municipality or political subdivision is unable to make its contribution toward the purchasing of material and other equipment for any project, the President or his agent may make such purchases as may be necessary in the carrying out of such projects in said municipality or political subdivision."

Mr. STACK. Mr. Chairman, today seems to be the acceptable time. Practically all amendments that have been submitted have been accepted and I hope you ladies and gentlemen will continue to do that until at least my amendment is passed. I happen to come from Philadelphia, a city of approximately two and a half million people. At this minute there are 67,000 relief cases in Philadelphia, representing approximately a quarter of a million people on relief. Fifty-one thousand of those have been certified as employables, and for the last 6 months $10,000,000 of the last relief appropriation bill have been set aside by the Works Progress Administration for projects that have already been O. K.'d by the Federal Government, but our city government in Philadelphia for some reason or other has not put up its ante.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. Yes; I am glad to yield to my colleague from Philadelphia.

Mr. BRADLEY. Is it not a fact that in the city of Philadelphia the Republican city council for obvious partisan reasons and because they apparently wish to penalize the people of that city for having voted Democratic have refused to appropriate funds to commence these projects?

Mr. STACK. Possibly that is so, but regardless of whether it is so or not, we have in Philadelphia a quarter of a million people on relief and unless this amendment is passed, or some like provision, you may as well send your relief bill down the Potomac River as far as Philadelphia is concerned. I am here pleading for the people on relief, the needy, who want work and who cannot get it, because the sponsors back home or somebody else refuse to put up the ante that is absolutely necessary for the carrying out of any projects.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. Yes; I will be glad to yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Would not the administration give you money for relief this present year when they are handing out to everybody else? Why did not the gentleman get his?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. Yes, certainly; I will be glad to yield to my distinguished friend and colleague.

Mr. DITTER. A distinguished colleague made the observation that the Republican council of the city of Philadelphia refused to provide funds. Does the gentleman know that a very substantial part of his relief workers went out of the city of Philadelphia into Delaware County, into Chester County, into Bucks County, into Montgomery County, and that largely his relief was taken care of in the adjoining counties, so that the municipality of Philadelphia really did not have to help them. We of the suburban counties were generous and provided all the necessary help.

Mr. STACK. Yes; and I appreciate that, and I thank the gentleman for giving us that help.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. Yes; certainly to my distinguished friend and colleague from Philadelphia.

Mr. DORSEY. The fact of the Philadelphia people on relief had to go to outside counties to get relief was caused by the local administration not sponsoring projects to Philadelphia relief people on the works relief, was it not?

Mr. STACK. That is the fact, but the main point that I make here is for the people back home who are not working. We do not want them crucified for political or any other reasons, and as I said before as far as I am concerned you can send this bill down the river if you do not take care of Philadelphia by starting some projects there immediately and put people to work.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the patriotic zeal of our distinguished colleague from Philadelphia [Mr. STACK], and I am persuaded that Philadelphia will be treated all right under this program.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have only 2 minutes.

Mr. STACK. I just made the statement that we have $10,000,000 allocated for 6 months which is no good to us. We cannot use a dollar. Please do something with my amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. I want to do something with the gentleman's amendment. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the language which he suggests is not necessary. The Works Progress Administration already has authority to require local sponsors to put up funds if they wish to do so, and to put language in here would not help it. I ask the Committee not to undertake to vote a principle in here that the local sponsors do not have to put up any funds. Surely we are not going to announce the principle that the Federal Government is going to do all of this, and as for the little 10 or 15 percent that the States and localities have put up, for Heaven's sake let them put that much up in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STACK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: On page 3, line 18, after the word "determine", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no agricultural laborer and no unskilled laborer who refuses or has refused an offer of private employment paying as much or more in compensation for such work as such person has received or could receive under the relief herein provided, and who is capable of performing such work, shall be eligible for relief hereafter for the period such private employment or any similar subsequent offer of such employment would be available: And provided further, That any person who performs such private employment shall, at the expiration thereof, be entitled to an immediate resumption of his previously existing employment status on the work relief authorized by this act."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the interest both of economy and industry. It has reference to unskilled labor only and provides that agricultural workers and nonskilled workers who refuse private employment which they are able to perform and which will pay them as much as or more than they are receiving under relief, will not be eligible for relief during the time such employment is available; and with the further proviso that with the expiration of such employment they will again be placed on relief.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am for the gentleman's amendment, but it does not go far enough. The gentleman ought to take care of domestics who refuse to work because they are getting relief.

Mr. LANHAM. My understanding is they would come under the heading of "unskilled laborers", and it is so intended.

This is the situation: In many parts of our country, especially in our agricultural sections, the farmers come to town and try to get men to work or harvest their crops, and they sit around and refuse such employment, saying, "We can make almost that much doing nothing and stay on relief"; and for the same reason many domestic servants will not seek or accept employment because of the fact that the relief pays them enough to keep them going.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment, and I have had the same thing brought to my attention in my district. In regard to the resumption of his place on relief, I think it should be shown by the individual that he is in need of relief before it is given to him.

Mr. LANHAM. In that regard I call attention to the fact that this amendment also covers any similar subsequent offer of employment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Government figures indicate that in my State of Michigan there are 100 jobs now offered for each 79 men available in agriculture, and unless the gentleman's amendment is adopted I see no way I can vote for this bill at all.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to say in that regard that where work is provided and is available and a man is able to perform it and refuses to do so, we had better get back to what the Scriptures tell us, that if any man will not work, neither shall he eat. [Applause.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Why does the gentleman confine his amendment to unskilled workers and agricultural workers?

Mr. LANHAM. I confine it to unskilled workers for the reason that if it applied to skilled workers, then employers could go to relief headquarters and get skilled workers at less than the prevailing rate of wage that their fellow workers in the same crafts were receiving.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to be clear on this, because I think I favor it. As I understand the situation, a man is on relief and he is getting the prevailing rate of wage. He is offered a job at the same rate of wage or higher. If he does not take that job he goes off relief?

Mr. LANHAM. He goes off relief for the time the job would be available. Then he goes back on relief if there is no similar employment at the expiration of that job.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Jones gives him a job and he works for 3 weeks. Then he can go oack on relief again?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. I wish the gentleman's amendment provided that those people, after they have had private employment, would have preference in going back on relief.

Mr. LANHAM. It says that it gives them the right of immediate resumption of that status.

Mr. VOORHIS. But the eligible places might all be taken in the meantime, when there are millions of people out of work.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] some questions along the line which the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] was just asking.

The danger in the gentleman's amendment is that after this man accepts private employment, works for 3 weeks, we will say, then is thrown out of employment again and wants to go back on relief, that he would not be given preference.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the second proviso of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the second proviso of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That any person who performs such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to an immediate resumption of his previously existing employment status on the work relief authorized by this act.

Mr. CONNERY. That entitles him to an immediate resumption of his previous status. I do not see how it could be made much stronger.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand that this practice is now in operation by the relief agencies?

Mr. CONNERY. No; not that I know of. But I do know of instances where certain unscrupulous employers have tried to make skilled workers who were on W. P. A. work work at their skilled trades at W. P. A. allowances, make them work for starvation wages.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I asked the question was because the statement was just made to me that that is the practice now. I just want to say that it is not an operation in my State.

Mr. CONNERY. It is not the practice that I know of.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The director of relief in Kansas has announced that as a new rule there that if a man is offered employment he must take it. I do not see how the proviso in the amendment could work fairly, for the man might have saved something from his employment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think this type of legislation is at all necessary, especially when it is remembered that in practically every State in the Union there are laws now that provide that a man must support his wife and family on penalty of going to jail for failure to support them. So long as we have such criminal laws why should we establish conditions and lay down rules that are so easily susceptible of mismanagement and maladministration and that might work such hardships upon many of these people? I do not believe this legislation is at all necessary.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not think it will do any harm. As a matter of fact I think it will prove to be very salutary.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Another danger is that unscrupulous employers could use such legislation to further unethical practices, and to break down wage standards.

Mr. CONNERY. No; because they must be employed at the prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not under the Relief Act.

Mr. CONNERY. Under W. P. A. they are supposed to pay the prevailing rate of wage. It does not say skilled or unskilled but just provides for the prevailing rate of wage.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The gentleman has introduced a bill which provides a minimum wage of $16, has he not?

Mr. CONNERY. We left the amount of wages for the committee to determine.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will be a minimum of some kind, will it not?

Mr. CONNERY. We hope so.

Mr. FLETCHER. If employers indulging in sweatshop methods try to hire these people on relief at $12 a week, would not that conflict with anticipated action by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. CONNERY. No; for that legislation would fix its own standards.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana) there were—ayes 179, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: Page 2, line 21, after the colon, insert: "Provided, That none of these amounts shall be available except where the States, counties, municipalities, or other governmental units which propose the projects match the Federal money dollar for dollar, except in cases where the State or other governmental unit proves affirmatively that it cannot match the Federal funds."

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, the result of this amendment would be that any governmental unit which proposes a W. P. A. relief project would have to pay half the cost of it unless it could prove affirmatively that it was not able to do so. What is unfair about that? Up until 4 years ago the Federal Government had never appropriated a dollar of the kind of money involved in this bill. We had had other depressions and other periods of unemployment, and in them the States and localities paid every dollar of the cost of relief.

The amendment I have offered would return to them half of the burden. If the States and localities pay half the bill, they will purge these relief rolls; the unworthy will be eliminated. The local property taxpayers will see to that. However, the saving of money, though important, Mr. Chairman, is the smaller part of the motive that has caused me to offer this amendment.

The principal purpose is to save this Republic from the disaster that is sure to overtake it if we do not check the appetite for Government hand-outs. [Applause.] On last Friday, if I had not looked around to see the patriotic markings of this Hall, I should have thought that the day had already arrived when the voters' support had been put up for auction. Our people know it when they pay property taxes and they are jealous of the manner of expenditure of property taxes. But, unfortunately, a great many persons, inside and outside the Congress, apparently believe that Federal money comes from a mystic, inexhaustible source. If we do not turn back the tide of that belief, I fear that we shall soon see, as in ancient Rome, the time when candidates for the people's favor will compete as to which one of them shall offer their constituents the deepest dip into the Public Treasury. [Applause.]

I can easily see candidate A saying, "Fifty dollars a month from the Treasury? That is a miserly sum. If I am elected, I will see that you get a hundred dollars a month." Candidate B will raise the bid, and say, "What kind of friend of the people is he who would give you only $100 a month for a man, a wife, and four children?" [Applause.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Candidate B will say, "vote for me, and you will get $200 a month." Then the third candidate will declare, "I am the real friend of the people. Elect me, and you will have $300 a month." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, my amendment will dissipate the fancy that relief money is something for nothing. It is bad for an individual to get something for nothing, or to think he is getting something for nothing, and it is a bad thing for a State or for any other governmental unit. My amendment would remedy that ill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. The gentleman is stating the exact truth. Why should not a proposition presented by a man running for office such as the gentleman suggests be considered a bribery proposition and taken care of under the Corrupt Practices Act?

Mr. BIERMANN. It would be a fine thing, but I am afraid it would not work out that way.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. I do not think the gentleman's argument is being followed very much by the voters, because the Townsendites were turned down last year.

Mr. BIERMANN. That was entirely too fantastic to be accepted by the majority of the voters, but the fact that it was proposed, I believe, lends support to the doctrine I have enunciated.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many amendments are pending to section 1?

The CHAIRMAN. There appear to be five amendments pending to section 1.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. That will allow 4 minutes to each amendment and give everybody a chance to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have four amendments I want to offer to section 1 that have not been sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the intention to finish this bill tonight?

Mr. WOODRUM. I will have to pass that bridge when I get to it.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman in propounding a unanimous-consent request and wants us to cooperate. I think it is only fair that he tell us.

Mr. WOODRUM. I want to go as far as I can now and stop in 20 minutes all debate on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 1 and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to announce that in view of the motion being carried each Member will be recognized for not more than 2 minutes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is one factor that has not been put before us and that is the amount of money that municipalities put up right now and have been putting up in the past for supplementary relief. If you make municipalities put up and match the Federal grant with 50 percent you really make them match more than that because they are putting up money right now for supplementary relief and have been doing it for years.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the pending amendment is defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page 1, line 5, after the word "possession", strike out all of lines 6 and 7 and the words "in this section" in line 8.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand why this particular language has been put in the bill. It is my information, and I received this from a Member of the Appropriations Committee, that there are six thousand illion dollars in projects which have already been approved. The purpose of the language in the bill is to exempt those projects from the limitations placed in this bill. The bill provides that all additional projects must be necessary. Why should we not put all of these projects on the same footing. If it is good to limit all future projects which are hereafter approved to necessary ones, why not put the same requirement on projects which have already been approved but upon which work has not yet been started?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 32, noes 137.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER: Page 2, line 17, after the word "conservation", strike out the words "and miscellaneous."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to prohibit the Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, from publishing books of this character, such as Landlord and Tenant on the Cotton Plantation, Urban Workers on Relief, and innumerable other publications, the cost of which is not only exorbitant but also the cost of compiling the data contained therein runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Such useless and nonsensical printing matter which the W. P. A. has been mailing out continuously since the inauguration of the Works Progress Administration must stop. There is no wonder there is still a large number of unemployed on relief when money appropriated to help the poor and needy in distress has been used for such foolish and useless expenditures.

There is no doubt in my mind but what Mr. Hopkins is perfectly honest himself and means well, but his large corps of assistants who saturate his mind with all kinds of ideas, regardless of what they are, go into effect, and the individual who is in need cannot get a position or get help, relief, regardless of the large appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the records show that under Mr. Hopkins' administration it requires 63 percent of the money appropriated by Congress to administer relief to the needy. Therefore, there is very little left for actual relief, which is really the prime object and purpose of this bill.

There has been expended during the last year approximately $300,000 for this kind of useless printing of booklets which have been published by the Administrator. The first part of the bill, on page 1, line 4, states that the appropriation is made for "useful public projects." I think this type of expenditure is a useless waste of money. It is extravagance of the wildest kind. If we are appropriating money for relief, let us hew to the line and contribute this money to those who are in need.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I cannot understand why the gentleman did not vote for my amendment, if he wants this money spent for useful purposes. The gentleman is asking this House to pick up toothpicks, yet he votes to throw six thousand million dollars away.

Mr. KRAMER. I cannot yield to the gentleman further.

The President, in his message to the Congress last January, stated:

Now that we are out of the trough of the depression, the time has come to set our house in order. The administrative management of the Government needs overhauling.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I take it for granted that this admonishment by the President applies to the Works Progress Administration, because of the useless squandering of money. I think the entire W. P. A. organization needs overhauling. There are many useless departments, as well as many useless executives, not only in Washington but throughout the entire country, who are giving no service at all to the public or who contribute nothing to relief. They are on the pay roll and consume the greater amount of the appropriation—money which rightfully belongs to relief of the needy. This kind of spending, extravagance, and throwing money to the winds, must be stopped. I believe the more money we vote for this bill, the more money Mr. Hopkins and his organization will have to spend uselessly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAVERICK) there were—ayes 160, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS: Page 2, line 15, after the words "public utilities", insert "garbage and/or rubbish incinerators."

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, the accepted practice in municipalities today in disposing of garbage or rubbish, where the community is so congested it cannot have a public dump, is to burn it with proper incinerators. Therefore, it seems that should be included in the terms of this bill, so the Public Works Administration can build garbage incinerators or garbage and rubbish incinerators for communities wanting such incineration facilities built. I hope the Committee will agree to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment, but as this is a relief bill it is not germane at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is withdrawn.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page 3, line 16, after the period, insert the following: "Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be available for use in the construction of any golf course, swimming pool, or other recreational facility, excepting those which shall at all times be available without charge to the public.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that P. W. A. has advanced money for swimming pools, golf courses, and other recreational features where an admission fee is charged. I submit to the committee that this should not be. This amendment merely places a limitation upon such expenditure and limits them to such projects as have no admission fees. That will help the underprivileged about whom we hear so much but for whom little is really done.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman said P. W. A. This is not P. W. A.; this is W. P. A.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, W. P. A. I get confused with all these alphabet set-ups

Anyway, it places a limitation on expenditures by making none of this money available for any project where an admission charge is made. It would seem to me that persons who can pay admission fees are probably already members of golf and athletic clubs. Certainly we should favor those who are not so fortunately situated, but I assume this amendment will be voted down for election is over and the underprivileged have served their purpose for the time being.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: On page 3, line 16, after the period, insert the following: "Provided, That no funds appropriated by this act shall be available for the building of monuments, memorials, or the improvement of historic sites, except within the limitations of title 16, United States Code, as amended."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 33, noes 87.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: On page 3, line 16, after the period, insert: "Provided, No funds appropriated by this act shall be available for the construction, advancement, or completion of any enterprise, building, or project which will result in goods or services being offered for sale to the public."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page 3, line 24, insert: "Provided, That $150,000 of the money appropriated by this bill shall be available to a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives for an investigation of relief and unemployment in the United States and Territories."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. In carrying out the purposes of the foregoing appropriation the President is authorized (a) to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary and to utilize agencies within the Government and to empower such agencies to prescribe rules and regulations to carry out the functions delegated thereto by the President: Provided, That the rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the foregoing appropriation shall be not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Works Progress Administration with the approval of the President; and (b) to accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services, and utilize, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees as may be necessary, and prescribe their authorities, duties, and responsibilities: Provided, however, That in the employment of persons, applicants in actual need whose names have not heretofore been placed on relief rolls shall be given the same eligibility for employment as applicants whose names have heretofore appeared on such rolls: Provided further, That the fact that a person is entitled to or has received either adjusted-service bonds or a Treasury check in payment of an adjusted-compensation certificate shall not be considered in determining actual need of such employment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PROCUREMENT OF DIVORCES IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6961) to prohibit the use of the mails for the solicitation of the procurement of divorces in foreign countries, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which considered a similar measure last session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain resolutions adopted by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, for 1 week, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK and Mr. LUDLOW asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the extension of my remarks I may insert two or three short letters I received from farmers on the subject of rural electrification.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader, about the program for the balance of the week, as a number of the Members have inquired?

Mr. RAYBURN. I announced the plan earlier in the week——

Mr. SNELL. I understand that; but I thought, perhaps, the plans may have been changed.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thought at that time the pending bill would be disposed of today.

Tomorrow, of course, we have memorial services, and the program is to continue with the consideration of the relief bill on Thursday. It was hoped we would finish the consideration of that bill today, so that we could take up the so-called "hot oil" bill on Thursday; but now, of course, the program will have to be changed. Of course, we will have to meet on Friday in order to adjourn over till Tuesday. It is hoped we can adjourn over until that time, because a great many Members have programs in their own districts for Monday.

Mr. SNELL. That is the reason I am anxious to know about the program.

Mr. RAYBURN. If we get through with the relief bill, inasmuch as we have to meet on Friday, I would like to take up the Dies "hot oil" bill and dispose of that, but I will be pleased to discuss that further with the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I am wondering if the "hot oil" bill is one that is going to take any considerable amount of time.

Mr. RAYBURN. My impression is it will not, although some member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce could give more definite information about that.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I wonder if the gentleman would agree now that at the conclusion of the pending bill on Thursday we may be permitted to call up the conference report on the independent offices bill, and also the conference report on the second deficiency bill? I may state to the gentleman that it is extremely urgent that these matters be disposed of before the 1st of next month; and, as the gentleman knows, we have been awaiting an opportunity to call them up.

Mr. BACON. I may also suggest that there is a conference report on the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriation bill pending.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like to see those conference reports acted upon, and I think there is very little controversy in the House about them.

Mr. SNELL. Why not let the "hot oil" bill go over until next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would rather not agree to that just now, but I may say to the gentleman that I shall be pleased to discuss that with him later.

Mr. SIROVICH. Why can we not vote on the P. W. A. bill today and finish that?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Committee has risen, and I presume the House is in the humor to adjourn at this time. If we try to finish the consideration of that bill we would be here 2 or 3 hours before we would get to the point where we would probably have two or three roll calls.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, is it fair to assume, I ask the majority leader, that the "hot oil" bill will not be brought up at least until Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. It will not be brought up until Friday, it cannot be, because this bill and the conference reports will certainly take all of Thursday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the extension of my remarks I may include a brief statement made by me upon the bill before the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, for 1 week, on account of important business.

Joint resolution to provide that the United States extend to foreign governments invitations to participate in the International Congress of Architects to be held in the United States during the calendar year 1939, and to authorize an appropriation to assist in meeting the expenses of the session; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 148. An act to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6249. An act to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Kanosh Band of Paiute Indians;

H. R. 6250. An act to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Shivwitz Band of Paiute Indians;

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of Dewey V. Bates; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2391. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Petition of the Thirty-first District Washington Commonwealth Federation, Mildred Jones, secretary, stating that the depression is not over for the unemployed and that these people will have to depend almost entirely upon Works Progress Administration projects for sustenance, and therefore vigorously espousing House bill 5822, the Boileau bill, and urging its prompt enactment into law; to the Committee on Appropriations.

2392. Also, petition of the Board of County Commissioners of King County, Wash. (largest county in the State of Washington, containing a population of 600,000), setting forth their endorsement of a program for continuation and expansion of Federal works, stating their espousal of congressional authorization and development of a plan for long-range public-works program for grants-in-aid by the Federal Government to the several States in relieving hardship and suffering; and to that end endorsing heartily and urging the prompt enactment of House bill 5822, known as the Public Works and Relief Standards Act, which bill is sponsored by the Workers Alliance of America; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, from whom we dare not turn lest we fall, and in whom if we abide we shall stand fast forever: We thank Thee for this world and its witness of Thee, for sunshine and shadow, for the wide-bosomed sea and the everlasting hills, for clouds and stars, for springing grass and stately trees, for lakes and streams of water; but, above all, we thank Thee for man made in Thy image, for the memories of greatness that abide his fall, and for the grace of forgiveness that restores his soul.

Grant us, we beseech Thee, this day Thy help in all our duties, Thy guidance in all our perplexities; let cheerfulness be the companion of our strength as the uplift of Thy people is the inspiration of our work. Thou hast declared, O Father, the length and breadth, the height and depth of Thy love by the cross of Thy dear Son; and into the hands of that love we commit not only ourselves and all who share the responsibilities of government but all Thy children for whom Thou hast bidden us to pray—the sick and afflicted, the poor and needy, the suffering and the sorrowful. Do Thou fold them closer to Thy mercy's breast and make us all worthier of Thee. We ask it for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, May 24, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting a nomination and sundry treaties and conventions, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5110. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Russell V. Pemberton;

H. R. 5462. An act to increase the age of consent for marriage in the District of Columbia to 18 years of age in the case of males and 16 years of age in the case of females;

H. R. 6242. An act to protect the buyers of potatoes in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 6696. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", known as the "Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928", approved February 27, 1929.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and it was signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to acquire the Petrified Redwood Forest, in Sonoma County, as a permanent national monument

Whereas there is located in Sonoma County the Petrified Redwood Forest, which is of great interest and scientific value to all citizens of the United States; and

Whereas the protection of this forest against inroads of commerce and against the inroads of irresponsible persons can best be handled by the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorialize the President and the Congress of the United States to expedite the purchase as a permanent national monument the Petrified Redwood Forest, in Sonoma County, in the State of California, and by appropriate legislation make such forest a national monument; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the National Park Service, to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Smithsonian Institute, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and such Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from California are respectfully urged to support this project.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, requesting the President of the United States to extend to the governments and dominions of the world invitations to participate in the Pacific Exposition and Mercado at Los Angeles in 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. JOHNSON of California.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Rotary Club of Mayaguez, P. R., favoring the enactment of House bill 3629, providing for the establishment of engineering experiment stations at the land-grant colleges, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Workers Alliance, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of pending legislation providing a $3,000,000,000 public-works appropriation, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Capitol Heights, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 2286) to prohibit the use of buildings or premises in the District of Columbia for the carrying on of certain undesirable industries, with special reference to the proposal to operate an abattoir at Benning, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the New York Board of Trade, Inc., of New York City, favoring substantial reductions in appropriations, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Gloversville, N. Y., remonstrating against an appropriation being made for the proposed Jefferson Memorial in the vicinity of the Tidal Basin in the District of Columbia, on account of the loss of or damage to the Japanese cherry trees if such project is carried forward at the location indicated, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Niagara Falls, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Cortland (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of Senate bill 69, limiting the length of railway freight trains to 70 cars and passenger trains to 14 cars, and so forth, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of California presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President of the United States to extend to the governments and dominions of the world invitations to participate in the Pacific Exposition and Mercado at Los Angeles in 1940

Whereas the nations of North, Central, and South America today face the dawn of a new era and the world looks to the nations of the Western Hemisphere and the Orient, along whose shores live two-thirds of the people of the entire world, as the theater of its future activities, especially in the fields of industry and commerce; and

Whereas the 42 nations which comprise this Pacific littoral are faced with similar problems and possessed of identical opportunities and ideals, and, to an unusual degree, must depend upon one another for the achievement of these opportunities and for the fulfillment of the ideals, particularly from the standpoint of industry and commerce; and

Whereas the destiny of this country lies largely in its ability to coordinate its forces and to meet with the other nations of the Western Hemisphere on a basis of mutual friendship and cooperation for the equal benefit of all; and

Whereas the establishment of a permanent world mart and exhibition, including in its scope all the nations in the Western Hemisphere, will promote to the largest possible degree a spirit of friendship and cooperation between these nations who today trade with each other on a steadily increasing scale; and

Whereas such a permanent world mart and exposition—designated Pacific Mercado—has, after years of persistent study, now moved out of the sphere of contemplation into process of completion in the city of Los Angeles; and

Whereas the Pacific Mercado is of a permanent character, and every year after its inaugural there will be set aside a period of time wherein the nations may assemble their exhibits in a special and comprehensive display to which the entire world may be invited; and

Whereas during the remainder of the year the Pacific Mercado will be what its name implies, a meeting place for the merchants, manufacturers, and traders of the peoples who participate—a permanent trade mart; and

Whereas the Pacific Mercado at Los Angeles will be the first permanent exhibit held in the Pacific littoral, as well as the first world mart which will display the products not primarily of one nation, but of more than 40 nations; and

Whereas the assembled exhibits will represent not only industry and commerce alone, but art and culture as well, the fruits of the labor and genius of the various nations involved; and

Whereas the Pacific Mercado, in its landscape structures and equipment, will be of enduring character and will justify each invited nation in erecting permanent structure for the housing of its exhibits and a general meeting place between its officials and between its merchants and their customers; and

Whereas among the features planned will be special facilities to house the consulates of the various nations; and

Whereas the ensemble will constitute a symmetry of beautifully designated steel and concrete structures and landscaping that will be without parallel in the history of world exhibitions; and

Whereas the Pacific Mercado has the unqualified endorsement of the Governor of California, the legislature, and other public officials, as well as outstanding groups of business executives, as furnishing a gathering place on our shores where the civilizations of the Western Hemisphere and of the Orient may meet for an exchange of ideas and commodities, thus helping all to solve common problems and weld all together in a common cause: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully urge the President to extend, on behalf of the Pacific Exposition and Mercado of Los Angeles, invitations to the governments and dominions of the world to participate in the Pacific Exposition and Mercado of 1940; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and to the Senators and Represenatives of the State of California in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

SALARIES OF BAILIFFS OF DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I introduce a bill as to which I am sure the distinguished and gracious chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to which the bill will be referred, will call upon the Attorney General for his views.

I ask that the bill be read, and then I will ask consent to make a brief statement concerning it.

The bill (S. 2501) providing a monthly salary for bailiffs of United States district courts, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the laws relating to the compensation of bailiffs of United States district courts, any person holding the office of bailiff in any such court shall receive, beginning with the first day of the month following the enactment of this act, a salary at the rate of $130 a month, in lieu of per diem compensation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement concerning the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, this bill affects an undetermined number of employees of United States district courts. I say "undetermined" because the Department of Justice has no way of ascertaining precisely how many bailiffs are affected until the end of the fiscal year, at which time a report is prepared indicating the number of court hours or days that have been served by bailiffs throughout the United States. The number of bailiff days is dependent on the volume of cases on the dockets of the respective Federal courts.

Under the present system a bailiff is paid $4.50 for every day the Federal court is in session or the judge or judges are present either in court or in their chambers. Practically all Federal courts have 3 months' vacation, and many United States district courts meet but once or twice a year. This means that the bailiff has really less than a part-time job. I believe that a monthly salary of $130 is quite nominal for full-time service on the part of a court officer.

It is my understanding that the Department of Justice has recently recognized the inequity of the situation and also the inefficiency of part-time bailiffs, and for that reason I am hopeful the very able chairman of the Judiciary Committee will refer the bill to the Attorney General, for by so doing he will permit the chief law officer an opportunity to express himself on the subject.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL—LEGAL GUARDIAN OF ROY D. COOK

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, Senate bill 410, Calendar No. 524, for the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, was introduced by me and has been reported from the Committee on Claims. I am advised by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], who reported the bill, that it was reported under some misapprehension on the part of certain members of the committee. An amendment was proposed to the bill by the committee which I think the committee now may desire to alter in some respects.

In view of the absence of the junior Senator from Michigan, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be removed from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Claims for further consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 5110. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Russell V. Pemberton;

H. R. 5462. An act to increase the age of consent for marriage in the District of Columbia to 18 years of age in the case of males and 16 years of age in the case of females;

H. R. 6242. An act to protect the buyers of potatoes in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 6696. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", known as the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928, approved February 27, 1929.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ROBINSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To strike out all of section 14 after the word "unless", in line 18, page 10, and insert in lieu of the parts stricken out the following: "the President shall have determined after a study of the penal and correctional system by the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration, or other appropriate agency, that the projects to be financed with such loan or grant will tend to eliminate prison competition with private enterprise and will facilitate the useful employment, humane treatment, and rehabilitation of persons convicted of crime: Provided further, That prisoners may be used in the preparation of materials for and in labor upon projects authorized as provided for in this section."

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

In section 5, on page 6, line 3, after the word "Administration", to add the following:

"The Administrator of the Works Progress Administration shall upon request make available to representatives of the public the names, positions, and salaries of all administrative personnel

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT (S. DOC. NO. 74)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask consent that the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States, together with the separate and dissenting opinions in the several cases recently decided involving the validity of taxes imposed by the Social Security Act, may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CROP INSURANCE FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 108), submitted by Mr. PEPPER March 21, 1937, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, a plan and recommendations for the establishment of a system of crop insurance for fruits and vegetables, and to make such studies as may be necessary in connection therewith.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

PROBLEMS INCIDENT TO PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in connection with Filipino independence and the law which Congress recently enacted, a committee appointed by the President known as the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs has been making certain studies. A letter has been addressed to me by Mr. Francis B. Sayre, the chairman of that committee. I ask that his letter be printed in the RECORD in full, following my remarks, for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 24, 1937.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: As promised in the conversation which the Secretary of War and I had with you on February 23, 1937, with regard to the approaching visit of President Quezon of the Philippine Commonwealth and the expected discussions between him and the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, I now wish to acquaint you and the other members of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with the progress and results of the discussions which have ensued. In so doing I feel that it is desirable to review some of the circumstances which led up to these discussions.

The Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act, approved on March 24, 1934, provides the arrangements which control and guide, until July 4, 1946, the relationship which exists between the Government of the United States and the Commonwealth Government of the Philippines set up on November 15, 1935. This act did not become effective, as you know, until its provisions were accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature on May 1, 1934. In this resolution it was stated that in accepting the Tydings-McDuffie Act the legislature relied upon a statement of President Roosevelt "which gives to the Filipino people reasonable assurances of further hearing and due consideration of their views." [1]

The statement of President Roosevelt referred to was that contained in his message to Congress on March 2, 1934, recommending the enactment of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, as follows:

"I do not believe that other provisions of the original law need be changed at this time. Where imperfections or inequalities exist I am confident that they can be corrected after proper hearing and in fairness to both peoples." [2]

Provisions in the earlier Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act to which the Philippine Legislature took exception, in rejecting that act, and which they hoped to have corrected in the Tydings-McDuffie Act, related "to immigration, military, and other reservations, powers of the high commissioner, and trade relations between the islands and the United States." [3]

With regard to the Tydings-McDuffie Act, the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, then president of the Philippine Senate and chairman of the Philippine independence delegation, in a letter to you dated March 22, 1934, 2 days before the passage of the act, stated as follows:

"There are, of course, other provisions of the bill to which we object, but we are willing to take it as it is now, and we have given up any attempt at this time to have it in any way amended, because we are relying upon the statement made by the President in his message to Congress March 2, 1934 * * *.

"Furthermore, we have seen the attitude of the chairmen of both committees of Congress toward the Filipino people's freedom and welfare, and we have no doubt that upon further investigation, when they shall have found that independence can be granted in a much shorter time and that other provisions of the bill need improvement, they will so recommend to the Congress." [4]

Moreover, Vice President John N. Garner, in his speech at the joint session of the Philippine Legislature on November 12, 1935 (3 days before the inauguration of the commonwealth government), stated in regard to "inequalities in our trade relations", as follows:

"Our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in sending the last independence bill to Congress, accompanied it with a recommendation that where there were inequalities in our trade relations, they should be adjusted by a commission representing both peoples who could arrive at an equitable decision which would prove advantageous to our 120,000,000 people and to your 14,000,000 people." [5]

The statements quoted evidence a feeling on the part of responsible persons in both countries that certain "imperfections or inequalities" may be found, upon further study, to exist in the independence act. These so-called imperfections or inequalities in regard to future relationships have been regarded as being susceptible of adjustment through joint study and conference.

Contemporaneously with the recognition that imperfections and inequalities might exist in the independence act, an Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs was set up in December 1934. Acting upon a suggeston made by you and Senators McKELLAR, McADOO, and GIBSON in a joint telegram to President Roosevelt, this committee began in January 1935 a study of United States-Philippine trade relations.[6] Since that time this interdepartmental committee has been studying Philippine problems and coordinating the activities of the various administrative departments and agencies of the United States Government concerned with Philippine affairs. In the recent discussions with President Quezon, the deliberations of the interdepartmental committee have been attended by representatives of the Departments of State, War, Navy, Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce, and the Tariff Commission. It is the opinion of this committee, as well as of President Quezon, that in justice to the United States and to the Philippines uncertanties and misconceptions in regard to the future political and economic relations between the two countries should be removed as soon as practicable. Until these uncertainties are removed, necessary economic adjustments in the islands will be delayed.

The interdepartmental committee is also of the opinion, on the basis of evidence now available, that certain modifications in existing legislation may be necessary to facilitate the adjustment of Philippine economy to a position independent of preferences in the United States market. However, the committee cannot, until further study has been given the subject, recommend the specific adjustments which should be undertaken, nor can it estimate the period of time which will be required for making such adjustments. Much study has been devoted to a consideration of these matters by both the United States and the Philippine Governments, but no joint program has been formulated.

In addition to the problems involved in the adjustment of the national economy of the Philippines, there are comparable problems involved in providing an adjustment of American export trade to a nonpreferential, competitive position in the Philippine market. According to the terms of the independence act, American producers and export interests will be faced with an abrupt transition on July 4, 1946, from a condition of free access to the Philippine market to one in which full Philippine tariff duties apply. The problems involved in this adjustment should likewise be studied.

A recognition of these problems led the interdepartmental committee to the conclusion that it was desirable that a joint committee of American and Philippine experts be set up to study the problems and to formulate recommendations looking toward the correction of any "imperfections or inequalities" which might be found to exist in the present arrangements. President Roosevelt concurred in the proposal that the committee be created and he approved the appointment of the American members of the committee.[7] This joint committee held its first meeting on April 19, 1937, and is now carrying on its studies.[8]

The joint committee will conduct its studies with the general understanding (agreed upon between the interdepartmental committee and President Quezon) that preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines will be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent with affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust their national economy. This does not mean that preferential tariff rates or preferential excise rates will be withdrawn prior to July 4, 1946, the date for complete independence fixed by the terms of the independence act. The studies of the joint committee will be based on the assumption that trade preferences will be terminated on that date or as soon as practicable thereafter, having in mind the difficult task of economic adjustment with which the islands appear to be faced as trade preferences are withdrawn.

President Quezon, as you doubtless know, has suggested advancement of the date of independence to December 1938 or July 4, 1939. With reference to this suggestion, the interdepartmental committee and President Quezon have agreed that, insofar as they are authorized to speak, complete political independence of the Philippines shall become effective not later than July 4, 1946, the date fixed under the terms of the independence act. The Joint Committee, however, is instructed, in making its recommendations, to consider the bearing an advancement in the date of political independence to 1938 or 1939 would have on determining the date of termination of trade preferences between the United States and the Philippine Islands and on facilitating or retarding the execution of a program of economic adjustment in the Philippines. Legislation by Congress would, of course, be required to effect any change in the date of independence.

The functions of the joint committee, in general, are to consider proposals which have been made for changing the political and economic relations of the United States with the Philippines; to hold public hearings for interested parties both in the United States and in the Philippines; to study the problem of making adjustments in Philippine national economy; to prepare the way for a trade conference; and to make recommendations. Among the problems which will be given consideration by the joint committee are the following:

The character of the trade preferences which should exist for a specified, limited period.

The precise arrangements for governing the trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands after the termination of preferential trade relations.

Economic adjustments that could be undertaken in the Philippines and methods of executing and financing such adjustments.

The need or appropriateness of changes in the Philippine currency and banking system, and in the provisions for servicing Philippine bonded indebtedness, that may be required to implement the plan for economic adjustment recommended by the joint committee.

Adequate protection of the rights and interests of the United States and its citizens in the Philippines and of the Philippines and its citizens in the United States after the attainment of independence.

The bearing which the possible negotiation of the neutralization agreement provided for in section 11 of the Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act would have on the problems studied by the joint committee.

It is anticipated that the report and recommendations of the joint committee will be submitted sometime before the close of 1937 to the President of the United States through the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs and to the President of the Commonwealth Government. It is hoped that this report may be available in ample time for consideration by the Congress and by the Philippine Assembly this coming autumn and winter.

For over a quarter of a century successive administrations of our Government have based their policy with reference to the Philippines upon an abiding confidence in the ability of the Philippine people ultimately to govern themselves as a free and independent nation. The task is one which involves problems of great magnitude. These problems are not merely those relating to trade between the two peoples but political and economic considerations of far-reaching significance to the United States, to the Philippines, and to all nations having interests in the Far East. The attainment of the objectives which both peoples have had in mind will require patience, a sense of fair play, and cooperation. It is believed that the leaders of both peoples, imbued with the highest ideals, will be able to surmount the difficulties that yet lie ahead of them. I can assure you that, with such ideals in mind, the joint committee will endeavor to make some contribution toward the successful conclusion of this great undertaking.

In view of the public interest in the problem, especially at this time, you may care to make this letter and its enclosures a matter of record for the information of Congress and the public.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS B. SAYRE,
Chairman, Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs.

[Enclosures: Press releases as stated.]

[Enclosure No. 1]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
March 18, 1937.

Joint statement of President Quezon and Mr. Sayre, chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs

Arrangements are being made for the appointment shortly of a joint preparatory committee of American and Philippine experts. The committee is to study trade relations between the United States and the Philippines and to recommend a program for the adjustment of Philippine national economy. This announcement followed conferences between President Quezon, of the Philippine Commonwealth, and the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, which is acting on behalf of President Roosevelt in the preliminary discussions. Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre is chairman of this committee.

Inasmuch as the independence act provides that complete political independence of the Philippines shall become effective on July 4, 1946, and inasmuch as President Quezon has suggested that the date of independence might be advanced to 1938 or 1939, it was agreed that the joint committee of experts would be expected in making its recommendations to consider the bearing which an advancement in the date of independence would have on facilitating or retarding the execution of a program of economic adjustment in the Philippines. It was further agreed that preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines are to be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent wih affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust their national economy. Thereafter it is contemplated that trade relations between the two countries will be regulated in accordance with a reciprocal-trade agreement on a nonpreferential basis.

[Enclosure No. 2]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
April 14, 1937.

Joint preparatory committee of American and Philippine experts

In accordance with the arrangements referred to in the joint statement of President Quezon, of the Philippine Commonwealth, and Mr. Sayre, chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, dated March 18, 1937, President Roosevelt has approved the setting up of a joint preparatory committee of American and Philippine experts to study trade relations between the United States and the Philippines and to recommend a program for the adjustment of Philippine national economy in preparation for the termination of preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines. President Quezon and the interdepartmental committee have already agreed that preferential trade relations are to be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent with affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust their national economy.

The members of the joint committee appointed by the interdepartmental committee with the approval of President Roosevelt and by President Quezon are as follows:

AMERICAN GROUP

Joseph E. Jacobs, vice chairman of the committee and chairman of the American group. Mr. Jacobs is Chief of the Office of Philippine Affairs, Department of State.

Louis Domeratzky, Chief, Division of Regional Information, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

Lynn R. Edminster, chief economic analyst, Division of Trade Agreements, Department of State.

Col. Donald C. McDonald, Assistant to the Chief, Bureau of Insular Affairs, War Department.

Carl Robbins, Assistant Chief, Sugar Section, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Department of Agriculture.

Frank A. Waring, senior economist, United States Tariff mission.

PHILIPPINE GROUP

José Yulo, vice chairman of the committee and chairman of the Philippine group. Mr. Yulo is secretary of justice of the Philippine Commonwealth.

Conrado Benitez, dean, college of business, University of the Philippines.

Joaquin M. Elizalde, member of National Economic Council.

Quintin Paredes, Resident Commissioner for the Philippines.

José E. Romero, floor leader, majority party, in the national assembly.

Manuel Roxas, floor leader, minority party, in the national assembly.

The joint committee will begin its work under the direction of the chairman of the Interdepartmental Committee on Philippine Affairs, the Honorable Francis B. Sayre. The first meeting of the joint committee will be held on Monday, April 19, 1937.

In addition to the above members, a number of special technical experts will be attached to the committee.

W. P. A. ADMINISTRATIVE PAY ROLL IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter addressed to me by Aubrey Williams, Acting Administrator of the Works Progress Administration, and a letter written by me to Mr. Williams.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 15, 1937.

Senator RUSH HOLT,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLT: This is in reply to a telephone request from your office for names, addresses, and salaries of persons holding supervisory or administrative positions in the W. P. A. in West Virginia.

We have not made it a practice to give out information concerning the individual salaries and addresses of employees except those in a position to formulate policy or direct major portions of the operations. We have felt that the public could have no legitimate interest in such information and that its release would very possibly result in these persons being subjected to solicitation from salesmen and the gossip of neighbors.

We do feel that the public could and should have a very real interest in the total amount of our administrative pay roll, the various salary grades for different kinds of work, and the number of persons employed in the various categories. Upon request we are glad to make listings of this kind.

Very truly yours,

AUBREY WILLIAMS,
Acting Administrator.

MAY 25, 1937.

Mr. AUBREY WILLIAMS,
Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I am in receipt of your letter of May 15. Since it is my duty as one of the Members of Congress to determine the amount of money to be spent by the Works Progress Administration during the coming fiscal year, I feel that the information requested is of much importance. Certainly it is not being procured for solicitation of salesmen. As to gossip, I feel that a public pay roll is a public matter. The best way to stop gossip is to let the people know the facts. If anyone on the pay roll does not deserve to be there and is receiving far beyond what he should, I see no reason why neighbors should not talk about the matter because the neighbors are the ones who pay the bill. As you know, I unearthed a large number of individuals last summer on the W. P. A. pay rolls who were not entitled to be there on need or merit, and I feel that it has come to quite a state of affairs when a Member of the United States Senate, who is called upon to pass appropriations, cannot find out how much and who is being paid within his own State. Therefore, I request again that you furnish me with a list of names, addresses, and salaries of persons holding supervisory and administrative positions with the W. P. A. in West Virginia.

I cannot agree with you that the public could have no interest in such information. I feel that the public has a very important and definite interest. I do not agree with the contention that a public pay roll is a closed affair and that the people who pay the bill do not have a right to know the details.

Through a list last year I found very wealthy individuals receiving money from the relief administration. I found employees holding more than one job. I found employees placed on the relief pay rolls who were receiving many times their former private salaries. I found salaries increased by large amounts with no specific reason given or known for such advancement except political consideration. Could you mean that this is not legitimate for me to trace down such practices?

Yours very truly,

RUSH D. HOLT.

FUTURE AIR CONQUESTS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR M'ADOO

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of aviation delivered by Senator MCADOO on May 24, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADMINISTRATION OF FEDERAL RELIEF

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Frank R. Kent, under the title "Using Relief as a Club", published in the Baltimore Sun of the 26th instant, which appears in the Appendix.]

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 583, being the bill (S. 1791) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I do not understand the nature of the request which was submitted by the Senator from California.

Mr. McADOO. I have asked for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 1791, relating to the acquisition of certain lands to be added to Yosemite National Park. On the call of the calendar last Monday the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] objected to the bill, but he has now withdrawn the objection.

Mr. McNARY. Why does not the Senator in the ordinary way move to proceed to consideration of the bill?

Mr. McADOO. Very well. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1791) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment was agreed to last Monday. The question, therefore, is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator give a brief explanation of the bill? I have no desire to oppose it, but should like to know what it is.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the acquisition, by negotiation or by condemnation, of approximately 7,000 acres of what is known as the most concentrated sugar-pine forests in the Sierra Mountains adjoining Yosemite National Park.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can the Senator give us an idea of what it will cost to acquire the lands in question?

Mr. McADOO. I can, and shall do so in just a moment.

This stand of sugar pine was originally a part of the Yosemite National Park, but under acts of Congress it was finally excluded, along with some other areas, and is now owned by the Yosemite Sugar Pine Lumber Co., which proposes to begin logging in this area at an early date.

I may say to the Senate that the sugar pine is without doubt the noblest tree in the great Sierra Nevada Mountain Range. It is not so great in diameter as are the famous Sequoias, but in symmetry and beauty it is far superior to the great Sequoias. This particular area is noted, as I have said, for having the most concentrated stand in the world of this noble tree. All over the country there is demand for the preservation of this particular area, and the bill grants the necessary authority for its acquisition.

I may say in this connection that no new money is necessary for the acquisition of the forest lands involved. It may cost from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000. I am advised by the Interior Department that the funds for this purpose can be provided out of appropriations made for forest lands and other purposes. A statement to that effect is incorporated in the report made to the committee by Mr. Arno B. Cammerer, Director of the National Park Service.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. My information is that the area which the Senator's bill seeks to incorporate in the park was at one time a part of the Yosemite National Park.

Mr. McADOO. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The desire is to preserve this very remarkable stand of fine and exceptionally beautiful trees.

Mr. McADOO. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The cost is estimated at between $2,000,000 and $2,500,000.

Mr. McADOO. I believe the Senator is correct in his statement of the figures.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from California why this area was at one time excluded from the Yosemite National Park?

Mr. McADOO. I have not consulted the record and cannot give the Senator the exact reasons which actuated Congress in permitting the area to be withdrawn from the park. I do not know what caused the Congress to take that step, but that is the way this property finally reverted to private ownership. It is that property or area which we now want to preserve and add to the Yosemite National Park. It is not a very large tract, but it contains these magnificent trees.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I understood the Senator to say that the money for the purchase of the tract will be taken out of relief funds.

Mr. McADOO. I should have said out of certain funds in the hands of the Interior Department. I believe I did say "relief funds", but that was an error. If the Senator will refer to the report accompanying the bill he will find an exact statement of the matter.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I observe from the report that appropriations have heretofore been made for the Park Service and the money for this purpose is now in the hands of the Park Service.

Mr. McADOO. That is, I believe, correct.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] will find in the report of the committee a statement submitted by the Director of the National Park Service explaining how existing funds may be utilized for this purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to know whether the funds are to come out of relief-fund appropriations.

Mr. McADOO. No; I was mistaken when I used the word "relief."

From Mr. Cammerer's statement incorporated in the report of the committee I read as follows:

The basic authority for the acquisition of lands for the relief of unemployment and the performance of useful public works is contained in the act of Congress approved March 1, 1933 (48 Stat., p. 22). The objectives of that act, as outlined in section 1 thereof, are as follows:

Mr. BYRNES. I have no desire to have the Senator read further.

Mr. McADOO. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, on behalf of the United States under any fund or moneys available for such purpose, except from the general fund of the Treasury, any of the following-described lands in the State of California now in private ownership, to wit: Section 25, lots 3, 4, 5, 8, and 9, section 34, northeast quarter, southeast quarter, northwest quarter, lots 1 to 10, inclusive, section 35, section 36, township 1 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, southeast quarter, lots 2, 3, and 4, section 30, section 31, township 1 south, range 20 east; sections 1, 2, and 3, east half section 10, sections 11 and 12, north half section 14, northeast quarter section 15, township 2 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, lots 3 to 7, inclusive, section 6, township 2 south, range 20 east, Mount Diablo meridian.

SEC. 2. When title to the aforesaid privately owned lands has been vested in the United States, all of the lands described in section 1 hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Yosemite National Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights.

SEC. 3. The provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, as amended, known as the Federal Water Power Act, shall not apply to any of the lands added to the Yosemite National Park pursuant to the provisions of this act.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—WORK OF THE SESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the calendar was called during the last session of the Senate. Only a few bills are now on the calendar, and most of them have been repeatedly called and objection has been made each time they were called. Some of the bills in the latter class I hope may be recommitted to the committees reporting them, in order to clear the calendar. I ask that further call of the calendar be dispensed with at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senate has kept well up with its work during the present session, as is indicated by the small number of bills on the calendar. Until the committees report additional proposed legislation there is very little business of importance to be transacted in the Senate. I ask consideration of the thought that it would be well for the standing committees to report as speedily as they can, in order to bring measures before this body so that they may receive consideration .

It is not intended by this statement to make any complaint as to the action of the respective committees. The Appropriations Committee is working almost continuously. Its subcommittees are very busy. Three major appropriation bills still remain to be disposed of by the Senate. Manifestly, the Senate cannot take them up until the committee finds itself able to report. I express the hope that rapid progress may be made in this particular.

In view of the fact that next Monday will be Decoration Day, and in view of the further fact that there is little business before the Senate, unless there is some objection, it is my intention to move an adjournment today until Friday; and on Friday, unless business shall have come in which the Senate is in a position to proceed with, it is my intention then to move a recess or adjournment until Tuesday, so that the Senate may have the opportunity of appropriately observing Decoration Day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in regard to the three general appropriation bills, I desire to say that they are all before subcommittees at this time, and are being rapidly prepared, and there will not be any undue delay. We hope to get them all before the Senate during the coming week.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems appropriate to supplement what the Senator from Tennessee has just said with the statement that it is the understanding that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which has jurisdiction of the relief bill now before the body at the other end of the Capitol, is ready to proceed with a study of that bill immediately upon the measure reaching the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

TREATIES AND CONVENTIONS SIGNED AT BUENOS AIRES CONFERENCE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, together with the letter from the Secretary of State to the President, and, with the accompanying papers and documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith to the Senate, with a view to obtaining the advice and consent of that body, five international conventions, two treaties, and an additional protocol, which were signed by the delegates of the United States of America at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, held at Buenos Aires, December 1–23, 1936. The significance of these instruments is described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of State and in the individual reports which describe and explain each document, to all of which the attention of the Senate is invited:

1. Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation, and Reestablishment of Peace.
2. Additional Protocol Relative to Nonintervention.
3. Treaty on the Prevention of Controversies.
4. Inter-American Treaty on Good Offices and Mediation.
5. Convention to Coordinate, Extend, and Assure the Fulfillment of Existing Treaties Between the American States.
6. Convention on the Pan American Highway.
7. Convention for the Promotion of Inter-American Cultural Relations.
8. Convention Concerning Artistic Exhibitions.

The conference at Buenos Aires which adopted these instruments met at a time of historic importance in the Americas. With the termination of war between two sister republics there had arisen among the peoples of every country throughout the hemisphere a fervent desire that war be banished forever as a method of resolving international disputes. The delegates who assembled there felt deeply the responsibility that had been entrusted to them and proceeded in their deliberations with a determination and despatch which distinguished this conference. So favorable did the opportunity appear for constructive results that I journeyed to the conference to signify my own realization of the high importance of the conference, and I was accorded the high honor of addressing the opening session. I can, therefore, from personal observation testify to the earnestness of purpose of the many outstanding statesmen of the Americas gathered there, and to their determination to give an example to the world of international cooperation in order that peace may prevail.

It is my considered belief that the several instruments that the delegations of the American republics formulated justify in the fullest measure the high hopes for success which they bore with them. These instruments evidence the desire and the will of the American peoples to live in peace one with another and they provide the long-awaited mechanisms for insuring the cooperation between nations indispensable to the maintenance of peace.

The original initiative for this conference came from the United States. It would, therefore, seem to me particularly fitting that the United States Government be among the first American governments in the ratification of the instruments that the conference adopted, thereby giving a further indication of the sincerity of the good-neighbor policy. I strongly recommend, therefore, that the Senate give favorable consideration to the instruments herewith submitted with a view to giving its advice and consent to their ratification.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 26, 1937.

[Accompaniments: Eight reports from the Secretary of State with seven treaties and conventions of the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 15, 1937.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to transmit herewith the following instruments which were negotiated and signed at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires December 1–23, 1936:

1. Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation, and Reestablishment of Peace.
2. Additional Protocol Relative to Nonintervention.
3. Treaty on the Prevention of Controversies.
4. Inter-American Treaty on Good Offices and Mediation.
5. Convention to Coordinate, Extend, and Assure the Fulfillment of Existing Treaties Between the American States.
6. Convention on the Pan American Highway.
7. Convention for the Promotion of Inter-American Cultural Relations.
8. Convention Concerning Artistic Exhibitions.

These documents were signed by the delegates of the United States of America, subject to ratification, in accordance with the full powers issued by you, and accordingly they are sent to you with a view to their transmission to the Senate for its advice and consent to their ratification, if you approve thereof.

I am transmitting these instruments with separate reports for your convenience, as well as that of the Senate, if you approve of their submission. The separate reports briefly describe and explain these documents.

This conference was convened in pursuance of the proposal made by you on January 30, 1936, to the Presidents of all the American republics that the time was opportune for the countries of this hemisphere at a common council table to consider their joint responsibility for the maintenance of peace. Both the spirit in which the deliberations of the conference were conducted and the achievements themselves, all reached by unanimous agreement, established this conference as one of the most successful international gatherings in recent times.

The delegations of the several countries demonstrated a solidarity of purpose and determination to strengthen the edifice of peace seldom seen at an international conference. That they succeeded is evidenced by the instruments themselves. These reinforce the structure of peace by the reaffirmation of obligations to settle by pacific means all controversies of an international character; by providing the machinery for consultation and cooperation to prevent the outbreak of war, and, should these efforts unhappily fail, to prevent the spread or prolongation of hostilities; by declaring inadmissible intervention by one state in the internal or external affairs of another; and by providing measures for the improvement of cultural relations and communications. These instruments are interconnected segments of a structure of permanent peace, so that failure to ratify one will weaken the efficacy of all.

The policy of the good neighbor which you enunciated in your first inaugural message brought into the conduct of our foreign relations a spirit of friendship, tolerance, and good will. The early evidences of what that policy means in practice has dissipated the many apprehensions held among the other American republics concerning our motives and desires. The conference at Buenos Aires was, perhaps, the most important demonstration thus far of our motives and of our willingness to cooperate for the common good. From every point of view it is to be desired that this country do its share in carrying into reality the high hopes aroused by that conference by ratifying the various instruments adopted there.

I therefore recommend these instruments to your favorable consideration, with a view to their submission to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

Faithfully yours,

CORDELL HULL.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1937

The House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WARREN, at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Humbly and reverently we wait for the breath of God. Heavenly Father, we pause in memory of those who have passed on and have become a part of our Nation's life. Thou alone canst bring light out of darkness, give peace to the troubled soul, and heal the wounded heart. Comfort all those who are dear to them, by the bonds of kinship, with the radiant hope of immortality and eternal life. Blessed Lord, we rejoice that they are not lost who find the light of sun, the stars, and God. O do Thou inspire us to live good, noble lives, going up and down this world serving Thee, lifting human burdens, enriching society, bound by the cords of human love. We pray that each day may be a preparation for the larger life of tomorrow, and, at the last, songs of praises will we ever give to Thee. In the name of our glorified Savior. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday will stand approved.

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WARREN) presided.

The Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery:

I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on Me shall never die.

For we know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens.

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I come again and will receive you unto Myself, that where I am, there ye may be also.

Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God.

If on a quiet sea,
Toward heaven we calmly sail,
With grateful hearts, O God, to Thee
We'll own the favoring gale.

But should the surges rise,
And rest delay to come,
Blest be the tempest, kind the storm
That drives us nearer home.

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy holy spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

Caroline Macklin Hughes sang God Shall Wipe Away All Tears, by Caro Roma.

Then followed 1 minute of devotional silence.

Hon. JOHN H. TOLAN, a Representative from the State of California, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN H. TOLAN

Mr. Speaker, once a year the Senate and House of Representatives, the Congress of the United States, meets and dedicates one day of each session to our colleagues who have left us for the realms of immortality. Memories are here that cannot all be spoken, and feelings which are the sweetest and holiest within the human heart.

Life's story is soon told. In terms of centuries our lives are only seconds on the calendar of time. Millions of people have come and gone; millions are living, and soon this great army of human beings will take its place with the mighty hosts of the dead.

We are but tiny ants on the surface of the earth, floating in space among millions of other planets and stars and moving at tremendous speed around that glorious orb, the sun. If our planet to which we are all clinging should pause on its axis for a millionth part of a second, human life would cease to exist.

Men live and die; they slave and toil with governmental and individual problems; they taste joy and sorrow; build massive structures as though time will never fade them, praying and believing we will be happier tomorrow than we are today.

And it is this beautiful star of human hope shining brightly in the blue sky of our souls that carries us over the storms and stress of sorrow, sickness, and death.

How much do the dead affect the living? We do not know. If they are here today, they must be close to their colleagues, for they are entitled to the privileges of the floor.

At the opening of the Seventy-fifth Congress we all heard these memorable words coming from our present Speaker, referring to our late beloved Speaker: "I cannot but feel that somehow and in some way his spiritual presence and his solicitude still abide within this Chamber."

It is a sweet thought to believe our departed Speaker and our colleagues who went with him are listening to these ceremonies dedicated to their memories. If they are here in their spiritual forms with the experiences of life and eternity back of them, they might say to us:

"We are happy you have not forgotten us. We know the joys, the affection, the toil, and worries of a Congressman; we were hurt at times for things we did not say, for things we did not do, as you have been and as others have been since the creation of mankind. We were criticized as you have been, but remember that it is one of the highest honors within the gift of the American people to represent them in the Halls of Congress and that the real heart of the American people is sound."

They might tell us not to bear from yesterday one bitterness on to tomorrow, for they found out in their eternal home people were so much better than they were said to be here below.

There is no more important session of Congress than meeting in memory of our beloved dead. All the tenderness within the human soul shines forth in its splendor today and all present will be better and happier for it. Such is the uncertainty of life that this identical audience will never meet again on earth.

Our time will come. We will follow them. But today belongs to our departed dead.

Let us think that their dying eyes read a mystic meaning which only the rapt and parting soul may know. Let us believe that in the silence of the receding world they heard the waves breaking on the farther shore and felt upon their brows the breath of eternal morning.

The divine decree that went forth when man was first created still stands unrecalled. All men have to die. The rich, the poor, the white, the black, the king, the subject, all alike have sooner or later to embark on the river that flows forever from the shores of life to the shores of eternity, and all alike have to one day stand at the tremendous bar of God.

Of all the things in this vast world of which man has knowledge, the most certain and sudden of them all is death. "I come like a thief in the night", says the Lord. He plucks a tiny little bud, the hope and sunshine of a fond father and mother, at one place; a beautiful flower in full bloom, with the star of success shining brightly upon it, at another place; and then beckons to another, faded and withered at the sunset of life. And so on down the ages will He continue until the "trumpet of the archangel shall sound to announce that time shall be no more."

Attending as we are today this beautiful memorial service, dedicated to our departed colleagues, the question arises in our minds, Shall we ever meet again? Shall we ever see them as we used to know them, hear the kind tones of the familiar voice, see the same old smile that once filled us with delight? Or is this the end of our being? A few joys and a few sorrows from babyhood to old age, and then the grave. Have our loved ones gone forever? This is best answered in the words of the past:

Gone forever! Ever? No—for since our dying race began
Ever, ever, and forever, was the leading light of man.
Those that in barbarian burials, kill'd the slave and slew the wife
Felt within themselves the sacred passion of the second life.

Indian warriors dream of ampler hunting grounds beyond the night;
Ev'n the black Australian, dying, hopes he shall return, a white.

Truth for truth and good for good!
The good, the true, the pure, the just,
Take the charm "forever" from them and then crumble into dust.

No; this cannot be the end of our being.

I leave my body as armor, which fatigues me by its weight, to continue my infinite ascension to the heaven of heavens, bathed in light eternal.

No; it cannot be, for the Savior of mankind never carried His bloody cross to the hill of Cavalry in order that man might be born and then destroyed forever. "Our Father who art in heaven" does not reign as an instrument of destruction, but to call His children to their eternal home beyond the skies.

Unite in thought at the same instant the most beautiful objects in Nature. Suppose that you see at once all of the hours of the day and all the seasons of the year; a morning of spring and a morning of autumn; a night bespangled with stars and a night darkened by clouds; meadows enameled with flowers; forests hoary with snow; fields gilded by the tints of the autumn—then alone you will have a just conception of the universe.

While you are gazing on that sun which is plunging into the vault of the west, another observer admires it emerging from the golden gates of the east. By what inconceivable power does that aged star, which is sinking, fatigued and burning, in the shades of the evening, reappear at the same instant fresh and humid with the rosy dew of the morning? At every hour of the day the glorious orb is at once rising, resplendent as noonday, and setting in the west; or, rather, our senses deceive us, and there is, properly speaking, no east or west, no north or south in the world.

In mourning for our dead, let us not forget the living. Through the silver tears of sympathy, let us outline against the golden sky of human hope the universal brotherhood of man. In the silence and stillness of the tomb, about which are clustered the sweet memories of our departed colleagues, let us pierce the veil of the mysterious future and see mankind made a little happier and a little better for having mourned for our departed ones today.

God has written upon the blossoms that sweeten the air, upon the breeze that rocks the flower upon its stem, upon the raindrops that swell the mighty river, upon the dewdrops that refresh every sprig of moss that rears its head in the desert, upon every penciled shell that sleeps in the caverns of the deep, as well as upon the mighty sun which warms and cheers the millions of creatures that live in its light—upon all He has written "None of us liveth to himself."

Tenderly and sorrowfully your colleagues of today give a last thought to our colleagues of the past. O ever dear and absent ones, we have dedicated this day to your sweet memories. "Ere this our tears, our sadness, and our prayers are with you in your eternal home." We know not how soon death shall lay us on the never-ending shores of eternity, but as long as we remain here below "we shall enshrine you in our prayers." Reverently do we hope that we will meet in a—

Realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars will be spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings that here pass before us like visions will stay in our presence forever.

Mary J. Mitchell sang There Is No Death, by O'Hara.

Hon. DEWEY SHORT, a Representative from the State of Missouri, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. DEWEY SHORT

Mr. Speaker, since we assembled in this Chamber on a similar occasion 1 year ago last month 21 Members of the Congress of the United States—6 Senators and 15 Representatives—have answered the final roll call. Death is no respecter of persons, parties, or places; ruthlessly and indiscriminately he cut through our ranks, and before his irresistible onslaught fell some of our ablest and best men from every section of our Union. Today we meet to pay them tribute and to do them honor.

It is altogether fitting and proper, sir, that we should pause in the midst of our arduous labors and exacting duties to acknowledge our respect and affection for and to pay our homage to our departed comrades; not that they need our praise so much as we need the inspiration derived from meditation upon their lives and achievements. Little that we say here will long be remembered, but the world never can forget their vigilant patriotism, their heroic and unselfish service to their country. Upon their fellow men they left an indelible imprint by the imperishable impact of their individual and powerful personalities. If time permitted and we could follow our natural inclination, we would, of course, discuss the life, character, and accomplishments of each one of our former colleagues, but of necessity our eulogy now must be composite. Other Members will incorporate their addresses on the different individuals in the printed record. But, in passing, we cannot refrain from calling the name of our late and lamented Speaker, Hon. JOSEPH WELLINGTON BYRNS, one of the most popular, just, and beloved Speakers ever to preside over this body. For over a quarter of a century he served his native State of Tennessee, which has made such a magnificent contribution to the statesmanship and history of our Nation, with exceptional distinction and high honor. It was my privilege to go on the funeral train that carried his mortal remains to rest in his beloved hills outside of Nashville. Sad as was the occasion, it was a real joy to see the tens of thousands of people, old and young, white and colored, rich and poor, who traveled many miles to line the highway, to show their deep and abiding affection for and to pay their last respects to this noble man. Knowing the character of Jo BYRNS, we realize that he would not have us single him out from his fellows or give him particular recognition; so democratic was his spirit and so warm was his human personality that he would merely wish to be counted among his fellows, all of whom worked together and did their best for their country.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years Congress has become the butt of jokes, and not infrequently the object of contempt. The cheap clown, whether in circus or higher places, makes us the subject of gibe, jest, and quip. It has become fashionable in some sophisticated and shallow circles to look upon Congress with scornful insolence. Perhaps there are times when we warrant a degree of disdain. And since every successful politician must smile when he wants to fight, and possesses—or should possess—a skin as tough as a rhinoceros, I suppose he should be impervious to all criticism. However, it is difficult to imagine anything more reprehensible than these carping critics, the chronic, contumelious cynics who constantly vent their spleen on Members of Congress. For such rapacious arrogance and blatant babbling there is no excuse and only jealousy and envy can explain such fatuous bellowing.

After all is said and done, no other group of men more perfectly reveals the true spirit, real genius, and genuine character of the American people as do the Members of the Congress of the United States. Particularly is this true of the House of Representatives. Each Member represents a cross section of American life and nearly always reflects the hopes, ambitions, interests, thoughts, ideals, and character of his constituents. This body is a mirror in which America can see herself. No doubt the picture at times is a bit disappointing and more disturbing, but we are elected by the people at frequent intervals and are directly responsible to them. Modesty will not allow us to claim that we are better than the people we represent and pride prevents us from admitting that we are any worse.

Let him who thinks that coming to Congress is an easy task attempt it. To be sure, politics, like nature, is at times freakish. Once in a great while, at remote intervals, a political storm will sweep accidentally some men into this Chamber, but their residence is temporary and not permanent unless they prove their worth. It is difficult for any person to get elected to Congress, and it is more difficult for him to return. Rarely does one little or weak or mean enter these portals, and only the big and strong and good can long remain. Here the true measure of a man is justly and unmistakably taken. But long before he comes here he has been put to the test. What is the average background of these men? As the whitest lily often springs out of the muddiest hole, so the greatest men frequently come here from the most unexpected places. Like Lincoln, many of our colleagues came from humble origins and unpromising beginnings. They wrestled with poverty and triumphed over adversity.

Others, like Washington and Lee, were born in luxury and rocked in the cradle of plenty. They overcame the handicap of riches and aristocracy; they were neither misled by wealth nor corrupted by society. In our great democracy a man is judged not so much by what his ancestors did as by what he himself can do. Emerson laid down the proper yardstick to measure correctly a man's worth when he said, "What you are speaks so loud that I cannot hear what you say." Our fallen heroes are mourned today not so much for what they said here as for what they did here. They are remembered not for their flaming eloquence, pleasing as it was, but for what they were.

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

Not by what they possessed, but how they performed are they today measured. The test is not money, but mind and character. It is good to know that in this fair land these stalwart men, coming from widely scattered regions, representing widely divergent views, reflecting every shade of public opinion on burning political, social, economic, and religious questions, were here working together in the common cause of a great nation—working faithfully and tirelessly to keep open wide the door of equal opportunity for all men, to make life richer and more abundant, to maintain our national honor, to prove ourselves worthy of the liberty, and to perpetuate the free institutions bequeathed to us through the heroic sacrifices of our forefathers. Their difficult task was to preserve all that was good in the old order and at the same time to courageously blaze new trails that lead to human betterment in a quickly changing and baffling world. Our duty is to carry on their unfinished task.

Mr. Speaker, it was never an easy nor an altogether pleasant task to serve in this body, and this is particularly true today. The manifold duties and multiplying demands made on Members of Congress in and through all the vast ramifications of a complex and intricate Government increasingly draw upon their strength and endurance, adding yearly to the terrific toll of human life. Anyone who survives a political campaign in which his life's history is reviewed in detail and during which he moves constantly and inescapably under the pitiless searchlight of publicity must of necessity possess some virtue.

To remain sweet when accused falsely, to silence the tongue of slander, to still the voice of character assassins, to triumph over the fair and strenuous efforts of formidable opponents every 2 years in both primary and general elections taxes one's strength and patience to the limit. Naturally, there come many disappointments with this public life. A man who rises to distinction in this body must do so because of his own personal worth, his mental capacity, untiring industry, and absolute honesty. The path is steep and rugged, and it is covered with sandpaper instead of velvet.

Yet out of this turbulent strife and clash of opinion, out of the heated debates and conflicting interests, out of the atmosphere of uncertainty which we all are forced to breathe, there come the priceless compensation and immeasurable joy of mutual confidence and respect and of real and lasting friendships. In no other body of men do I believe one could possibly find such a fine spirit of genuine and wholesome fellowship, such a splendid feeling of camaraderie. This is because I suppose each one of us realizes rather fully that through which the other fellow has passed. In this sad hour and on this solemn occasion, death once more has leveled all our differences, obliterated all lines of division, and drawn us closely together in the bonds of friendship and affection. The heat of controversy is now dissipated; there is no rancor in our souls or envy in our hearts. Petty jealousies are forgotten, and individual interests and purposes are buried with our comrades whom we memorialize today. Beneath the differences of individual opinion and below the eccentricities of personalities there is a more fundamental unity of the interests and purposes of mankind.

Each one of our former colleagues died at his post of duty, as he would have it.

Let me live out my years in heat of blood.
Let me die drunken with the dreamer's wine.
Let me not see this soul-house built of mud,
Go toppling to the dust—a vacant shrine.

Let me go quickly like a candle light
Snuffed out just at the heyday of its glow.
Give me high noon—and let it then be night.
Thus would I go.

And grant me, when I face the grisly thing,
One haughty cry to pierce the gray, perhaps.
O let me be a tune-swept fiddle string,
That feels the master melody- and snaps.

These comrades died "in heat of blood" and went "quickly like a candlelight snuffed out just at the heyday of its glow." They have felt the "master melody", and we would not ask them to return. At last they have gained rest and peace from their trying and exacting labors, and have gone to their reward for having served God and country well.

Life begins and ends in mystery. While there may not be exact scientific proof for immortality, certainly there is no disproof of this eternal longing of the human heart and its natural rebellion at the thought of extinction. Death is no more mysterious than birth, and they are not so much different things as they are two sides of the same thing—the will of a higher power which renders us helpless and impotent in all our might and wisdom before its insolvable mysteries. If there were no death there could be no life, and faith in the eternal values of truth, beauty, and goodness is a legitimate and necessary function of the human soul.

O world, thou choosest not the better part!
It is not wisdom to be only wise,
And on the inward vision close the eyes,
But it is wisdom to believe the heart.
Columbus found a world and had no chart,
Save one that faith deciphered in the skies;
To trust the soul's invincible surmise
Was all his science and his only art.
Our knowledge is a torch of smoky pine
That lights the pathway but one step ahead,
Across a void of mystery and dread.
Bid, then, the tender light of faith to shine
By which alone the mortal heart is led
Unto the thinking of the thought divine.

In these beautiful lines Santayana clearly and convincingly shows that life is deeper than logic and the human heart has reason that reason knows not of.

These men were "steadfast, abounding in the work of the Lord", because they felt their "labors were not in vain in the Lord." With strong minds, brave hearts, and willing hands they faithfully performed their daily tasks and courageously discharged their duties. With this sublime faith in the dignity of the human soul and with unalloyed ambition to leave the world better than they found it, they have passed from our midst.

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust:
Thou madest man, he knows not why,
He thinks he was not made to die;
And Thou hast made him: Thou art just.

A cornet solo, Going Home, was played by Winfred Kemp, principal musician, United States Marine Band Orchestra.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pronounced the benediction:

The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God and His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord; and the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit be among you and remain with you always. Amen.

AFTER RECESS

At the conclusion of the recess the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WARREN, called the House to order, and then, pursuant to House Resolution No. 215, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, declared the House adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), pursuant to its order heretofore entered, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 27, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Edward G. Goetz, pastor of the Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Father, Thou who art infinite, just, merciful, and loving, we bow before Thee as Thy children in the universal family of mankind.

May wellsprings of gratitude for Thy bountiful blessings in our lives continually surge up as fountains of help and hope and blessings upon the lives of others.

In Thine almighty hand Thou dost hold the scepter of universal government and good tidings. Thou hast committed this high and holy task to the hearts and hands of men.

To this end, we commend to Thee these, Thy servants, the President and the Congress of the United States, the Governors of our several Commonwealths, our judges and magistrates, and all others in authority. Fill them with divine wisdom to understand Thy way, and give them determined wills to carry it out in this our beloved country and in our relationships with all nations.

Forgive us of our sins. In the name of Christ, our Savior, we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1791. An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ESTATE OF REUEL SMALL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I present a privileged report and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 220

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the estate of Reuel Small, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Reuel Small.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 221

Resolved, That RICHARD M. SIMPSON, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the following standing committees, to wit: Committees on the Census; Mines and Mining; Pensions; and Immigration and Naturalization.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall have no objection if the gentleman will modify his request and take his time after the disposition of business in order on Calendar Wednesday. I have been taking this position consistently on such requests.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, and modify my request. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I must, of course, ask that the gentleman's time come after the disposition of privileged matters, such as conference reports, special rules, and so forth.

Mr. RICH. I understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEFAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I call up House Joint Resolution 332, providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at Great Lakes Exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the international exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, by Great Lakes Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings, or exhibits at the said exhibition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marketing requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond, and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law, may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That Great Lakes Exposition shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by Great Lakes Exposition to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PRINTZ-BIEDERMAN CO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 3326, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, entitled "An act for the relief of Printz-Biederman Co."

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Printz-Biederman Co. the sum of $741.40 as reimbursement for money paid as duty upon certain merchandise imported under section 308 of the Tariff Act of 1922 (42 Stat. 938).

The merchandise was admitted temporarily free of duty under bond under section 308, which required exportation of the articles within 6 months from the date of importation. Exportation was not made within that period, as a result of which the collector of customs collected duty on the imported merchandise, as required by law. The importer sought relief in the United States Customs Court, which affirmed the action of the collector of customs in assessing duty because of the failure of the importer to export the merchandise in accordance with the terms of the statute. No appeal was taken from this decision.

The importer now seeks relief, by means of legislation, in the form of reimbursement of the duty legally assessed and paid.

The importer failed to comply with the statutory requirement that the imported merchandise be exported within 6 months from the date of importation. The bill H. R. 3326 selects a particular importer for special treatment by excepting him from the general provisions of section 308 of the Tariff Act of 1922 (42 Stat. 938), thus discriminating against the whole body of importers and establishing a precedent which would open the door to relief in all cases in which an importer, because of his failure to comply with the terms of the statute, has been required to pay customs duties legally due.

There appears to be no valid reason why the importer in this case should not be bound by the provisions of the law, as are other importers. It is my belief that the field of special legislation should not be opened to relieve special classes of importers from the consequences of their failure to comply with statutory requirements, and especially where the validity of the collection of the duty, which it is now proposed to refund, has been upheld by the court.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 27, 1937.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and bill be sent back to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. What right has the President of the United States to veto an act of Congress any more than the Supreme Court has that right?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. PETTENGILL, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. BIGELOW, Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona, Mr. HOOK, Mr. AMLIE, Mr. REED of Illinois, Mr. ELLENBOGEN, and Mr. COFFEE of Washington asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. WILCOX, is unavoidably detained from the House on account of illness.

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which at one time was known as the relief bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 2 of the bill has been read and is now open to amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of making an announcement. There are a great many amendments pending to the remaining portions of this joint resolution, and in connection with some of them there is a great deal of interest, and the amendments will of necessity take some time.

There are lying on the Speaker's table two conference reports, one the independent offices conference report and the other the second deficiency appropriation conference report. It is absolutely imperative that these two conference reports be acted upon before June 1. That means today. The Social Security Board is without funds to meet the June allocations of old-age benefits. I do not think I need go further on that. The Treasury Department is without funds to carry on the clerical force for continuation of the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates. Several other agencies will be called upon to furlough personnel beginning the first of next week if these reports are not acted on at once.

I want to go as far as I can, and hope to conclude consideration of the relief bill today if we can do so. In any event, it is going to be absolutely necessary to take time enough to dispose of these conference reports before adjourning today, whatever that time may be.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Can the gentleman inform the House whether any definite time has been set when he will take up the conference reports for consideration this afternoon?

Mr. WOODRUM. Not beyond the fact it will obviously take 2 or 3 hours on the conference reports. If we get to the point this afternoon where it is apparent we cannot do both, we will then take up the conference reports.

Mr. FISH. In accord with what the gentleman has stated, I would assume that when it comes to 4 o'clock we will take up the conference reports?

Mr. WOODRUM. If we have not completed consideration of the pending bill by that time, it will be proper then to take up the conference reports.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it the intention to take up this bill tomorrow?

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot answer that. The gentleman knows we have agreed to adjourn over from tomorrow until next Tuesday.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understood we were to have a session tomorrow.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct, but I think there will be nothing done tomorrow.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman propose to finish the pending bill today?

Mr. WOODRUM. If it is possible to do so.

Mr. PARSONS. And the conference reports will not come up until after we finish this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. If it is not possible to complete this bill, we will dispose of the conference reports.

Many of the Members have received telegrams from home from people who are uneasy about their pension money. The Social Security Board does not have the money to pay these people's pensions on June 1 unless we provide it. It is necessary to take up the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill before we adjourn this week.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman was just about to say something about telegrams which were coming from home. Will the gentleman finish the statement?

Mr. WOODRUM. I stated a great many Members have had telegrams from the State administrations inquiring whether or not they are going to get their money for old-age allocations and benefit payments in June.

Mr. PARSONS. I thought the gentleman was about to make a statement about telegrams coming from back home with reference to the earmarking of the money in this bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. A great many of those have been coming, too.

Mr. PARSONS. I may say to the gentleman that if the membership of the House desires to stay here to dispose of this bill and the conference reports, it can do so by not adjourning today until the consideration of these matters is completed.

Mr. WOODRUM. The House can always do what it wants to do.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] may be extended 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. I have noticed in the papers statements that the collections under the tax provisions of the Social Security Act up to June 30 would amount to over $800,000,000. If this is correct—and I do not know whether it is or not—what is the necessity for any rush in getting this through? Is it due to the fact Congress must appropriate these funds after they come in?

Mr. WOODRUM. The tax goes into the Treasury and Congress has to appropriate the funds.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If these conference reports are so important, why cannot the Committee now rise and take them up, and then go back into Committee and spend the rest of today and tomorrow in the consideration of the relief bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Committee could do that, except we are already in Committee.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The Committee could rise, though.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH, Mr. FULLER, and Mr. FISH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: Page 4, line 2, after the word "President", insert the following: "with the cooperation of a committee of 10 Members of Congress, 5 Members from the Senate and 5 Members of the House of Representatives, the House Members to be Mr. WOODRUM, of Virginia; Mr. O'NEAL, of Kentucky; Mr. BOILEAU, of Wisconsin; Mr. TABER, of New York; and Mr. JENKINS, of Ohio."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the portion of the bill to which it is directed. The amendment undertakes to introduce some new matter in the proposed legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania in support of the amendment, with regard to its germaneness.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the law, as it is written in this bill, giving the President of the United States supreme authority with regard to the matters mentioned in the bill, is going beyond the jurisdiction of Congress. I want a committee appointed, with five Members from the Senate and five Members from the House of Representatives, to assist the President of the United States in disposing of these funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Section 2 of the bill gives certain powers to the President of the United States. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would add a new agency, made up of certain Members of Congress, to serve the same purpose. Adding a new agency or adding another class to one class is not germane. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Does the Chair mean to state that the amendment sets up a separate organization? This committee is only to cooperate with the President of the United States. The amendment is not designed to set up any new organization.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the gentleman's amendment adds to the specific class designated in the section. For that reason it is not germane.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment in good faith. I think the majority of the Members of the House of Representatives have in the past 5 years placed absolute confidence in the President of the United States with respect to the expenditure of relief funds. The President of the United States has turned his authority for the distribution of these funds over to Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes, without the Members of Congress having any knowledge regarding the projects for which the expenditures were to be made. I question whether we as Members of Congress have any right, according to the Constitution, to delegate this power to the President, especially when he has so many duties to perform in the regular conduct and routine of his office that I doubt whether he can give the time and the attention necessary to take care of relief. To substantiate this statement, let me say this——

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield now.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. What is before the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated for relief more money to Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt than any man in the history of the world, and in the shortest space of time. This money was appropriated for direct relief rather than to assist in putting people back on the pay rolls of industry instead of the Government pay rolls. Now, what has happened? At the time he assumed this authority in 1933 we had 12,000,000 people out of work, and today, according to the reports of the American Federation of Labor, there are 10,000,000 people out of work, and you must have come to the conclusion that he has not accomplished the end you and he sought to accomplish. You have been putting money—fabulous sums of money—in the hands of the President time after time, and you will be compelled to put more there under this present administration. I think the membership of the House ought to give him some aid and assistance to the proposition of relief. If there is anybody in this country who needs aid and assistance it is the President of the United States in administering relief, and if you select five Members of the House and five Members of the Senate and have them cooperate and aid and assist him in the expenditure of these funds it will be in the best interest of this Nation.

We have appropriated in the nine major appropriation bills passed by the House of Representatives this year, for 1938, over $4,816,000,000, and with the first emergency appropriation and with the appropriations in the pending bill and second deficiency bill we will have appropriated over $7,200,000,000. As the Members of the Congress know, we only received last year as income $4,165,000,000 You have appropriated now over $3,000,000,000 more than the total amount of money received last year. If the income is going to be as disappointing in the future as it has been in the past, this Nation will never balance the Budget with the present orgy of spending, and therefore you should give aid and assistance to the President of the United States in administration or our Nation will certainly and surely be wrecked on the rocks of financial spending. The Nation is in the gravest danger it has ever been. You need to guide the destiny of our Nation by judicious and wise spending, by sensible relief administration, by wise guidance of the Chief Executive, and he needs a committee to help him administer the affairs as to laws, relief, spending, taxation and every function of our Government.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: Page 4, line 15, after the word "responsibilities", strike out the remainder of the sentence down to the colon, in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, however, That in the employment of persons actual need shall be the primary criterion for eligibility for such employment, and applicants in actual need shall be given the same eligibility for employment as applicants whose names may now or hereafter appear on the relief rolls."

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall take the 5 minutes allotted me on this occasion. I merely hope that you heard the amendment, and if you feel like I do about it you will vote for the amendment. I want to call your attention to a serious situation.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that every Member of this House has had similar experiences to what I have had in traveling over our districts and finding people who have fought the battles of the depression on their own initiative, who have been too proud, if you please, to go upon the relief rolls. These people have been penalized because they elected to fight it out upon their own, and, as I have said, were too proud to go upon the relief rolls. And this is no reflection on those who have, through their desperate circumstances, been forced on the relief rolls.

Under previous legislation we have penalized honest industry—the industry of the individual. There are just thousands of people in your district who do not want to be driven to going upon the relief rolls in order to get honest employment. There is no good reason why a man in need of employment should be forced on the relief rolls to get that employment.

It is suggested that this would open up the floodgates and would provide an opportunity for further political administration. I think everyone in the House knows how I feel about politics in the administration of this relief. I have no time and very little respect for anybody who will play politics with human misery; but at the same time the Congress did not provide how this money should be administered. They set up an administrative system down in the office of the Administrator here in Washington, and that same office can set up regulations to handle the program under this amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, frankly, I have been trying to find out just what change the gentleman makes in the proviso of the bill, and I ask the gentleman to state specifically.

Mr. COLMER. What I am trying to do under this amendment—and I shall be glad to have the amendment read again—is to place those who are actually in need, honest men who want to work but who do not want to go on relief, on a parity with those on the relief rolls. They can set up such administrative machinery down there in the W. P. A. to carry out this amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand the gentleman makes need the basis, so that a person who is trying to get a job would have to establish his need?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Knowing he would get relief without being on the relief roll. Is not that a distinction without a difference?

Mr. COLMER. No.

Mr. BOILEAU. He has to prove that he is actually in need, and that is all the people on the relief rolls have to do.

Mr. COLMER. I understand; but those on the relief rolls are broadcast, and if a man were in actual need, somebody down there could determine that.

Mr. BOILEAU. They also broadcast the rolls of those employed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLMER) there were—ayes 67, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FULLER: Page 4, line 24, after the word "employment", in line 24, insert the following: "Provided further, That any person employed on a relief project who strikes, instigates or in any way participates in, or encourages a strike, shall hereafter be ineligible for relief, and such person shall be removed from such relief project.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chiarman, as I walked into the Well one of my good friends, who is for all kinds of appropriations, said that this is a very strong amendment, almost a radical one, but there is nothing in the amendment that is un-American or that is radical in any way. We must realize this money we are appropriating is relief money, that it is not a pension, nor an amount of money that anyone is entitled to except to save men and their families from starvation and to help them until conditions change. I cannot agree with Mr. Hopkins, and nobody else does, that this relief measure is here in America to stay. Such a statement is a reflection upon our great President and the Democratic administration. Most of the opposition, most of the earmarking of the money in this bill is due to the animosity against and to the rulings of the Administrator of Relief, Harry Hopkins. [Applause.] That does not apply to me, because I have received good treatment in my district. We have not had any trouble. Why on earth should a man who is on charity, who is receiving a dole, who is being paid by the taxpayers at the instance of the American Congress, have the right to go out on the public streets openly and aboveboard and denounce the Congress, denounce the administration, denounce the relief measure, because we will not pay him more wages than the law provides, which is the prevailing wages in his community. They are getting the prevailing wages in their communities. To me that is an insult to this administration. It is un-American; it is an insult to the American Congress, which has gone beyond its own desires and increased the public debt in its desire to take care of those who cannot take care of themselves.

It is an insult to have these people strike, cause dissention, ruin the morale of the rest of the workers who are associated with them; walk down the street with big banners in the big cities of this country, as well as here in Washington, denouncing the Congress, denouncing the administration for not paying them more wages. It is not only ingratitude, but a smiting of the hand that feeds them. But they could not and would not dare to pull these stunts in Arkansas. In 999 cases out of 1,000 they have not drawn as much money for several years past as they are drawing now; even possibly before the panic and the financial depression. Yet they denounce us and parade and try to bring disgrace on us because we will not pay them more money. Most of them are foreigners and Communists. With this crowd of agitators, relief is a racket and these people should not be catered to. We should let them know that if they are not satisfied with the relief we are giving them they should get out and find private employment. This they must do sooner or later. I tell you further that the American people are in favor of this amendment. They are demanding it. It does not apply to the ordinary strike of employees in industry. It only applies to those on relief. Their conduct is comparable to an individual feeding his friends, and in return have them refuse to eat his food, sit down and strike because he will not do more. What are we coming to? Sometime this debt must be paid by the taxpayers. Sometime we must stop notwithstanding these strikers and Communists. I seriously doubt strikers in organized industry having the right to relief. Their organizations in the past have always taken care of them and should do so now. Where Federal money is being given as a donation, where it is given as charity, strikers should not participate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] has expired.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. Chairman, the amendment just brought before the Committee is one which will deny the rights of the Constitution of the United States to any man who is out of a job.

The gentleman from Arkansas says, "Why, these people are on relief. They go around here and parade." Just think of that! He says, "We have to stop people who are on W. P. A. from parading." That is the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of in my life.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] says: "Why on earth should a man who is on charity, who is receiving a dole, go out on the public streets openly and aboveboard and denounce the Congress, denounce the administration?" The reason simply is that such a person has a right to do it. Every person in America has a right to go out on public streets "openly and above board" or secretly and below board, and has the right to denounce Congress. That is every man's right, and it should be preserved.

The gentleman from Arkansas says that all this business of walking down the street with banners is an insult to the administration. I think the greatest insult to the administration is when we fall out among ourselves, tear a bill to pieces or—and I say "or" because I do not believe we will adopt this amendment—or when we attempt to deny people their plain constitutional rights. The gentleman from Arkansas says that "they do not pull such stunts in Arkansas." Does he mean that it is a stunt to assert a constitutional right in Arkansas? I hope not.

ARE WE A HOUSE OF LORDS OR HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES?

What are we? Are we a House of Lords, back in 1500, to tell people that they cannot parade, that they cannot strike? Are we the Lords High and Mighty of the Privy Council? We must be going crazy to even listen to things like that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks about things that have happened in the last few days. We come up here and say, "Harry Hopkins this" and "Harry Hopkins that." I want to tell you that Harry Hopkins has the hardest job of any man in the United States. He has to satisfy the people who are paying the taxes. He has to satisfy the Congressmen of the United States, the President, the Cabinet, and everybody else. As far as I am concerned, I think Harry Hopkins is an able executive and has done a good job. [Applause.]

Now, they talk about earmarking this money. Yes; we have earmarked and earmarked until the bill has got no ears at all. It has got no feet; for that matter, has it a head? It is no relief bill any more. My colleagues, I repeat, this is no relief bill! This is a "pork barrel" bill; and it is a disgrace to Congress and a disgrace to the Democratic Party if we pass any such bill as this. [Applause.]

THE REPUBLICANS WORK TOGETHER; LET DEMOCRATS DO THE SAME

The Republicans have got a lot of sense or possibly political shrewdness. They stick together, and all day yesterday the Republicans were leading us around by their noses. That is what they were doing. [Laughter.] Oh, well, our noses, then; but I am sure it was not with the use of our brains. It was our emotions the Republicans were working on; we were led by our noses and walked in strange paths. It does not make any difference whose nose it was. We were not using our brains.

Now, let us sort of calm down. [Laughter.] That is fine.

The next thing, let us defeat this last amendment, which deprives citizens of their rights because they are unemployed. Let us get in the habit now of defeating amendments and stand by the committee.

CHINESE WAR LORDS FIGHT FOR SPOILS OF WAR

For the last 2 or 3 days one committee comes in here and knocks the relief bill completely out of place. Then another and another. We have gotten to be a bunch of Chinese war lords fighting against each other for the spoils of war. And just as China has not got any country, we have not got any bill. And just as they have not any defense against foreign enemies, we have no defense against the Republicans.

If we keep on we will have no party.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill has been cut to pieces for the benefit of the heavy industries and heavy pork. It is one of the "piggiest" bills ever to be written.

As I said in the beginning, it has never gone to a legislative committee. There is no policy, no rhyme nor reason in this bill.

One thing, however, I can repeat, and that is that the Republicans have been consistent. They have voted as a solid block, and they have stood by the side and laughed at us while we have knifed each other.

So let us first vote down this amendment, which makes a pariah and an outcast of any man who does not happen to have a job. It is unconstitutional to the point that it directly violates liberty and decency and is uncommonly wrong.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. After all, does not the gentleman think that a great deal of the issue here is whether people, because they are unemployed, are to be regarded as outside the pale of American citizenship? In the past few days the unemployed have been represented to this House as a group of chiselers receiving charity. I want to say they are victims of economic forces which so far we have not changed. They are our fellow human beings. They want work, not doles, 98 percent of them. They are citizens of the Nation the same as Members of this Congress are.

Mr. MAVERICK. The answer is that if we adopt this amendment we say if a man happens to be unemployed he is not an American citizen and is not entitled to his rights under the Constitution of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is the most obnoxious amendment that has been proposed to this bill. I want to say to the membership of this House that if this amendment were approved it would mean that down in the State of Arkansas and in other States, where men are now getting as low as $21 a month, if they were dissatisfied with their conditions, if they were dissatisfied with their standard of living, they would not have the right of American citizens to make an organized protest against conditions that were being forced upon them.

I call the attention of the Members to the fact that the minimum wage paid in many States is as low at $21 a month. A man with a large family is given the big income of $21 per month while working on W. P. A. at common labor. That is the amount of income they give to a man who has a big family. If he has a small family, they do not put him on a W. P. A. job; they put him on direct relief, where he gets as low in some States as $5 a month or $6 a month to support himself and family. Under the gentleman's amendment, however, if a decent, respectable man or woman, a red-blooded American citizen, protests against that wage scale, against those intolerable conditions, he or she would be knocked off W. P. A. entirely, and I submit that I do not believe the gentleman from Arkansas wants to be so hard-boiled with these people. The gentleman from Arkansas says that these people are getting more money than they ever had before. If this be true, shame upon the States of this Union that permit and have permitted in the past a standard of living that could be satisfied with an income of $21 a month. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. There is nothing in my amendment that would prevent their protesting or asking for more money. When men strike they quit work.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say to the gentleman that we have seen in recent generations that the only effective way to make a protest, the only effective way that labor has ever had of making its protest and having that protest heard, is to strike. When we deprive American citizens of the right to strike we deprive them of the only effective method they have of making their protest heard. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. The gentleman from Wisconsin is making an excellent statement. Does not the gentleman feel further that it is a basic American virtue for people to desire to better their condition? Does not the gentleman want to see our program of work relief for the unemployed placed on such a high plane and backed with enough funds to make it a really effective constructive program so that we could get back dollar for dollar and enable our unemployed not only to live but to make a full contribution to the Nation's welfare? And does not the gentleman feel that in this country one of the greatest things we have ever had has been this insistence on the part of the people of their right to better themselves? Personally, I believe all people employed or unemployed have rights of citizenship which this amendment would violate.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is correct, and this amendment would take that right away from them.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman feel that this is in flagrant violation of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. BOILEAU. It is not only a flagrant violation of the Constitution of the United States but it is a flagrant violation of human decency.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 4, line 24, after the word "employment", strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided further, That American citizens shall be given preference for employment over aliens by the Works Progress Administration."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this section of the bill; that if in order at all, it would be in order as an amendment to section 3.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The Chair will observe by a reading of sections 2 and 3 that this amendment is in order on either section. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia that it is unquestionably in order on section 3, but it certainly is also in order on section 2, because, for example, it is there provided:

That in the employment of persons, applicants in actual need—

And so forth, and so on. It is already written into section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair has pending before it a number of amendments pertaining to aliens, all directed toward section 3, which is the section that deals with aliens. The Chair feels that the gentleman's amendment is not germane to section 2.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I voted against the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas because it was far too broad. Had the gentleman confined his amendment to sit-down strikes in the Works Progress Administration he might have had it adopted.

Much has been said about the animus against and opposition to Administrator Hopkins. I believe this animus exists on both sides of the House. There is a feeling that Mr. Hopkins as Administrator of Relief has been arrogant, has grasped for power, has engineered a mass of propaganda for more appropriations and more power until the Congress on both sides have become tired of such methods. I agree with Senator LEWIS, of Illinois, who says that all of this relief should be turned over to the States and that Mr. Hopkins, the Administrator, be recalled. If this be done, then we would have ample funds under this bill.

I purpose voting for the bill in its present form, provided the earmarking is left as it is, with the gross amount at $1,500,000,000.

We will then have sufficient money if its administration is turned back to the States and Mr. Hopkins given some other kind of a job. When it comes to giving preference to American citizens, they are the only group that are not organized. They have no lobbyists; they have no lawyers down here to look after their interests; the foreign-born have; the various foreign groups have; other groups have.

I submit that if Mr. Hopkins is right, that the earmarkings in this bill will reduce the relief roll by 800,000, and if 800,000 citizens or noncitizens must be taken off, then it is only right that we give preference to American citizens and to the families of American citizens. I do not know who is going to offer the amendment, but if one is offered similar to the one I propose, I think it is the duty of the House, in view of the fact we have amended this bill, the effect of which, according to Mr. Hopkins, would be that 800,000 will be cut off from relief, then preference should be given, first, to American citizens and families of American citizens, and, secondly, to veterans of the World War and Spanish War veterans.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman in position to advise the House as to the percentage of alien citizens on the relief rolls and the extent these aliens participate in rebellious explosions against the administration, which are designated as strikes?

Mr. FISH. Yes; because Mr. Victor Ridder, relief administrator in the city of New York, the greatest city in America, stated that the Workers' Alliance of the city of New York, an organization consisting wholly of Communists, controlled relief in that city. That statement has never been denied. Mr. Ridder was appointed by President Roosevelt, and is an able, honest, and honorable man. He was willing to come down here and testify before the Committee on Appropriations, but they refused to invite him or let him testify. The fact is this relief proposition in New York at least is in the hands of the Workers' Alliance, a communistic organization.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, on last Friday in discussing certain features of the pending measure I gave notice that when we reached section 3 I would offer an amendment to strike out on page 5, line 4, the words "illegally within the limits of the continental United States" and on page 7, after the word "that", strike out the word "such."

The effect of the amendment I shall offer is not merely to give preference to American citizens in this work but to deny giving this work to aliens and give it to American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any foreign country appropriating millions of dollars to take care of needy Americans within its borders. May I call your attention to the fact that aliens who have come into this country in recent years have had to give satisfactory assurances that they would not become public charges. With respect to those who have been in this country long enough to rear families, certainly there is no obligation on American taxpayers to put money in their pockets if they have not been sufficiently in sympathy with the ideals and institutions of our Government to become citizens of the country.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. May I say to the gentleman that practically all foreign countries, including England, France, Germany, and all countries, have recently passed laws denying to American citizens and all foreigners in their midst even private employment. Not only have they denied them private employment, but they will not give them positions on relief.

Mr. LANHAM. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I sometimes wonder how long we are going to continue to be an international easy mark. Some of these countries borrow our money and do not repay it. They give no such consideration to our citizens who may be within their borders as is proposed in this measure. Here we have aliens by the thousands and thousands and we are taking care of them with the hard-earned money of American taxpayers. I do not know how many are on the rolls now, but I understand that 1 year ago there were 600,000 of them on the rolls. I say it is high time that we protect the Americans who are putting up this money by giving these jobs to American citizens.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. I agree with the gentleman that those who have been here a long while and have made no effort to become American citizens ought to be excluded. But how about those who have been here some time and who are in the process of becoming American citizens?

Mr. LANHAM. I have no objection to taking proper care of those legally admitted who have heretofore in good faith declared their intention of becoming American citizens. I would have no special objection to an amendment which I understand the gentleman will offer in that regard to the amendment I shall offer. But these aliens who have come in recently have come in under the requirement that they give satisfactory assurances not to become public charges. With respect to those who have been here long enough to rear families and still remain aliens, I do not think they are entitled to any such monetary consideration from the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of this body I have read a lot and even heard a lot about usurpation of powers. Some have said that the Executive has been usurping the legislative powers and others have even hinted that the legislative bodies were trying to usurp the Executive powers. I am as much against one type of usurpation as the other, and neither has any place in the American system of government. There is one kind of usurpation of power that is even more deadly than those I have spoken of, and that is the usurpation of legislative and executive powers by administrative agencies. That is exactly what we have, and anyone who doubts such a statement only needs to consider the tremendous drive that has been put on by Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, the head of the Works Progress Administration, against the expressed will of this Congress, as shown by the earmarking amendments to this relief bill, which were so overwhelmingly passed on last Tuesday.

This relief bill was earmarked to provide that certain moneys should be set aside for flood control, water conservation, public roads, and public works. Those amendments were adopted in response to a real and serious wish upon the part of the people of this country. They were accepted in the interests of economy and good government. The people and their representatives want worth-while projects of great public value. Since those amendments were adopted a powerful Federal bureaucracy has been turned loose to convince this Congress that the W. P. A. and its Administrator, Mr. Hopkins, should be given a blank check and allowed to spend it just as they please. Florida ship canals and Passamaquoddys and everything else could be started, regardless of the will of this body. When I say started, that is just what I mean, because anyone with any sense knows that projects costing around $200,000,000 could only be started with these relief funds. Their completion would depend upon further appropriations of Federal funds, but this is the thing we want to stop.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I am sorry; I have only a few minutes and I want to finish my statement.

I do not intend to speak on the relative merits of public-works and works-progress projects. I do urge the retention of the amndment for public works upon the basis of fair play and of making good on the Federal Government's moral obligations to the sponsors of public-works projects. Anyone with a sense of fair play knows that you cannot change the rules after the game has started. Everyone knows that the integrity of the Federal Government must be maintained. I call to your attention the remarks made the other day in regard to the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr WOODRUM] in his defense of an increased appropriation for those parkways. I quote:

> How can the gentlemen now state that the Federal Government should repudiate not only a moral obligation, but a legal, contractual obligation, which it has with these communities and with the citizens who have acted upon the theory that the Government would live up to its obligations?

Mr. Chairman, those sentiments and principles are just as true in regard to the P. W. A. projects which have been approved and for which bond issues have been carried as they were for the Blue Ridge and Natchez Parkways.

Five hundred and ninety-seven municipalities and a great many States submitted projects to the Public Works Administration in the understanding that if they were approved by the P. W. A. they would receive a 45-percent grant. Those cities and towns hired engineers, prepared their plans, and voted bond issues to raise their share of the funds. The projects were approved by the P. W. A. but no allotments were made. Why? Because in the meantime the P. W. A., by virtue of an Executive order, had changed the regulations governing the loan and grant basis. As a result, the expenses that have been incurred by the respective municipalities are entirely wasted.

The first requirement under the new regulations is that the project sponsor must be able to underwrite 100 percent of the project. Then the P. W. A. will make grants of 15 percent over the actual amount paid to relief labor on the projects. Now these sponsors have already voted their bond issues. There is no possible way for them to underwrite a hundred percent of the cost when their bond issues called for only 55 percent of the project cost. In the agricultural States where droughts and dust storms have retarded the return of recovery there is not a full supply of skilled labor on relief rolls. In those States where the help is most needed the present P. W. A. rulings practically exclude them from participation in the program.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Yes. I will be glad to yield to my good friend from New York.

Mr. BEITER. Does the gentleman agree with the opponents of earmarking that this is a "pork-barrel" bill?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I do not.

Mr. BEITER. If anything is "pork barrel", it is giving a blank check for a billion and a half dollars.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Absolutely.

Mr. BEITER. There is no "park barrel" in the contract system where the low bidder is awarded the contract.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I was going to say "pork-barrel legislation" is such legislation as the Passamaquoddy project or the Florida ship canal, where millions and millions of dollars will be wasted.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Yes. I will be glad to yield to the my distinguished colleague from Texas.

Mr. DIES. I may remind the gentleman of the fact that during the last 2 years of the Hoover administration we Democrats passed a public-works program which was denounced as "pork barrel." We were then told that by setting up the P. W. A. we were getting away from "pork barrel" legislation. However, every public-works project which will be included in the $300,000,000 is a project which has been approved by the P. W. A., and not by this Congress.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Yes. The gentleman from Texas is absolutely correct.

The Government has a moral obligation to fulfill, and the funds should be made available to fulfill those demands. This Congress should, and I am sure it will, make certain that the regulations be changed to allow the Government's obligation to these 597 municipalities to be paid in full.

It is about time that this House asserts its prerogatives as a legislative body. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HART). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. I think there are a number of amendments pending on the Clerk's desk, which should be reported and acted upon before gentlemen are recognized to offer pro-forma amendments.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized, and I yielded for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman was not recognized, Mr. Chairman. There are amendments pending which ought to be acted upon before the pro-forma amendments.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). The Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan was recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few pertinent remarks. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY] has just proceeded by consent of the Committee to deliver a 10-minute speech, 5 minutes more than is provided by the rules of the House. There has been a decided change of heart on the part of the Committee and those in charge of the bill since we recessed when the bill was being considered on Tuesday last. On Tuesday the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], insisted that the legislative program was such that this bill must be passed before adjournment on that day, and held the House in a late session. Every effort was made to curtail debate. Many Members were denied time in which to discuss the bill, and those who did discuss the bill were fortunate if they got 2 or 3 minutes' time.

On Tuesday the House displayed an encouraging degree of returning independence, and while in that state of mind exercised its own judgment and gave some direction as to how some of the $1,500,000,000 carried in this bill was to be spent. In other words, the House earmarked specific sums to be used for specific purposes, such as good roads, and the completion of certain P. W. A. approved projects.

The purpose on Tuesday was to finish the bill on that day. However, just as soon as this independence on the part of the House was evident, and when the Members got away from the apron strings of the President, the House was suddenly adjourned. When we adjourned on Tuesday we were told the bill would be completed today and that it was necessary to vote on the bill before the House adjourned today.

Now, I am sure that many here present are not familiar with just what is going to happen. Let me give you the facts. At 4 o'clock this afternoon the Committee will arise, and the completion of this bill will be put over until next Tuesday. If that is not the program, I am sure the leaders will correct me. We will have some conference reports, or something else of importance, to occupy the attention of the House the rest of the day, but you may be assured that there will be no vote on this bill today.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I regret that I only have 5 minutes.

Between now and Tuesday you will hear from the political bosses back home. Some of you will be importuned, many of you will be commanded, to vote for the appropriation of this $1,500,000,000 without any limitations whatever except such as are approved by the President. I have already talked this morning with several Democrats from Pennsylvania, who make no secret of the fact that they are receiving telegrams from the political leaders—I think the Governor, and if I remember correctly, a Mr. Lawrence—insisting that they vote for just the type of a bill the President wants, whatever that may be. If I am in error, of course some gentleman from Pennsylvania will take the floor in his own time and correct me. Some of the Democrats from Michigan are receiving long-distance calls from their political leaders asking them to vote against earmarking any sums in this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. My time is so limited that I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? He has referred to the Members from Michigan.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MICHENER. There are not enough votes in the House today to pass the bill without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i", as demanded by the administration. The other day the Members voted their own good judgment, and they are not yet ready to yield that which they believed to be right when they voted. Possibly this is a case where time is of the essence, and if this bill can be put over until next Tuesday, the political heat will be turned on. Various degrees will be applied, and when the political blowtorch gets to functioning properly I doubt not but that some of the good little boys, the rubber-stamp kind, the follow-the-President group, will jump through the hoop and respond to the political pressure that you and I know will be applied between now and Tuesday.

These amendments in the bill were placed there after much consideration and debate. There was first a yea-and-nay vote. Tellers were then demanded, and you might as well know that the names were taken down of those who passed by the tellers. The amendments carried by a splendid majority, and I can hardly imagine those Members who voted twice on the same question and went so far as to go on record by passing through the tellers will now yield to threats, temptations, or political expediency. Here we are going to have an opportunity to see what that courage and independence, about which some have been talking, amounts to. Are you going to vote on next Tuesday as you voted last Tuesday, or are you going to listen to your master's voice, and after you are called on the carpet and told what you must do, are you going to abjectly surrender your own judgment and the independence of your congressional district?

I realize that some of you say, "I was elected to follow the President."

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I have not finished my statement, and my time is short.

Possibly some Members of this body did come in on the President's coattails, and possibly some Members were so anxious to be elected that in the hour of despair they may have repeated the old church hymn, "Where He leads me I will follow, I will follow, follow on."

If I were a New Deal Democrat and had been elected on the Democratic platform, I should feel constrained to observe the mandates of the platform during my term of office. I should really be ashamed of myself if I did not stand by the platform on which I was elected. I should also be ashamed of myself if I were a Democrat, elected on the Democratic platform of 1936, and then was told that I had but one function in Congress, and that was to vote "yes" or "no" as the President dictated. I should be more ashamed of myself if I thought it necessary to telephone to the White House on every occasion before I voted.

If this bill were voted upon today there is no question but that the amendments adopted by the House would be confirmed, and the bill would represent the will of Congress, if not the demands of the Executive. If the bill goes over until Tuesday, the steam roller will be oiled up and in good working order, and my prediction is that enough pressure will be brought to bear so that the Congress will again assume its meek and humble demeanor, and with hat in hand and full of apology will send to the Senate a bill complying supinely with instructions. [Applause.]

I avail myself of this privilege of extending the remarks made above and to call attention to the fact that since those remarks were made the House by an overwhelming vote has declared itself independent and shown its desire to complete this bill today. I hope that the courageous, sound, and splendid speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] will appear in the RECORD in just the way it was delivered. For a few minutes after the delivery of that speech this was the most independent and "fightinest" Congress imaginable. It seemed like old times.

However, at 2 minutes of 4 o'clock the distinguished majority leader took the floor, advised that within an hour he had had a conference with the President, and pleaded with the House to continue this bill until Tuesday. The gentleman from Texas, the majority leader, in his speech appealed to partisan Democrats, and his appeal, as usual, was effective. These fighting men of a few minutes before meekly fell in line, and so on Tuesday next the House will be permitted to vote on such a bill as meets with the approval of the President. I predict now that the usual method will be employed. Promise some more money—possibly in a deficiency bill. Then that money held up by an Executive order in P. W. A. will be released. Pressure and more Santa Claus money may be the solution.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 4, line 24, after the word "employment", strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided further, That no money received by the Treasury after the enactment of this act shall be used for the purpose of carrying out this act."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to compel the Treasury of the United States to utilize some of the enormous gold and silver which we have accumulated to finance this relief program.

I want to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that we have accumulated approximately $12,000,000,000 of gold, or one-half of the entire known supply in the world; that we have accumulated approximately $1,500,000,000 of silver; that we do not need more than $6,000,000,000 to redeem all the outstanding currency if the time ever comes when we resume redemption, and that, as a matter of fact, we have approximately six or seven billion dollars of gold and silver that we are not utilizing for currency purposes.

When the Gold Revaluation Act was passed, provision was put in that act to enable the President and the Treasury to utilize the profits which accrued from that act in order to put this money to work. When the Dies Silver Act was passed we empowered the President to utilize the silver to the full extent of its statutory value. The administration has issued new currency under that act to the extent of $710,000,000, based upon the cost value of the silver, but we have today gold that we are purchasing at the rate of $1,500,000,000 a year with tax-exempt bonds. That gold is lying idle; it is not serving the purposes of this Nation; and yet you propose by this legislation to vote $1,500,000,000 more of tax-exempt securities.

At the conclusion of the War between the States we had issued $350,000,000 of so-called greenbacks. If we had issued Government bonds or tax-exempt bonds in place of greenbacks, the interest today would amount to $12,000,000,000. Now, the folly of this thing is that with $12,000,000,000 or $13,000,000,000 of metallic money in the storehouse of this country, you propose to place a mortgage not only upon this generation but other generations to come, and the very money that you will appropriate under this measure, the money that you are securing by mortgaging our future, is money you must pay back with a fixed interest that will amount to another billion and a half, and all the time you have in your great vaults more than enough gold and silver to finance this relief program. The President is empowered to issue currency upon it, and behind every dollar of currency there will be 100 percent metallic value; and yet, Mr. Chairman, we propose not to do that. No; let it accumulate, not utilize it, not carry out the provisions of the law, but go to the bankers of the country and say, "We want to borrow money from you, so that you can take money that you should put into industry, money that would go into industry, and buy these bonds and live in comfort and ease and have none of the risk of engaging in any private business."

So, Mr. Chairman, what this amendment proposes to do is to say to the Treasury, "You have $13,000,000,000 of gold and silver—that is all you have; you do not have any money—you have approximately $200,000,000 in the Treasury today, which is not enough to take care of your current bills; but you have all of this gold and silver, and you must use that first: you must use that before you place upon the backs of the American people any more tax-exempt bonds." [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas provides, in substance, that no money received hereafter by the Treasury shall be applied to the purposes of this act. The gentleman offers the amendment to section 2 of the joint resolution. Provision as to the appropriation and as to where the money shall come from is contained in section 1 of the bill, in lines 8 to 10, "There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", and so forth.

The amendment of the gentleman might have been germane to section 1, but has no application whatsoever to section 2.

Mr. DIES. Will the Chair hear me a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that yesterday I offered the amendment, but I happened to be out of the Chamber when it was called up, and therefore no action was taken upon it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as an amendment to the first section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of considering an amendment which he has offered.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, of course, it always grieves me not to be able to accommodate the distinguished and persuasive gentleman from Texas, but in the interest of expediting consideration of this matter——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not raise any objection, because, surely, the gentleman is anxious to give the House an opportunity to vote upon something that is of such vital importance as this amendment. This is an economy measure, and the amendment will enable the gentleman to get his $1,500,000,000 and we will not have to impose taxes or issue tax-exempt bonds, but utilize some of the gold and silver which we already have.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may call the gentleman's attention to a fact which he has, perhaps, overlooked: The afternoon is waning and there is several hundred thousand dollars in the bill that has not been earmarked. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I must insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order that the amendment is not germane to section 2.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: Page 4, line 24, after the word "employment", add: "Provided further, That employment shall not be given to those normally who would otherwise be employed in seasonal agricultural pursuits."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of preventing the Government, through the W. P. A. or the P. W. A., coming into competition with a farmer in his efforts to employ labor to plant, care for, and harvest farm crops.

It is our duty to determine the amount of money which should be appropriated and the purposes for which it should be spent. To designate the bill, because funds are earmarked, as a "pork barrel" bill and to attempt to belittle Congressmen who are determined upon earmarking funds and so performing at least a part of their duty is but demagoguery.

More truthfully might it be said that those insisting upon an arbitrary grant, without any restrictions as to the spending, seek to usurp our functions.

Hopkins was not elected to the Congress. Although neither he nor we may know it, it is our duty to the people of our districts to see that the funds granted are not wasted. Our people have had enough of wasteful spending, and it will be necessary that at some time we reassume the responsibility which is ours. Could I have my way, every dollar of this relief money would be earmarked.

Let us consider the purpose of the amendment which I have offered. However desirable relief, whether through boondoggling or worthy projects, may be, the fact remains that we must eat. Some of those who live in cities still believe that the eggplant produces eggs and that the milk they get on the breakfast table comes from the milkweed; but if we continue, through the Government or otherwise, to take from the farmer his available source of labor, sooner or later someone will be hungry.

You can raise the wages of the workers in the motor industries, the coal mines, the steel mills throughout the industrial world; you can boost the price of the things the farmer sells; but, whether the price of labor, the cost of food be high or low, the fact remains that someone must plow, must plant, must harvest, and somewhere and in due season some horny-handed son of toil must work in the dust, the dirt, from the rising until the setting of the sun, or you and I shall go hungry—this notwithstanding the theories of Wallace or anyone else.

So far no scheme has been devised which will produce a crop until the seed has been sown, and no way has been found to get the products of the soil to the market until they have been harvested.

The farmer, therefore, needs protection from Government competition.

Here is a letter received from E. J. Ries, of Kalamazoo and Martin, in the Third and Fourth Congressional Districts of Michigan. His lands are located in Gun Swamp, a vast area which produces and sends to market carload after carload of onions, celery, and other vegetables. He writes:

> As the time is getting near for the onion, beet, and celery farmers to be in need of extra labor to carry on their usual work, we are brought face to face with the fact that our National Government is using help for their various projects which we used to employ. Furthermore, I am advised that their wage scale is much higher than we can afford to pay.
> Would it be possible to curtail this Government work, making the labor now used by the Government available to the farmers of the immediate vicinity?

In the immediate vicinity of this vast acreage, which produces not only onions, but beets, celery, and other vegetables, are a number of Federal projects and, with the Government paying higher wages and giving shorter hours than can the farmer, you can figure the result for yourself.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me that we are approaching this problem with confused thinking. We have had debate for the last several days on several phases of the bill, and I wish to touch briefly on those provisions as well as on the amendment under discussion. We came before this Congress and the people of the Nation and rejected the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] for a $3,000,000,000 relief. We opposed the amendment for a billion dollars relief, and took our stand on the necessity for a billion and a half dollars for relief. We have said since that time that the needy and destitute require a billion and a half, but now we have decided to take half a billion of that money, one-third of it, and give it to the building trades, give it for flood control and other purposes in our own districts. I respectfully submit to this committee, that if we needed a billion and a half dollars last week, we need a billion and a half dollars today, and we shall need a billion and a half dollars for purposes of relief in the future. We have beguiled ourselves or justified our position upon the theory, and it has been iterated and reiterated from the well of this House, that we are taking this attitude because we dislike Harry Hopkins. This is a protest vote we say, we object to the administration of this fund, and therefore, we have taken this means of voicing our protest before the American people.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNERY. I decline to yield. If we want to make any protest, let us be honest with ourselves and with Harry Hopkins and make that protest in an honest way. If we object to the manner in which this fund has been administered, then let us proceed to the root of the trouble and get at the administration of the fund. Do not let us fool ourselves and try to fool the American people by saying that we are going to take $500,000,000 of this for our own purposes in order to penalize Mr. Hopkins.

You are not penalizing Mr. Hopkins. You are penalizing the poor and destitute in the communities from which you come. I have over 55,000 people in my community on relief. They are honest, sincere, hard-working Americans. They are as much entitled to the consideration of their Government as any other class. I speak in behalf of those people. We are depriving them as it is, at least, we are curtailing the extent to which they are being relieved, but if you are going to cut this appropriation bill down to a billion dollars, you will deprive them irretrievably, and if you further deprive them by this allotment, you will create a situation which will be intolerable and inevitably must be corrected later on.

You are fooling yourselves. You say, "We will give $300,000,000 to P. W. A.", and you are going to give it under an arrangement for distribution of funds with which we cannot comply. You are giving $300,000,000 that cannot be used. We have admitted freely that the conditions being imposed by P. W. A. before they will allow you to have that fund cannot be met. Gentlemen, we are trying to vote a P. W. A. bill and a W. P. A. bill in a relief bill. One is to relieve the poor and destitute and unemployed. The other is relief for the building trades.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY] has expired.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot be recognized so soon.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I object. In view of the fact that a great many Members desire to finish this bill today and vote today, I am going to object.

Let me add in supplement to these remarks I have projects under P. W. A. consideration in my district which cannot be undertaken because of the regulations. Voting more funds for P. W. A. will not help. I have been informed, and have verified the information, that a P. W. A. bill is now before the committee and will come upon the floor in a few days. In the consideration of that bill we should include the questions now under discussion and the regulations for handling the funds. Let us not take from the poor for these P. W. A. projects, and let us not take from the P. W. A. projects for W. P. A.

If these agencies are to be merged, let us do that, but until that time let us not confuse the functions of each to the detriment of both.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. HOOK: On page 4, line 10, strike out the words "Works Progress Administration" and insert in lieu thereof "Department of Labor."

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to have a different department than the administrator of the fund to determine what is the prevailing wage. I have had experience with that, and I believe the Labor Department is the proper department to determine what is the prevailing wage. That is the only purpose of the amendment.

Several of my colleagues from Michigan on the other side of the House have spoken on this bill. One of those gentlemen made the statement that he would be ashamed of this or that if he were a Democrat. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], were he a Democrat and acted as he does now on the floor of this House, we Democrats would be ashamed of you. We are ashamed of you anyhow. In answer to you, I will say if anybody received any orders from any leaders back home it is you Republicans and not us Democrats. I challenge you to say whether there was one of us Democratic Members who received any orders from back home.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I say you did.

Mr. HOOK. From whom?

Mr. MICHENER. I will tell the gentleman after he sits down.

Mr. HOOK. Tell me on the floor of the House. I do not have to talk in the cloakroom. I talk on the floor of the House and not in the cloakroom. I happen to be a Democrat.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think the Democrats down here admit it.

Mr. HOOK. They sure do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know anything about what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is talking about, but I would like a ruling for my own guidance if I am going to follow somebody. Shall I follow Mr. Van Wagoner, commissioner of highways of the State of Michigan, who asks us to earmark some of this money for highways, or shall I follow the Governor, who does not want any of it earmarked?

Mr. HOOK. I follow my own good judgment as a Member of this House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not doubt it. That is why the gentleman talked on the sit-down strike.

Mr. HOOK. Now, let us talk about the regional agricultural labor amendment for a moment. I will say that as a Member of the House of Representatives I have always been in favor of fair prevailing wages. We were discussing the proposition with regard to sugar beets and the sugar bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] knows that we put a clause in that bill providing for the prevailing wage.

While we as a subcommittee were working on the sugar bill, the State administration of W. P. A., the administrator of the State of Michigan happened to be here in Washington on other business and said it was a disgrace that in your beet area that we were keeping people in a state of peonage and offering them a low rate of wages, lower than the W. P. A. rate, and that he would not allow them to go to work in the beet fields at $1.50 a day—whole families from dawn until dark. When I showed him how the provisions of the bill would take care of Michigan he said, "Yes, that will take care of it; but," he said, "I will never force men down to a starvation wage." I believe he was right, and I congratulate that fine gentleman for his good judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this matter of wage structure must have the careful consideration of this House. I wish to refer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], which reads, in part, as follows:

> That no agricultural laborer and no unskilled laborer who refuses or has refused an offer of private employment paying as much or more in compensation for such work as such person has received or could receive under the relief herein provided.

The intent behind that amendment is good, and I am in sympathy with it, but in effect it is the most vicious amendment that has been offered so far. It tends to tear down the wage structure that has been raised during the past few years. It tends to reduce the basic wages now paid to unskilled workers in private industry to the lower W. P. A. level. Let me read you a few statistics so that when the time comes to vote on this amendment you will see it in its true light and turn it down. Do you realize what this amendment in the hands of unscrupulous employers who want to beat down the wage scale means? Listen to this for a moment: The average hourly W. P. A. rate in this country is $0.447. In the private building trades alone, and most of the W. P. A. laborers are now employed in building, or construction work, or work similar to that, the average hourly rate is 50 cents plus. Now, listen and realize what that means. Any employer paying American labor 50 cents today on private projects can go to W. P. A. where they get an average of 44 cents and say, "I want to employ your men at the rate they are now receiving. If they do not accept my offer at that rate, I can have them discharged from their jobs."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman has referred to my amendment.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield. Or he can go to the men he is employing at 50 cents an hour and say: "I can go over to W. P. A. and get men to work for 44 cents an hour. Unless you will work for 44 cents an hour I will lay you off."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, in fairness will not the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. Thus the wage scales will be broken down.

Mr. LANHAM. My amendment applies only to unskilled labor.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. And I am talking about unskilled labor only. I want it understood that I am talking about unskilled labor. The average monthly income of a W. P. A. worker is $52.81. We know that most of the W. P. A. labor is unskilled. Let me now tell you what unskilled labor in some other industries is receiving. For instance, in the railroad repair shops—and this is an average, let it be understood; this includes unskilled as well as some of the skilled labor—compared with the $52.81 such labor gets on W. P. A. they get in the railroad repair shop $127.74. Tobacco manufacturers pay the lowest rate of any, yet the rate there is $69.19. These same manufacturers could insist upon W. P. A. workers coming in at the rate they are now receiving on W. P. A. and use that as a club to lower the basic wage in the industry which they represent.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not now.

The battle cry of this administration has been "higher wages and greater buying power" for the masses of our people. We are in sympathy with this policy, and we would not knowingly defeat it at this time. W. P. A. wages for unskilled labor in most districts are substantially lower than those paid for unskilled work in private industry when we consider the problem on a monthly basis. Let us not provide a weapon whereby wages will be depressed now, at a time when purchasing power is so essential to our economic well-being.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 118, noes 32.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is filibustering against his own bill.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. GREENWOOD.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 115, noes 55.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is now evident that a filibuster is being directed against this bill [applause] by the so-called leaders of the House. I say "so-called leaders of the House" because I am going to make a few statements that I hope will clarify the situation.

In the first place, some statements have been made on the floor of this House and some in the press of this Nation impugning the motive of those who desire to uphold the constitutional prerogatives of Members of the House in giving direction to the taxpayers' moneys that are being appropriated in the sum of $1,500,000,000.

We are told by the press—and the statement is imputed to Mr. Hopkins—that the earmarking of these funds will remove more than a half million people from the relief rolls. That statement is untrue.

The flood-control amendment which I offered specifically provides in its own terms that relief labor shall be used. [Applause.] I challenge the accuracy of any statement made on the floor of this House or in the press of this Nation that those of us who are sponsoring these amendments are motivated by a "pork barrel" spirit. There is not a flood-control measure in my district under the terms of the amendment which I offered.

Mr. Chairman, why this delay? Because they hope that Mr. Hopkins, the leader of the W. P. A., the present acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, the present whip of the House of Representatives, and the present acting majority leader of the House of Representatives can bring enough political pressure to bear upon Members of Congress to make them bow to his desires. That is why. [Applause.]

Two weeks ago he had the power to override one of the ablest Members of the House of Representatives and his subcommittee—I refer to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. A week ago, according to the press, he came on the hill and held a meeting in the office of the majority whip of the House of Representatives and yesterday he entered the sanctum sanctorum in the office of the majority leader of this House or the holy of holies. That is what the Members of the House resent.

I want to urge the Members of the House to stay on the floor of the House today and vote down any attempt to filibuster against this bill. [Applause.] I make no accusation against nor do I infer that Harry Hopkins has not been an honest and able Administrator and I hold no grudge against him. I have never made a request of him, therefore none have been denied. I yield to no man in my devotion to my party and my party's leadership. I think Franklin D. Roosevelt is the greatest President this Nation ever had. But I want to tell you how Mr. Hopkins feels toward the President. The President in a message to the Congress said, "We must get out of this business of relief."

Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I refuse to yield.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Roosevelt, the greatest President in the history of this Nation, says that we must get out of this relief business as soon as we can. [Applause.] Mr. Hopkins tells Mr. WOODRUM and his committee, according to the hearings, that we cannot do that. In answer to the question, "Do you think the Federal Government must remain forever in the relief business?" Mr. Hopkins answered, "Yes, sir."

And in answer to the question, "That is, directed through an organized bureau here in Washington?" He replied, "In one way or another; yes, sir; just as we have it today in old-age pensions. I think that is a permanent function of the Government."

Not only does Mr. Hopkins attempt to dictate to the Congress but he also attempts to thwart the will of the President on a question involving a fundamental policy vitally affecting the welfare of the Nation. I urge the Members of the House to stand upon their constitutional prerogative and follow the dictates of their conscience upon the question of directing expenditures for protection of soil, property, and human life from the devastation of uncontrolled floods. I appeal to you to keep faith with towns, villages, and other local governing bodies who have bonded their property to provide funds for building schools, water works, sewer systems, and other worth-while public-works projects which have a lasting social and economic benefit, and which provide for the promotion of public health and the general welfare. We owe these people a moral obligation to provide funds for the completion of their projects.

And nothing could meet with more universal satisfaction than the completion of our Federal highways, the building of farm-to-market roads, and improving rural-route roads. By such action we not only facilitate the flow of trade and commerce and promote social intercourse but we also add to the happiness and comfort of our rural population in every State of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad we are all still smiling. You know it has been a very curious situation. I plead with the Members a few days ago to exercise their legislative prerogative. [Laughter.] I urged that upon the Members of the House and the members of the committee, but I did not seem to get very far. You overrode me very nicely and overwhelmingly. There was a half billion dollars more put in the bill than I thought was necessary, but that was all right with me.

Since then I have been trying to protect the committee bill as much as possible. I have been here a week. Every time I could get the floor I have asked the Members of the House to stay here beyond 5:30. I could listen to my beloved colleagues here whispering in my ear around 5 o'clock, "Let us not stay any longer. Let us quit." We could not work beyond 5:30. Today I resent the fact my distinguished colleague from Indiana takes charge of the bill and takes it away from me. You gentlemen have permitted it. There are yet several amendments to this section pending on the desk which I think are entitled to be heard.

This is your bill. I do not care what you do with it. [Applause.] You can stay here today and vote on it if you want to. I do not believe there is any Member on this floor that anybody is going to sweep off his feet with propaganda. At least that has not been my experience in this body. I do not believe it makes any difference to any Member on this floor whether he voted yesterday, votes today, or tomorrow. If he gets additional information of a situation, he will change his mind. Many of us change our mind many times. That is our prerogative, and it is a sensible prerogative.

Here is what I would like to see you do. Let us work this relief bill out in some kind of a sensible, logical way, and try to compose our differences. I do not think we will get anywhere by fighting among ourselves. To you gentlemen over here who are so rampant and who desire to vote today, I say vote today, if you want to. I shall not put anything in your way, even if I could, and apparently I could not. [Laughter and applause.]

May I ask, what have you accomplished if you go ahead to a final vote today, when perhaps by delaying the matter we could compose all of our differences and come out with a relief bill that would go to the other body, and one which we could stand up, fight for, maintain, and uphold, and have something for our respective districts?

What is going to happen? I want you to consider this seriously. The word comes from another body, and this is a definite and emphatic word, that $1,000,000,000 is the ultimate amount for relief. Now, with the earmarking that has taken place in connection with this bill, it would be a bad bill. With $1,000,000,000 and all of this earmarking in it, it would be a bad bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to see the honest differences composed. If you want to finish it today, let us go ahead and finish it today. I have been ready for a week. I want to finish it as soon as possible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Page 4, line 19, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided further, That in order to insure the fulfillment of the purposes for which the foregoing appropriation is made and to avoid competition between the Works Progress Administration and other Federal or non-Federal agencies in the employment of labor on construction projects of any nature whatsoever, financed in whole or in part by the Federal Government, no worker shall be eligible for employment on any project of the Works Progress Administration who is needed and who has refused to accept employment on any other Federal or non-Federal project at a wage rate comparable with or higher than the wage rate established for similar work on projects of the Works Progress Administration: Provided further, That any worker who has been engaged on any Federal or non-Federal project and whose service has been regularly terminated through no fault of his own, shall not lose his eligibility for restoration to the relief rolls or for reemployment on any other Federal or non-Federal project on account of such previous employment."

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, there are complaints from all parts of the country to the effect that the Works Progress Administration will not release workers who are engaged on its projects who are qualified and needed for work on other Federal or non-Federal projects financed in whole or in part by the Federal Government. It is further alleged that such workers refuse to accept employment of a similar nature at a comparable, or even a higher, wage rate on other Federal or non-Federal projects for fear that after they are dropped from the relief rolls they will not again be restored to the relief rolls when their employment is terminated on projects other than those of the Works Progress Administration. Either condition definitely defeats the purposes of appropriations for relief. It should be stopped by law and the amendment I have suggested will accomplish it.

As a concrete example of what is happening I cite the following extract from a complaint officially made, in which I have purposely omitted names and locations:

Out of a total of 37 common laborers on the ——— paving job only 15 are from the relief rolls. I talked to the contractor about this and he advised me that he could not get them through the National Reemployment Office, but recruited labor, sent them to register, and then put them to work after they had been assigned. I talked to the national employment manager at ——— and he advised me that W. P. A. had two projects near ——— where the county had invested quite a sum of money in equipment to carry out the work and objected to having these men taken off the W. P. A. projects. The employment manager stated that he had taken the matter up with Mr. ———, W. P. A. director at ———, and was instructed to release the P. W. A. contractor from using W. P. A. labor.

This is typical of the complaints received.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The departments, agencies, or establishments having supervision of projects for which funds from the foregoing appropriation are made available shall not knowingly employ aliens illegally within the limits of the continental United States on such projects and they shall make every reasonable effort consistent with prompt employment of the destitute unemployed to see that such aliens are not employed, and if employed and their status as such alien is disclosed they shall thereupon be discharged.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: Page 5, line 4, after the word "aliens", strike out the following: "illegally within the limits of the continental United States", and on page 5, line 7, after the word "that", strike out the word "such."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this amendment about as much as I desire. The bill as drawn in this section would allow aliens illegally in our Territories and possessions to be employed. The amendment which I am offering will prevent the employment of aliens, both in the United States and in our Territories and possessions. I believe American employment should be given to American laborers, and that such work as we have to be done should be reserved for our American laborers. The purpose of this amendment is to make the money which we take from the taxpayer, from the American taxpayer, if you please, available to pay Americans for the work to be done under this measure. I think that in the spirit of our institutions and our ideals the amendment should prevail.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am interested in the gentleman's amendment, as it relates to small communities over the country, which are not close to immigration authorities. How will the gentleman's amendment operate in this respect?

Mr. LANHAM. Personally, I think anyone who makes an application for employment hereunder may well have placed upon him the burden of proof of showing he is either a native or a naturalized citizen. If he is a native citizen, it is very easily shown. If he is a naturalized citizen, there are records to establish the fact.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman know whether at the present time the application is required to contain a statement as to citizenship?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not know that it does. However, this amendment would prevent the employment of aliens.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I may state to the gentleman I have been informed that in the Canal Zone $10,000,000 was allocated out of the W. P. A. funds, and the entire amount was spent to take care of foreign labor which came in there.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Has the gentleman any idea how many men now on relief rolls will be affected if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. LANHAM. I cannot give the gentleman that information. I understand from one of my colleagues that a year ago he received information from the authorities that at that time there were 600,000 aliens in the country who were receiving relief under such a measure.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. These aliens would be dropped in the event this amendment should be adopted?

Mr. LANHAM. They would be dropped.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. CITRON. Does not the gentleman's amendment mean that not a single alien would be permitted to obtain work on these relief projects?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman is correct. May I say in that regard that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS] intends to offer an amendment to this amendment, to which I have no special objection. The gentleman's amendment is to the effect that this shall not apply to those aliens legally admitted who have heretofore in good faith declared their intention to become citizens.

Mr. CITRON. The reason I asked the question is that there are aged aliens who came here years ago, when there were no educational requirements, and who have not been able to obtain their citizenship papers because of their lack of necessary educational qualifications. Your amendment would exclude them, though they may have a son who is in the Army or sons and daughters who served in the World War.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I would give the employment to the sons and daughters, who are American citizens. If they came here when there was no educational test, then they could easily have declared their intention to become citizens and could have become naturalized.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SACKS: Page 5, line 5, after the word "projects", insert the following: "except those aliens legally admitted into the United States and its Territories, and who have heretofore in good faith declared their intention to become citizens of the United States."

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] would exclude all aliens from participating in work relief. I am opposed to this amendment. It is a vicious proposal, intended to starve and exclude from help those whom we admitted by invitation to come to our shores. America, a democracy, surely is the haven of the oppressed and underprivileged economically and politically. Our action would aline our actions with those of autocratic Europe. However, if this amendment passes, I will offer another amendment to Mr. LANHAM's amendment which will protect those aliens who have signified their intentions to become citizens. However, I hope Mr. LANHAM's amendment is defeated, at which time I will withdraw mine and allow the law to exist as it was written into the bill by the committee. If it is not defeated but passes, my compromise should be adopted. Let the bill stay as it is. Defeat Mr. LANHAM's amendment and all amendments which would exclude aliens from W. P.A.

The amendment I have offered would give an opportunity to those who have come to this country and want to be citizens of this Nation, and who came here with the intention of becoming citizens of this country, and have so declared, to come within the provisions of this bill. They came to this country legally, and I think, in all fairness to these folks who have applied for citizenship and are willing to do everything necessary to become an American citizen, some opportunity should be given them to receive work relief.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman in position to advise the House as to the number of such persons falling within the class that his amendment is intended to take care of?

Mr. SACKS. I may say to the gentleman that I do not know the exact figures——

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman give an estimate?

Mr. SACKS. But I can say that my amendment simply applies to those who, before the passage of this act, had declared their intentions and who want to be citizens and are just waiting for the proper time to expire before becoming citizens.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any information as to the number of those that are in the country?

Mr. SACKS. No.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman in position to give us any estimate?

Mr. SACKS. No; I am not.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman's amendment includes those who have been here for a number of years, say, 25 years, and are just now applying for such citizenship?

Mr. SACKS. It would include those who, before the passage of this act, had applied for citizenship.

Mr. MOTT. No matter how long they may have lived here.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It does not matter how many are here. If only one person had declared his intention to become a citizen, he would be entitled to some consideration, and the gentleman's amendment would protect him.

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Is it not a fact that in recent months several thousand people have declared their intention to become citizens by reason of the fact they thought they would be eligible for relief under the Old Age Pension Act?

Mr. SACKS. That may be true; but that does not affect this proposition.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that most of these men and women who have filed their declaration of intention have been unable to become citizens because of the educational requirements of our naturalization laws?

Mr. SACKS. That is correct; and when they came here, I may say to the gentleman, there were no such educational requirements.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. FULLER. I realize there are a lot of aliens here who have been here for many, many years, who cannot read and write but are good citizens and have furnished veterans for our wars, but they cannot qualify on account of our recent laws that require certain educational qualifications.

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. However, in recent years we have imposed restrictions providing that they cannot come in unless they can show they are able to take care of themselves. Why would not the gentleman agree to an amendment which would provide that they must have come here within the last 10 years?

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. As a matter of fact, I may answer the gentleman by saying that is covered in my amendment, because my amendment says that they must have heretofore declared their intention, and, if they have done this, then they have the qualifications.

Mr. FULLER. They perhaps have been here 2 or 3 years and have declared their intention.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Under our present immigration law any alien who is on the relief rolls or who becomes a public charge within 5 years after his admission into this country is subject to deportation, so that, insofar as aliens who have come here recently are concerned, there need be no fear of their getting on the relief rolls, since the immigration authorities must deport them as soon as they become public charges.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. FORD of California and Mr. FISH objected.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the first amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am in opposition only to the amendment if my understanding of it is correct, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas about it.

There seems to be some misunderstanding. There are many members of the Committee who think the gentleman's amendment only applies to those aliens who are here illegally. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it applies to all aliens on the relief rolls.

Mr. LANHAM. It applies to all aliens, whether they are here legally or illegally, who are in continental United States or in our territories or posesssions.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, whatever is the will of the House is all right with me, but it seems to me that we are acting a little hastily when we say that we will strike 500,000 aliens off relief and let them starve. I offered an amendment to give preference to American citizens with the money involved. That would take care of the American citizens, and then if we had any money left over that would take care of aliens and those who had their first papers, but I think it is a hard-boiled proposition to rush in here without debate whatever, with a great deal of misunderstanding of the gentleman's amendment, and vote that these aliens shall be taken off relief and permitted to starve to death. That is not the attitude of the American people. I for one believe there ought to be a little more debate so that we know what we are voting on. I believe that we can have a compromise amendment and give preference to American citizens and veterans and then let these aliens with first papers come in and get relief. If the will of the House is to strike off the aliens absolutely under the gentleman's amendment, then I submit that that is not the proper way to proceed with a few minutes of debate, regardless of the consequences, without knowing what is going to happen. Who is going to take care of 500,000 aliens? Are we going to be responsible for our votes and let them starve, let them "eat cake"? That is not the attitude of the American Congress, and that is why I ask for more debate on this amendment so that we may propose an amendment to it to give preference to American citizens, and let the aliens come in next.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sure that under a strict interpretation of the gentleman's amendment, no one but the American Indians would be eligible for relief.

Mr. FISH. That is correct.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it not true that if you took those aliens off the relief rolls, you would simply drive them back to the welfare rolls in the local communities?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows there are lots of communities and lots of States that cannot take care of them.

Mr. HEALEY. Absolutely.

Mr. FISH. Let us face these facts. I submit the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] ought to give us 5 minutes to offer an amendment on which the House can vote.

Mr. WOODRUM. I have not taken any time away from the House.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman cut me off.

Mr. WOODRUM. I suggest the gentleman from New York should not filibuster.

Mr. FISH. I want to know if the House can vote on the amendment.

Mr. MAY. Does not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], as amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pensnylvania [Mr. SACKS], take care of every alien there is in this country who is here with proper motives, and does the gentleman want to feed those who are not here with proper motives?

Mr. FISH. No; but if the gentleman's amendment is adopted giving aliens who have first papers the next preference, that is all right, but that has not been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to comment on another phase of this bill. I noticed in the votes on the amendments the day before yesterday that practically 50 Members of the opposition party voted with every amendment offered by gentlemen on the Democratic side that had for its purpose the emasculation of the relief bill. I say to the Democrats in the House if you want to emasculate the relief bill, vote with the 50 Republicans who stood by those Democrats, but if they want to give us a relief bill that will take care of the situation in the United States, then they should vote with Mr. WOODRUM.

Mr. DIES. Does that include the gentleman's amendment for $1,000,000,000?

Mr. FORD of California. I decline to yield. There is not a single amendment offered by any Member of the House with regard to flood control, roads, P. W. A., or any other phase of the bill that I personally would not vote for if it were brought in separately, but when you permit these amendments to be brought here as an amendment to the relief bill, you are simply going to emasculate the bill as far as relief is concerned.

Let me further state it is my reasoned opinion, based on past experience and on the expressed attitude of the members of the Republican minority, that not 10 of the 50 members of the Republican minority would vote for a single one of these amendments if they came to the floor separately as bills appropriating money for the purposes set forth in these amendments, namely, flood control, good roads, and P. W. A.

In view of these facts, known to every member of the Democratic majority, I appeal to you to support the bill as it stands, appropriating $1,500,000,000 for the relief of human suffering.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania no doubt was motivated by the highest of purposes in offering this amendment. It seems to me that his amendment does not do the job properly, because it would discriminate against many people in this country, many children particularly, who are dependent upon the services of their parents to provide them with a livelihood. If the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania were to prevail, a man or woman who is an alien in the country, although legally here, who might have dependent children, would not be permitted to work to provide for his family.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman briefly.

Mr. SACKS. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] should be adopted without my amendment, it would mean that every alien in this country would be deprived of relief.

Mr. BOILEAU. It would be much worse. It is just a matter of degree. I submit we are working upon the wrong premise when we talk about all these aliens. According to a letter written by Mr. Hopkins to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures, it shows that only 120,000 aliens of all classes are working under W. P. A. That is less than 5 percent. I submit that we do not want to pass a relief bill and say to those people who are here, either legally or illegally, that we will not give them a chance to earn a living and provide for their dependents.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. LAMNECK. As I understand it, they could have relief if they are here legally. It is only the aliens who are here illegally who would not be able to have relief.

Mr. BOILEAU. No. The bill provides that all aliens who are here legally can get employment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] wanted to exclude all aliens, whether here legally or illegally. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS] wants to amend it so as to provide so that only those aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens could have relief. But even if we accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS], many fathers and mothers will be deprived of an opportunity to work and their dependents will have to suffer. It seems to me we are taking a rather narrow point of view.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is the gentleman insisting there is an obligation on the part of the taxpayers of this Nation to support aliens who are here illegally?

Mr. BOILEAU. I say that so long as the Government of the United States permits aliens to come to this country or permits people who are here illegally to stay here, so long as we let them stay here, we ought to give them a chance to earn bread and butter. We are not giving them a large income. We are not giving them $2,000-a-year jobs. We are giving them as low as $19 a month on which to support a family. If we find out who those aliens are who are here illegally, let us deport them, but let us treat them as human beings until we do send them out. Let us be fair about the situation.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that an American citizen in many of the foreign countries cannot even get private employment. They will not let them have it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Shame upon those countries if they permit people to stay there and will not give them an opportunity to make a living [applause]; but shame on us if we follow that example. [Applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. How many times shall we "turn the other cheek"?

Mr. BOILEAU. Oh, this is not a question of turning the other cheek. It is a question of giving these people a chance to have the bare necessities of life. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can fix the time for debate on this section? May I inquire how many amendments there are pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed there is only one amendment at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WOODRUM. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is only one other amendment pending to this section.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I understand the gentleman from Virginia made a motion that all debate close in 30 minutes, and that takes precedence over the motion made by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asked unanimous consent, to which there was an objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I did move to close debate in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman. The gentleman from Virginia moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 135 and noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to all amendments to section 3, House Joint Resolution 361. While I am not in sympathy with the aliens who are in this country who refuse and do not intend to become American citizens, nevertheless I am deeply interested in a large group of men and women who have been in this country a long time and who have made every effort to become American citizens, but who, unfortunately, have been unable to qualify because of the educational requirements of our naturalization laws.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANZETTA. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman take into consideration that a rather large group of aliens have been here for a long period of time but nave not considered applying for citizenship until some contingency like the social-security law made it appear to them to be to their advantage to apply?

Mr. LANZETTA. While I agree with the gentleman that such aliens should not be given much consideration, nevertheless the gentleman must take this fact into consideration, and that is that a large number of aliens have given up all hope of becoming American citizens because of their inability to learn the English language. I know of a number of cases where men and women have said, "What is the use of filing a declaration of intention or going through the motions of naturalization when I know that under the present law I shall never be able to qualify?"

Mr. MOTT. I have no objection to giving consideration to that class, but the class I just spoke of, it seems to me, is not entitled to any consideration, because they have not fulfilled the duties that are expected of them.

Mr. LANZETTA. If the gentleman will recall, I stated at the beginning of my talk that I was not in sympathy with those aliens who willfully and deliberately avoid becoming American citizens.

Mr. MOTT. I think some effort should be made in the amendment to segregate these two classes.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANZETTA. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Then, there is that class of aliens who while here legally have not properly complied with the educational requirements. We ought also to consider that they have children and dependents who will be discriminated against.

Mr. LANZETTA. I am about to touch upon that point.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Would it not be our duty, in order to take care of them, to strike out both amendments and leave the section as it originally stood?

Mr. LANZETTA. Yes; I think that would be the fair thing to do.

In connection with the barring of aliens as W. P. A. workers, I would like to read part of a letter from Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, W. P. A. Administrator, addressed to Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN, chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, on April 24, 1937, in connection with bill H. R. 3423 which also attempts to exclude aliens from the W. P. A. rolls. Mr. Hopkins says:

> The families of at least two-thirds of the works-program employees who are aliens contain children who are American citizens. The discharge of the legally entered aliens from the program would thus deny the benefits of the Federal works program to probably more than 160,000 American citizens, a great majority of whom are dependent children. These children would be forced to depend on the States and localities for relief, and many localities are unable to provide additional relief funds for the care of this group. Furthermore, it is probable that action taken to bar all aliens from Federal relief jobs would be quickly followed by similar action on the part of the States and municipalities. A considerable proportion of the aliens receiving employment have already taken out first papers as a step toward citizenship.

With respect to aliens who are here illegally and who become public charges within 5 years after their admission into the United States, I call your further attention to a statement made by the Honorable Frances Perkins in a letter to the Honorable JOHN J. COCHRAN on April 22, 1937:

> It would seem that existing laws amply operate to exclude the employment of undersirable aliens. Under the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1936 (49 Stat. 1609), aliens illegally within the limits of the continental United States may not be employed on projects financed under this act. Moreover, pursuant to section 3 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874), the admission of aliens who are or who are likely to become public charges is prohibited. The immigration laws also require the deportation of aliens who become public charges within 5 years after their admission. These laws have been strictly enforced by the Department of Labor, and in my opinion it would not only be a departure from and inconsistent with the scientific methods adopted to protect American workers from the competition of foreign labor, but also inhumane to deprive aliens who have resided in the United States more than 5 years of an opportunity to earn the bare necessities of life. Therefore only legally resident aliens of long standing are eligible to relief.

I trust that the members of this Committee will vote down all amendments to this section.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NICHOLS). The Chair would like to announce that 25 minutes remain for debate on this section. Because of the great interest in the section and to allow as many Members as possible to be heard, Members will be recognized for 3 minutes only.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH to the amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: On page 5, line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add: "Provided further, That preference shall be given to American citizens in employment by the Works Progress Administration, and next to those aliens who have taken out first papers prior to the enactment of this legislation."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is an amendment in the third degree, and further, that it is not germane to the pending amendment.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is an amendment to strike out. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is a proviso to be added at the end of the section, and against this the point of order would lie.

Mr. FISH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer this as an amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments already are pending and a third amendment cannot be offered at this time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to offer his amendment as a matter of information so that he may discuss it, I have no objection.

Mr. FISH. It has already been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The gentleman from New York is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; very briefly.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has that permission.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment in good faith as a compromise amendment, which gives preference to American citizens, and then, if there is any money left, to aliens who have taken out their first papers. I do not believe that the Congress intends to say that these aliens who are now on relief shall be thrown out overnight to starve. I do not believe the majority party wants to take that position. I am sure the majority party, with its representation in the great industrial cities of America, does not intend to take that position. There is only one Republican here in the House from the 10 largest cities in the United States.

The responsibility rests with you particularly as Members representing industrial cities where these aliens are now on relief. If you take that relief away from them, they will starve. As I say, the responsibility is upon you.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this as a fair compromise to give preference to American citizens, and if there is any money left, then it may go to these aliens who have taken out first papers.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. If those of us who favor the gentleman's amendment wish to vote for it, the only way the amendment may be reached is to vote down the other amendment?

Mr. FISH. Yes. The only way is to vote down the two pending amendments and then vote for my compromise amendment. You will accomplish the same thing in taking care of American citizens. Then you will take care of the aliens next. I, therefore, ask the membership to vote down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas and vote in favor of my compromise amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Of course, the gentleman realizes that with the small amount of money in this bill, under the gentleman's amendment there would not be a single alien get a job?

Mr. FISH. I know, but we all hope conditions will become better. There is enough money now to take care of a great many of the aliens. However, what I am primarily interested in is that the American citizens be given preference.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON] is recognized.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I address my remarks to section 3 of this bill and the amendment now proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Section 3 proposes to treat with certain kinds of aliens in the same manner as we did in the bill we passed last year. Aliens who are illegally in this country may not be employed upon W. P. A. projects. But the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] would exclude all aliens from working on W. P. A. projects; it would exclude aliens, no matter how long they have resided in our country; it would exclude them if they have children born here who are therefore American citizens; and it would exclude them if their sons or daughters served in our Armies or even gave their lives for this country, as many of the sons and daughters of so-called aliens did during the World War.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. May I ask the gentleman this question: In our Territories and possessions, why should we tax American taxpayers to give employment to aliens who are there illegally?

Mr. CITRON. The amendment offered by the gentleman is not restricted to those in our Territorial possessions. His amendment does not bar those illegally here; they are already barred from W. P. A. relief. It provides that all aliens shall not be eligible for W. P. A. relief. Though they came here years ago, because technical reasons, like educational qualifications, may have prevented their obtaining citizenship papers, they would now be excluded from W. P. A. relief. It means that aliens who have made this country their home, and who have children—children who love and cherish this land of ours, who are true and real Americans, and, as you and I remember, who served in our American Army, some of them even making the supreme sacrifice in the World War—to such people, though aliens, the amendment would bar relief. This includes people who came here from Italy, from Poland, from Sweden, from Germany, from Ireland, and many other countries. These people intend to remain here and die here. Their hearts are with this country. They have wanted to become citizens, but for some reason or other they could not.

If such people are without work, they cannot be deported. How about their children? Someone has to help them.

Out of the total on W. P. A. relief, only 5 percent, according to the report of the Administrator, consists of aliens. They pay taxes when able and they contribute in many ways to the welfare of this country. Once they were welcomed here.

An amendment such as offered by the gentleman from Texas is contrary to our traditions and to the ideals and principles of our country.

From time immemorial we have proclaimed that this country was a haven of refuge for the oppressed. While these people are within our household let us treat them honorably.

Because other countries preach the doctrine of hatred to aliens is no excuse for us doing likewise. The poor of our country, no matter from where they came, must be treated alike. We are passing a relief bill under the guidance of a great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, to help the needy. Let us help the citizen and alien—put them all at work.

For these reasons I oppose discriminating in this bill against the honest, worthy alien. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] is defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I read an article a few days ago that appeared in one of the papers in which Harry Hopkins made a statement in an address to the Teachers College of New York as follows:

We are now living under a new philosophy of government, a philosophy that says every American—

You will note he says "every American"— has a right to eat.

I do not suppose he meant, when he made that statement, those aliens who are not American citizens.

The philosophy created during the emergency will be the philosophy of America from now on.

I sincerely hope that Harry Hopkins, the Administrator of the W. P. A., will carry into effect the words which he spoke when he made that address. I pay high tribute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] who introduced the pending amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM is as follows:

Page 5, line 4, after the word "aliens", strike out the following: "illegally within the limits of the continental United States"; and on page 5, line 7, after the word "that", strike out the word "such."

I have a similar amendment that was sent to the Clerk's desk, but I understand the gentleman from Texas spoke on his amendment some time during the last week. If he had not introduced his amendment I would have introduced a similar amendment that American citizens be given preference over aliens.

Mr. Chairman, we have aliens on the pay roll and the American citizens are paying the taxes to pay for this relief and they are the ones who cannot get a job. If an American citizen goes to the W. P. A., he cannot even get inside of the office. They tell him they have no jobs when aliens and those who are not even registered voters are given the preference.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman have us shut our hearts to the children of aliens who may be in this country?

Mr. KRAMER. I will even feed the man who is in prison or in jail, or the man who is down in the gutter. I have not the heart that would refuse that man or his family anything to eat. But I say the time has come when we have to give some preference to American citizens.

Mr. BARRY. How are you going to feed those citizens?

Mr. KRAMER. We do not have to put him on the pay roll. We can take care of him in some other way.

Mr. BARRY. How?

Mr. KRAMER. Our private institutions take care of those men and their families. We do not have to put them on the pay roll in preference to those who are American citizens.

This is why we have this difficulty, not only in California but throughout the Nation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes; I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I correctly understand the gentleman to say the W. P. A. administrators in California are using aliens in preference to Americans?

Mr. KRAMER. They are using aliens in preference to American citizens and aliens who have become American citizens.

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot believe it.

Mr. KRAMER. And neither could I until it was proven to me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEALEY. What amendments are now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS].

Mr. HEALEY. What happened to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. How much time now remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes of debate now remain.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

Is this time allotted only on the amendments pending or upon the section?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, it relates to the section.

Mr. WOODRUM. The motion I made related to the section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are both voted down, would the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] then be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would; but there probably would not be any time left to debate the amendment. However, the amendment would be in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, in case the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] does not carry, the phraseology left in the bill will be "employ aliens illegally within the limits of the continental United States." I have an amendment pending, which then would be in order, to strike out the word "continental." Because there will be no time to discuss it, I have taken the opportunity to discuss it under a pro-forma amendment in the present discussion of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. There is no occasion for the use of the word "continental." Whatever rule is applied to the mainland of the United States applies with equal force and equal justice to the Territory of Hawaii. The word "continental" is to me like a red flag to a bull whenever I see it, because it introduces, when used in legislation, a geographical term which has no legal justification or meaning.

There is no necessity for the word "continental" being in the original draft of the bill.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. DIMOND. I thank the gentleman for having offered this amendment, because it is time, certainly, that all general legislation shall apply equally to the 48 States and the Territories, because the Territories, as the gentleman has just so well stated, are integral parts of the United States. Whatever rule of law is applied in the States ought to be applied with equal force in the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska.

Mr. KING. That is the practice to which I am addressing myself, regardless of the merits or demerits of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say to the gentleman that my amendment as offered applies to the United States and its Territories and possessions, and so would apply to Asiatics.

Mr. KING. I believe the gentleman's amendment would apply with equal force, and I have no point against that. I have taken this opportunity to express my objection to the use of the word "continental" in the section as originally drafted. If the opportunity comes, I would like to offer my amendment, to strike out the word "continental", to follow the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], if the gentleman's amendment does not carry.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Are there not different immigration laws in the Territory of Hawaii and in the United States?

Mr. KING. No; there are not.

Mr. HOOK. What about your 3-year law?

Mr. KING. What 3-year law? I do not know what the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas has expressed a sound and sensible doctrine, "American money for Americans." However, his amendment would not keep American money for Americans. Rather it would deprive American children of the benefit of American money and potential Americans, parents of American children.

The bill we are debating is a resolution making an appropriation for relief purposes. Let us not forget that it is a relief bill. As it now stands it does not grant the relief it is intended to give. We ought to adjourn here this afternoon and go to our homes. [Applause.] We will have a good holiday and time to reflect on giving the country real relief. Tune in on the radio each day and get the benefit of the effective operation of an Irish relief bill that has brought about real relief in Ireland. You will hear beginning tonight and continuing tomorrow, Saturday, and up to June 3, a voice coming over the radio telling about American citizens who will get Irish money from the event which will take place June 2, the Irish Sweepstakes. They will get Irish money or some of our "American money for the Irish."

The bill under which our American money goes to the Irish is a real relief bill. This resolution will relieve the unemployed, provided, however, the amendments which have carried in the committee are voted down in the House. However, what we need is a real relief bill. While we are undertaking relief, let us go further than the present resolution and before we finally vote on it bring in another relief bill which we can pass, a bill that will give relief to the worker, taxpayer, the sick, the maimed, the blind, and crippled children.

Watch how the relief bill, the Irish lottery bill, is working over there in Ireland. That bill is giving employment over there. It is helping the sick, it is helping the hospitals, it is helping the taxpayer. Do you not want to give equal relief here? Do you not want to relieve the taxpayer? Do you not want to have real relief? If you do, adjourn, go home, and think it over, and come back here Tuesday and vote this bill as it was originally drawn, and bring in its companion bill, my bill for a national lottery. Sign the petition on the Speaker's desk, bring out the lottery bill, and let us pass it, along with this bill. Then we shall have real relief.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I am as interested as any Member of this House in seeing that American citizens receive preference. However, I do not believe that any human being, whether he is an American citizen or an alien, should be allowed to walk the streets of the cities of the United States while we say to him, "We are going to let you starve. You have been over here a year and a half, and even though you could not file your declaration of intention to become an American citizen, and even though you are the father or the mother of a boy who served in the American Army before he could bring you over here, you cannot get anything to eat. You are going to have to walk the streets, and you are going to go hungry."

I would like to see the amendment which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] tried to offer as a substitute passed. This would give preference to American citizens, but it would not say that no alien could get any relief whatever.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. I do not believe that under the amendment of the gentleman from Texas we are going to permit any man or woman who is not an American citizen to starve.

Mr. CONNERY. They will go hungry and they will starve.

Mr. KRAMER. We just say by that amendment that the Americans shall be given the preference.

Mr. CONNERY. It does not say that. It states that no alien shall get a job under this appropriation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate the gentleman's position; but even with the Fish amendment, with an appropriation of $1,500,000,000, with eight or nine million people unemployed, and with jobs for only 1,700,000, how many aliens does the gentleman think would get jobs under that situation, and would not the effect be exactly the same?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I will say to my friend from Wisconsin that when it comes to the question of whether an American or an alien is going to go hungry, or which one is going to get a job, I say the preference should be given to the American, but we should not bar the alien if there are funds; and if the Fish amendment is passed, they would get the funds to see that the aliens were taken care of.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman states that he is in favor of giving the preference to American citizens——

Mr. CONNERY. If you have to give a preference to the American or the alien.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not that crystallize the issue before us, and should we not appropriate money enough to take care of all human beings?

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I would like to see done; but in the present parliamentary situation I would like to see the Fish amendment passed, because under that amendment the Americans would get the preference and then they would find the money necessary to put on the aliens.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I want to point out to the gentleman that under the Lanham amendment, as amended by my amendment, all aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens would have equal opportunity with other citizens, whereas under the Fish amendment, if the money does not hold out, the American citizens would be taken care of first and then the aliens.

Mr. CONNERY. But under the gentleman's amendment they must file their declaration of intention, and they have to wait 2 years in order to do that.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, there is a spirit of Americanism, or un-Americanism—I do not know which—that is sweeping the floor now. In any event, we are a little bit excited over this matter.

What percentage of the people who get relief or who are under W. P. A. are aliens? Something like 5 percent. It does not amount to a great deal financially or in proportion to the whole appropriation. Yet we are getting up here and just brutally saying that children, for instance, shall be kicked out. We take a condemned murderer and we feed him well. Let us be sensible and humane about this.

In my district I have a certain number of people there that they call Mexicans. They are Americans, but some of them cannot speak English, and they cannot prove they are citizens. That is only an instance; but I fear we are going to cause all kinds of unkind and brutal things to happen if we adopt this amendment. I think the amendment should be voted down.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. SCHULTE. Does the gentleman know there are over 10,000 aliens on the pay rolls of the United States Government at the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; that is natural; I doubt if Americans want to move there and live like the aliens there.

Mr. SCHULTE. I may say to the gentleman that there are a great many in my district who would love to go down there.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman may be right; but that does not concern the continental part of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, when you adopt legislation of this kind you are simply doing things that are thoughtless and brutal. If we have a W. P. A., we have got to trust the administrators. The bill as it is written now, which prevents the employment of aliens illegally here, is enough.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman realizes that under the Fish amendment all aliens will be cut off the rolls because they are going to reduce the number by 600,000, whereas under the Lanham amendment three-fourths of the aliens already have declared their intention to become citizens, and therefore the Lanham amendment is 10 times more humane than the Fish amendment.

Mr. MAVERICK. I thank the gentleman; but it seems to me that the entire matter is so complicated at the present time that I think we ought to defeat the amendments and leave the bill like the committee reported it. That seems the safest course.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman think we should be for the bill as reported with his amendment out of the bill?

Mr. MAVERICK. The bill ought to be left just like it is.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman asked for an increase to $1,500,000,000.

Mr. MAVERICK. The President asked for a billion and a half, which I favor. This was not an increase, according to my view.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Certainly, I yield to my good friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman said that under the Lanham amendment aliens——

Mr. MAVERICK. Let us knock out all the amendments. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, we have now nearly reached the time when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] hoped the House would have the bill finished so that we could take up the conference reports. We have reached the part of the bill where only a few amendments will probably be proposed. I have two amendments which I propose to offer, but I shall not do so, because I think what I wanted done can be accomplished by regulations of the Relief Administration. If we are to pass this bill today, if we are to stop the filibuster started by those who earlier in the day wanted a vote by 4 o'clock, we have to limit debate. We have achieved the objectives of three great committees in this House.

The Roads Committee went to the Committee on Appropriations, but arrived too late to have its proposition inserted in the bill, and we now have placed a direction in the bill that some of this money shall go for road building. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] hoped that we could get together and compromise our differences. The differences have already been compromised by three major amendments. We have put in the bill what three great groups in the House think ought to be in there, and we have passed the part of the bill where it is unlikely any more compromises will have to be made. I hope we can reach the end of this bill and pass it tonight, because if we do we avoid the calculated and bureau-inspired pressure of propaganda which is being brought to bear on Members of Congress by persons who have made relief a racket and who, if forced to stand for an election on use of some of this much-needed relief money, could not get elected dog catchers. No last-minute high pressure will influence any Representative who has the welfare of all classes at heart. I am getting a little sick and tired of self-appointed purveyors of prejudice, people who never held public office, being solicited by bureaucrats to send me telegrams to vote the way some directors of relief want me to vote so they can keep their soft jobs distributing money the Congress should control and allocate where needed most. I hope we will not fall for the evident purpose of this filibuster and prolong passage of this bill any further, so that some of these gentlemen who are bringing pressure on Congress, not for the relief worker but for their own well-paid sinecures, will have a couple of more days to attempt to change the expressed will of the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. All time has expired. The question first comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The question was taken, and Mr. LANHAM demanded a division.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, should not the vote first come upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there has been some confusion. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS] is not, strictly speaking, an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. They are two separate amendments and must be voted on separately.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was presented to the House as an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Not finally. Both amendments were debated together.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that it may be considered as an amendment to my amendment, in order that the two may be voted on in that way?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I make the request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FISH. I object.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has stated that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a separate amendment and not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I understood that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] was declared not in order because it was an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. FISH. I ask the gentleman to let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. A division has been demanded.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 112.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. LANHAM and Mr. WOODRUM to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the previous amendment was defeated, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it was so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, a compromise amendment to this section. Can we not vote on that now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FISH: Page 5, line 9, after the word "discharged", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That preference shall be given to American citizens in employment by the Works Progress Administration, and next those aliens who have taken out first papers prior to the enactment of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 5, after the word "discharged" in line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That veterans of the World War and the Spanish War shall be given preference for employment by the Works Progress Administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment follow the other amendment in order. I think there was some discrepancy in the reading by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we could not hear the request of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York made a request about the order of the amendment, which was not necessary, because they are in order.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING: Page 5, lines 4 and 5, strike out the word "continental."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] has an amendment at the Clerk's desk, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER: Page 5, line 9, insert after the colon "Provided, That preference for employment be given to American citizens and those aliens who in good faith made application to become American citizens."

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, that is a similar amendment to the last amendment which has been voted upon. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Any Administrator or other officer named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the foregoing appropriation and receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation, and any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation, except persons now serving as such under other law, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any such appointee and the salary of any person so appointed shall not be increased for a period of 6 months after confirmation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 5, line 22, after the word "confirmation", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso: "Provided further, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be applied to the payment of any salary in excess of the sum of $10,000 per annum."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard on the amendment except to say that this is a relief bill, and it is the purpose of the administration to administer relief as economically as possible, and of course that is very necessary. In the creation of various commissions and boards, such as the Wagner Labor Relations Board, the Bituminous Coal Commission, and others I do not now recall, the Congress has limited salaries to the maximum sum of $10,000.

Last week this House, in the consideration of a bill involving one of the appointees or directors of a relief organization, placed in the bill a provision which fixed the Administrator's salary at $10,000. Another body has concurred in that amendment. I am sure there is nobody connected with the Works Progress Administration who, under present circumstances, would ask for more than $10,000 a year.

I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. Chairman, everyone knows that the purpose of this is to strike at Harry Hopkins, and if you want to do it, of course, you can do it. But when you do this you are also striking at our own Democratic Party and President of the United States, and if you want to do that you can do that. [Laughter and applause.]

I would also call attention to the fact that when people yell that way you are acting like a mob, not Congressmen [laughter]; and when they do not listen, it does not make any difference who is speaking, you are being disrespectful to yourselves and to the person who is talking. [Laughter.] And when people keep on laughing, they are not showing good manners or good order; they are laughing at themselves.

I thank you.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that any man who worked for the Steel Corporation in as important a job as Harry Hopkins has would be getting $150,000 a year. [Applause.] Any man working for a small or fair-sized corporation in our home town would be making from $12,000 to $20,000 a year. [Applause.] Any man in private business would be getting much more than Mr. Hopkins is getting. When we permit enormous, unregulated salaries in private industry, and then beat down the W. P. A. Administrator, who has a job far more important than any of these industrialists, we are beating down the Government of our country.

We pay Federal judges from $10,000 to $20,000; the Chief Justice of the United States gets $20,000. I wonder if Justice Van Devanter, who writes three or four opinions a year, does as much work as Harry Hopkins?

Remember, when we do this we are just showing our anger at Harry Hopkins. Let that be the record. It is not a great compliment to representative government if we do.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there are 435 Members of this House who work for $10,000 a year and have to run for their office two races every year? I deny that my amendment is aimed at Mr. Hopkins, for whom I have no criticism, but it is in furtherance of the President's desire for economy.

Mr. MAVERICK. President's desire for economy, my eye! Harry Hopkins has one of the most responsible jobs in America, and here we are supporting the President in economy, by knocking Mr. Hopkins down from $12,000 to $10,000, a net saving of $2,000 a year, and by raiding the relief bill to the extent of $505,000,000. Five hundred and five million dollars, gentlemen, for the "pork barrel", and $2,000 knocked off Mr. Hopkins in a rampage of absolutely unwarranted spite.

And I realize that we, as Congressmen, get $10,000 a year and have to run every 2 years. But I am again calling attention to the fact that in private businesses salaries are paid for much less responsible jobs than Mr. Hopkins holds, which pay from $25,000 to $200,000. The truth is that Mr. Hopkins has about the hardest job of any man in the United States.

If we adopt this amendment, it is a direct slap at the President of the United States.

Mr. MAY. Does he think that any man in an appointive position ought to have more than they are getting?

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman think that the Justices of the Supreme Court should be cut to $10,000?

Mr. MAY. Some of them.

Mr. MAVERICK. Some of them, yes; the liberal ones, the ones who are for the New Deal, sure. If a judge is for progress, social security, cut him down. The truth is all the judges should get the salaries they now receive—district judges get $10,000, the same as we do; others more.

I repeat, this is quite unreasonable, and is done for no good purpose. The only purpose is to show ill feeling for Harry Hopkins and to embarrass the President. The truth is, there is no substantial cause for any ill feeling toward Harry Hopkins. Because we are making a half billion raid, we use Harry for a $2,000 whipping boy. O Mr. Chairman, this just does not make sense.

All we are doing is to establish a bad precedent for the United States Government in discouraging able executives and we do not hurt Harry Hopkins or the President personally. Our general course in the last few days has not been to hurt them, but to hurt the unemployed, and the people as a whole, who elected us to give them democratic government.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 132, noes 105.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MAY and Mr. WOODRUM.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 137, noes 114.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this section has been closed. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Appointments to Federal positions of an administrative or advisory capacity under the foregoing appropriation in any State shall be made from among the bona-fide residents of that State so far as not inconsistent with efficient administration.

With the following committee amendment:

After line 3, add the following:

"No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States who holds an administrative, executive, or supervisory position under this joint resolution, if the position is in any office located outside the District of Columbia or is on any project prosecuted in any place outside the District of Columbia, unless such person is an actual and bona-fide resident of the State or Territory in which the office or project is situated, but this provision shall not apply to the temporary and emergency assignment of any person to a position where the period of service in such position does not exceed 60 days."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it happens that I have been a Member of this body for a long time. I have been here long enough to be like a mule that has been broke—I do not get greatly excited, it matters not which side I am in, the majority or the minority. During all of this time I have never said a thing on this floor to or about a Member of Congress that I would withdraw from the RECORD today. In all of this time I have never sought to deceive the House of Representatives or any individual in it.

I take the floor at this time to appeal to the reason of my colleagues on this side of the aisle; not to their patriotism, because they are always full of patriotism; but we have reached a point in the consideration of this bill where I believe that the temper of this House is not such that we are likely to have reasoned legislation. Our friends over on the other side of the aisle, under patriotic and able leadership, are in a state of absolute glee this afternoon because they think that somebody will say that with their help committees and leaderships have been overthrown. We are badly split up, many amendments have been adopted in heat. We must vote on a great many of them, and it is my thought that if we took a few hours to cool off, if we had some conferences among ourselves and with some people in the administration that instead of appearing to be a hopelessly split majority we might come to some conclusion between now and next Tuesday. Let me say [laughter]—oh, I know, I know; you laugh on the Republican side, you do not like it, you do not want us to get together, you do not intend that we shall pass such legislation as the Government can most efficiently operate under, because you want to use this in 1938 and in 1940.

I never quote the President of the United States, but within the hour I have been in conversation with him. I believe that on these three major amendments that have been adopted—frankly, I am opposed to each and every one of them in their present form, and the form of each of them is unfortunate—I believe that within a few hours we can get together with the man who must administer this law and with the members of his own party in the Congress of the United States and adjust this whole thing so that we can all win a victory and not be defeated.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would rather not yield, I will say to my friend. I do not think I would be helpful if I got into a controversy here with a minority Member.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have just said, I may say to my colleague, that I would not yield. He knows that if I yielded to anybody I would yield to him.

Mr. COX. Will not the gentleman yield to me to make just one brief observation?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. There are pending three conference reports, two of which are vitally important and involve laws that must be enacted before the 1st of June. I have made such promise as I could that there would be no business transacted in the House tomorrow. Of course, the House may do as it pleases when it meets tomorrow. We must meet tomorrow in order to adjourn over until Tuesday next, which will give us a much-needed rest.

I appeal to the cooler judgment of my colleagues, I appeal to what I know is their fairness, I appeal to their better judgment. When the gentleman from Virginia makes his motion that the Committee rise I hope the motion will be agreed to. I pledge you, for and against the amendments that have been adopted allotting this money, that between now and the time this bill is taken up for consideration again everything that is humanly possible to be done to bring about an adjustment fair to every man, to every section, and to every project in this country will be done by me. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I believe my colleagues cannot say that there have been any unnecessary dilatory tactics used by the committee in presenting this bill. Unfortunately we have gotten into a difference of opinion and the legislation at the present moment is not in a wholesome condition.

May I say to the gentlemen who are so interested in P. W. A. that there is now pending before the Appropriations Committee legislation sent up by the administration to extend the life of the Public Works Administration and to permit them to go ahead for the next 2 years and complete the projects upon which they are already engaged.

The committee has held hearings upon this legislation and accorded to the distinguished gentleman from New York not only the opportunity to be heard but we gave him the added privilege of sitting in with the committee while hearing witnesses. That bill has not been brought upon the floor because the relief bill intervened.

The Public Works Administration already has $150,000,000 in that fund which they cannot use because of an Executive order. I cannot quote anybody because I have not talked to anybody, but personally I do not have any doubt in my own mind but what appropriate arrangements can be made to take off the limitation whereby the $150,000,000 may be used on projects and perhaps more added. I think we can reach an agreement on P. W. A. that will satisfy our friends who are interested in it, and I am as interested as any other Member in the P. W. A., but this is not the proper place to put the legislation.

The gentleman from New York knows that if this bill were law this minute they could not spend the money on account of an administrative order. It is a situation that calls for conference and consideration. We have worked hard on this bill, and no harm can be done by taking a little more time. There is not a Member of this body who is going to be swept off his feet by propaganda, and any legitimate situation that comes to us that might change our mind is proper for us to consider.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that no majority of this House has had a kindlier leader than SAM RAYBURN, of Texas [applause], and I trust that the Committee will yield to the appeal which he has just made and which is so ably supported by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman from Virginia has stated I appeared before the committee and received the courtesy of that committee, which I did. I appreciate that courtesy. But the bill that is pending before the committee and which will be reported for the extension of the P. W. A. does not carry one penny for even the administration of that division. The $10,000,000 that was set aside for the administration of the Public Works Administration was taken away from them in the second deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman cannot say what bill is going to be reported, because we have not completed the bill as yet.

Mr. BEITER. A bill has been introduced, and there has been consideration. However, it carries no appropriation. There are only $131,000,000 in the revolving fund, and unless the administrative order is changed that money cannot be expended; neither can the $300,000,000 that has been earmarked in the present bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 157, noes 85.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following my amendment which was adopted in Committee I may insert in the RECORD, following the amendment, my remarks explaining said amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the amendment I offered to the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

(Mr. LYNDON JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD with reference to the Golden Gate Bridge, which was formally opened today by the President of the United States, and to include a poem written by our esteemed colleague, Hon. JOHN STEPHEN MCGROARTY, poet laureate of the State of California, for this occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

(Mr. MICHENER, Mr. HOFFMAN, Mr. SACKS, and Mr. CARTWRIGHT asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6730) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6730) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 40, 45, 51, 53, and 59.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 36, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, and 61, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$750,000, of which not more than $100,000 shall be available for the payment of awards under such act of June 30, 1936"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"FREEDMEN'S HOSPITAL

"For an additional amount for the maintenance and operation of Freedmen's Hospital, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of the Interior Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937, $10,000, of which amount one-half shall be chargeable to the District of Columbia, and paid in like manner as other appropriations of the District of Columbia are paid."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 6, 10, 30, 46, and 62.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6730) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes (second deficiency appropriation bill, fiscal year 1937), submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, relating to the Senate: Appropriates for salaries and expenses of the Senate in the amounts and in the manner proposed by the Senate amendments.

On no. 7: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $175,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Great Lakes Exposition.

On nos. 8 and 9, relating to the Tennessee Valley Authority: Appropriates $40,166,270, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $44,166,270, as proposed by the House, and inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, for commencement of construction of the dam at or near Gilbertsville, Ky., and for preliminary investigations of sites for dams at or near Watts Bar and at or near Coulter Shoals, both in Tennessee. In connection with the reduction of $4,000,000 in direct appropriation by Senate amendment no. 9, the managers on the part of the House report in disagreement Senate amendment no. 10, a contract authorization of $4,000,000 stricken from the bill in the House, in which concurrence will be recommended to replace the reduction of $4,000,000 of direct appropriation above referred to.

On nos. 11 to 29, inclusive, 31, 32, and 33, relating to the District of Columbia and payable from District revenues: The matters involved in these amendments were transmitted to the Senate after the bill had passed the House and involved items not presented to the House during the original consideration of the bill. The total amount involved by the Senate amendments to which the House agrees, $337,355.48; this amount is made up as follows: $74,855.48 is occasioned by judgments, refunds, audited claims, and amounts due other departments of the Federal Government for services rendered the District in fiscal years prior to the current fiscal year; $32,000 is due to fees of jurors and witnesses and other current expenses of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia; $80,500 is occasioned by additional maintenance costs and increased population for four District institutions; and $150,000 is required on account of construction costs for five school projects which cannot be built under the original plans and within the original appropriation due to rise in construction costs since the estimates were made.

On nos. 34 and 35, relating to the Bureau of Fisheries: Appropriates $60,000 for the removal and reestablishment of the Little White Salmon fish cultural station in the State of Washington, instead of $50,000 as proposed by the House and $65,000 as proposed by the Senate, and limits the amount to be expended for a site to $6,000, instead of $7,500 as proposed by the Senate and $4,000 as proposed by the House.

On nos. 36 and 37, relating to the War Minerals Relief Commission: Appropriates $750,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $550,000, as proposed by the Senate, and makes the amount available, as proposed by the Senate, for the payment of operations' claims as authorized by the act of June 30, 1936, as proposed by the Senate, but raises the amount which may be so used from $50,000 to $100,000.

On nos. 38 to 45, inclusive, 47, 48, and 49, relating to the Bureau of Indian Affairs: Appropriates as follows for items transmitted to the Senate after the bill had passed the House: $412.65 for the fiscal year 1935 for payment to Indians of Sioux Reservations; $7,500 for suppressing contagious diseases among livestock of Indians on the Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex.; $500 from tribal funds for operation and maintenance of the San Xavier irrigation project, Arizona; $6,500 for improvement and maintenance of the irrigation system, Colorado River Reservation, Ariz.; $80,000 for repairs to the Zuni Dam, Zuni Indian Pueblo, N. Mex.; $222.54, fiscal year 1931, for payment of balance due in connection with the construction of a new vessel for the Alaskan Indian Service; $9,000 from tribal funds for support of hospitals for the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota; and $40,000 for the Annette Islands, Alaska; and strikes out the following items: An increase from $65,000 to $75,000 in the amount for administrative expenses in connection with the revolving fund for loans to Indians and Indian corporations, 1937, and authority for a change in the act of June 7, 1935, relative to public schools in Glacier County, Mont.

On no. 50: Appropriates $10,000, instead of $13,000, as proposed by the Senate, for maintenance of Freedmen's Hospital.

On nos. 51, 52, and 53, relating to the Department of Justice: Appropriates $16,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $7,500, as proposed by the Senate, for departmental contingent expenses; inserts the appropriation of $33,000, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals; and strikes out the appropriation of $40,000, proposed by the Senate, for pay of special assistant attorneys for the fiscal year 1937.

On nos. 54 and 55: Appropriates $160,000, as proposed by the Senate, for continuation of improvement of the water front at the Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Va.

On nos. 56, 57, and 58, relating to the Post Office Department: Appropriates $6,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $6,000,000, as proposed by the House, for clerks at first- and second-class post offices; appropriates $225,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $200,000, as proposed by the House, for clerks at third-class post offices; and appropriates $5,300,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,500,00, as proposed by the House, for railroad transportation of mail.

On no. 59: Strikes out the reappropriation, inserted by the Senate, for the Interparliamentary Union.

On no. 60: Appropriates $125,000, as proposed by the Senate, for collection of the customs revenues, fiscal year 1937.

On no. 61: Appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Bureau of Narcotics, Treasury Department, fiscal year 1937.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments:

On no. 6: Appropriating $100,000 for books for the adult blind.

On no. 10: Granting the Tennessee Valley Authority a contract authorization of $4,000,000, in lieu of a direct appropriation of that amount.

On no. 30: Appropriating $95,748.91 for payment of a final judgment against the District of Columbia from the gasoline-tax fund of such District.

On no. 46: Appropriating $100,000 for the construction and equipment of a hospital for the Indian Service at Point Barrow, Alaska.

On no. 62: Continuing during the fiscal year 1938 the suspension of the reenlistment gratuity for enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.

C. A. WOODRUM.
JOHN J. BOYLAN.
CLARENCE CANNON.
JOHN TABER
(except as to no. 8).
ROBERT L. BACON
(except as to no. 8).

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, the conference report has been signed by all of the conferees. There are a number of different items in it which I will not take the time of the House to go into unless some Member is interested in something and wishes to ask about it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] wants a little time to speak about one of the items, and I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. With reference tc amendment no. 37, if I understand correctly what has been done, according to the conference report we will appropriate $650,000 for the act of May 18, generally known as the amendment to the War Minerals Act, and $100,000 for the act of June 30, which was a later act.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TABER. Before I take the floor, may I say that I understood amendment 62 was to be brought back for a separate vote, but the report does not so show.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; the last paragraph of the report reads as follows: "The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments nos. 6, 10, 30, 46, and 62."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I am in favor of the conference report, but I notice in all these appropriation bills which have come to my attention that the departments of the Government are using what I think they call lithographing and duplicating machines, whereas the law provides such material must be printed. In other words, they are doing away with hand printing and the work of the Printing Office, and using duplicating machines which are not authorized by law. This practice favors only concerns like Remington-Rand, a strike-breaking concern. I want to call this to the attention of the chairman and ask that he insist that the law be enforced, that where printing is used it be printing and not running the material through these lithographing and duplicating machines.

Mr. WOODRUM. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. What is now the total amount of the second deficiency bill, as amended?

Mr. WOODRUM. Approximately $81,000,000.

Mr. RICH. How does this compare with the amount in the bill as it left the House?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is a small amount less than it was when it left the House.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BACON. I think one or two Members would like to have a few minutes to discuss amendment 62. I believe a separate vote will have to be had on this amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is that the reenlistment pay amendment?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would like to be heard on that amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the conference report is agreed on by all the conferees, with the exception of amendment no. 8, relating to the commencement of the Gilbertsville Dam on the Tennessee River. This is the only thing in the report about which there is any difference. This authorizes the commencement of a dam which will cost over $100,000,000, and if the program the Tennessee Valley Authority wants to go through with is concurred in, is apt to cost $500,000,000 before it is finished, including a canal to the Cumberland River and a dam on the Ohio River.

Frankly I do not believe the House ought to authorize the construction of another dam at this time. There is a surplus of power now, at least 2 to 1. The only power they are able to sell in any quantity is second-grade power, which is sold to such outfits as the Aluminum Co. of America. I do not believe, in view of the statements Dr. Morgan has made to us, to the effect that they would not be able to go ahead with the project within the year, that the Congress should authorize the beginning of this $100,000,000 project. I think we should wait until there is a reason for it beyond sentiment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, the dam across the Ohio River would not be under the jurisdiction of the Tennessee Valley Authority. If any dam is built across the Ohio River, it will have to be authorized by an act of Congress, and will probably come under some other authority instead of the T. V. A.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct that it is not authorized in the organic act. It is a part of the scheme, however, of the three men who constitute the Tennessee Valley Authority at the present time, and it would encourage that program for a canal over the Cumberland and a dam in the Ohio if we authorize the starting of this dam now.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DEMUTH. I wish to point out that this Gilbertsville Dam that is in this bill will cost $55 per 1,000 second-feet of flood water retained, whereas the dams proposed in the State of Pennsylvania by the Army engineers will cost only $38.25 per 1,000 second-feet of water retained, and we are willing to put up dollar for dollar. So why should we give $40,000,000 when this other group does not put up one penny, and we are building it for almost one-half less? I cannot see any logic in this proposition.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I would yield if the gentleman would get me more time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that in this situation, with the head of the Authority having told the House Committee that he was not ready to go ahead with it, and with the power situation in the shape it is, and there can be no material control of floods with this dam, because the flood-control proposition is entirely with the upper dam, the Norris Dam, and one of those dams up on the Hiawassee River, I believe. I am not a good Indian, and I cannot remember those names very well.

Mr. RANKIN. The Chickamauga?

Mr. TABER. No; Chickamauga is not a very big dam from the standpoint of a storage dam. The Norris and the Hiawassee are the only storage dams in the whole picture that amount to anything.

I do not believe there is any justification for the House embarking on a dam costing upward of $100,000,000 at this time with the picture presented to us by the authorities and with the picture presented to us by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, where the cost of the proposition is away out of line.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is my information, and if I am wrong I wish the gentleman from Mississippi would correct me——

Mr. RANKIN. I should be glad to correct the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Contracts have recently been entered into whereby practically all the power generated in the Tennessee Valley is being sold to the Aluminum Co. of America and the Monsanto Chemical Co., of St. Louis, aggregating something like 50,000 kilowatts, and the price to be paid is less than cost of production.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 1 additional minute.

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to know if Congress is justified in spending hundreds of millions of dollars in order to provide the Aluminum Co. of America and the Monsanto Chemical Co., of St. Louis, with power at less than 3 cents, or less than it costs to produce it. According to the T. V. A. annual report the sale price is considerably less than 3 cents. I am informed they have entered into contracts that permit of renewals every 10 years.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I do not want to yield any further just now.

It is a fact they are selling a lot of power to the Aluminum Co. and to the Monsanto Chemical Co. and planning to sell a lot more at very low prices. They claim it is what they call second-grade junk power, which is not primary power. This is the excuse they give for it. Personally, insofar as I can figure it, it is the power for which they have not a regular market rather than secondary power.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] I desire to say that the Tennessee Valley Authority is not contemplating building a dam across the Ohio River for the simple reason that the Ohio River is not within the jurisdiction of the Tennessee Valley Authority. If any dam is built across the Ohio River, it will be built by some other authority or under some other agency of the Government.

Let me say to the gentleman from New York, with reference to the building of this Gilbertsville Dam, that this dam is absolutely necessary in order to develop navigation on the Tennessee River and to protect people along the lower Tennessee, the Ohio, and the lower Mississippi from the flood disasters they have experienced in recent years.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question, yes.

Mr. TABER. It is a fact that the Chairman of the Authority told us that he had not pursued his investigations far enough to go ahead with it.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; they have pursued their investigations far enough. I talked with a member of the Authority on yesterday and they are ready to proceed with the building of this dam.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. Is this approved by the Bureau of the Budget, this expenditure of a hundred-and-some-odd million dollars?

Mr. RANKIN. But we are not spending a hundred-and-some-odd-million dollars. We are merely authorizing the T. V. A. to begin construction. The gentleman from Virginia can answer the question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asked whether this is approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is no money in this bill for construction of Gilbertsville Dam. This does not affect the amount of money in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Is it approved by the Budget that they should begin this at this time?

Mr. WOODRUM. We are spending some $700,000 in the bill for surveys and investigations of this project.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me proceed to answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Had it not been for the dams on the Tennessee River, the Wheeler Dam and the Norris Dam in particular, the city of Cairo would have been destroyed in the recent floods. You never can control floods on the Mississippi or the Ohio Rivers by building levees, by revetments, and pumping the mud out of the stream. The only way that you are ever going to control floods on these streams is by construction of these high dams to hold the water out of the streams, to keep them from synchronizing with the floods on the Missouri, the Ohio, and the upper Mississippi.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that General Markham testified before one of the committees here that the Norris Dam had no effect on the Mississippi flood whatever?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not going to enter into a discussion of that intense jealousy which the Army engineers are manifesting toward the engineers of the Tennessee Valley Authority. As a matter of fact, everybody who is well informed and unprejudiced knows that the dams on the Tennessee River saved the city of Cairo in the recent floods.

It is necessary to build this dam. The gentleman from New York says that we have too much power now, that we have a surplus of power, when half of the American people get no power at all, and the ones who do use electricity today do not use on an average of one-half the amount necessary to enable them to really enjoy the use of electric current.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is fair, and probably knows as much about this as anyone else. Will the gentleman state what percentage of power developed in the Tennessee Valley has been contracted to the Montsanto Chemical Co., of St. Louis?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I cannot answer that question, but I shall answer the other question the gentleman asked a few moments ago.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Montsanto Chemical Co., of St. Louis.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know anything about that. I was not in favor of making those contracts. I want to see this power go to the people who need it. This surplus power is supposed to be flood power or secondary power.

Your administration, the Hoover administration, made a contract with the Commonwealth & Southern in 1931 to sell them primary power generated at Muscle Shoals. Last year they bought 560,000,000 kilowatt-hours under that contract at 1.50 mills per kilowatt-hour. The surplus power now being sold to the Aluminum Co. is being sold at 2.28 mills a kilowatt-hour.

At the time that your administration was selling that power to the power company at less than 1⅝ mills per kilowatt-hour they were selling it to the people around the dam at 10 cents, or a difference of 6,000 percent, and your administration would not even permit us to build a line into the dam to get power for our people to use.

The difference is that what you were doing was for the benefit of the Power Trust and what we are doing is not only protecting the people from floods but it is benefiting the consumers of electricity throughout the country. [Applause.]

As I stated the other day, in 1932, the year that Hoover went out by unanimous consent [laughter], we used in this country 62,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which we paid $1,800,000,000. Last year we used 90,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, for which we paid $2,074,000,000. If we had paid the same rate last year that we paid in 1932, it would have cost the American people $537,000,000 a year more—enough to build three or four dams like the one proposed at Gilbertsville.

This reduction of more than $500,000,000 a year in electric-light and power rates has been brought about as a result of the T. V. A. and the example of its yardstick showing the American people what electricity is really worth.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I did not sign the conference report as far as it affects the Gilbertsville Dam, and I would like to have a few minutes to explain to the House my reason for disagreeing to that item.

First. I will willingly concede that, as far as the navigation of the Tennessee River is concerned, the Gilbertsville Dam, or some other dam, will be necessary. I will concede that it will eventually be built, and I am not speaking against the eventual building of the Gilbertsville Dam at this time.

When the Budget sent this bill to your committee there was included in the estimate an item of $750,000 to continue surveys for the Gilbertsville site and a site 6 miles below Gilbertsville. Dr. Morgan did not ask for anything more. Dr. Morgan was satisfied to receive $750,000 to continue his explorations, his soundings, his borings, and his engineering investigations for this site. We gave him $750,000. When the bill went to the Senate mandatory language was put into the bill to start the construction of Gilbertsville Dam.

This is what Dr. Morgan testified to before our committee. He was discussing the engineering investigations of this site:

Mr. WOODRUM. Will it be necessary to carry on your surveys through the fiscal year 1938?

Dr. MORGAN. Yes. We found a reasonably good site at Gilbertsville, but in order not to lose any possibilities we continued our explorations and we found another site a few miles from Gilbertsville which might save something in the cost of the dam. The estimates are on the Gilbertsville site.

That was the estimates to continue the survey.

Mr. TABER. And it will probably take you a year to work through the investigation?

Dr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. And maybe more, depending upon what you run into?

Dr. MORGAN. I think we will be ready in a year.

So he was perfectly satisfied with the $750,000 we gave him to continue his surveys. He asked for nothing more. The Budget submitted no other request to your committee, and yet when the bill went to the Senate this language was put into the bill to force, within the year, the starting of the Gilbertsville Dam.

I have stated that I am not opposed to the Gilbertsville Dam. I agree and concede that it eventually must be built, but I believe in all wisdom we should eliminate this compulsory start on the dam in this bill for the next fiscal year, and agree with Dr. Morgan that he should continue this survey for a year, for which we have already given him $750,000 to do so. For that reason only I am opposing this item.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does this item to which the gentleman has been referring have anything to do with a deficit?

Mr. BACON. It will eventually.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a deficiency bill we are dealing with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that language is left in the bill, will it be mandatory on the Commission to start the dam?

Mr. BACON. I think it will, and I think that was the purpose of the language of the Senate amendment. I believe we can well postpone the starting and agree with Dr. Morgan, and postpone this until the appropriation bill of next year.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] has said, it is recognized by everyone, I think, that the ultimate construction of a dam at Gilbertsville is a part of the orderly program of the Tennessee Valley Authority and a necessary part of the program. In the bill last year we carried money for the preliminary investigations and surveys. In the bill this year the Budget sent up language for continuing those surveys. There seems to be some question as to the exact location of part of the dam, but there is no question in the mind of anybody about the fact of the ultimate construction of the dam.

Dr. Morgan gave the answers that the gentleman from New York indicated, but he did say that, while they would not care for any money for construction, if they had authority to begin construction, while they were making these surveys there were certain highways and trails that could be provided and some preliminary work that were really a part of construction that could be done in this next fiscal year, and it would not entail any additional appropriation, but would carry them along that much further on the project when they finally came to it. The bill does not carry any money for the construction of Gilbertsville Dam. It merely gives them authority to use certain portions of money already appropriated for this work.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If you know that eventually this will be a part of the program and the man who is making the survey knows it, you know and I know that if you put it in this bill during this session there will be Members of Congress that will be after ten or fifteen or twenty or thirty million dollars to get it started. If you are going to try to balance the Budget in 1938, which you know cannot be done unless you start to curb expenses, then why do you put this in a deficiency bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. This does not call for any money and there will not be any money asked for on account of this in 1938.

Mr. RICH. For how long a period?

Mr. WOODRUM. In 1938.

Mr. RICH. During this session of Congress?

Mr. WOODRUM. During this session of Congress.

Mr. RICH. We will keep our eye on that.

Mr. WOODRUM. All right, I will, too.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman states that this dam is necessary for purposes of navigation on the Tennessee River?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BACON. I agree, of course, with what the gentleman has stated, but I do not want any disagreement on the facts of this case. The fact is that these surveys may develop possibly other sites. It will be recalled that the first plan was to build a dam at Aurora. This was abandoned. The second plan was to build a dam at Gilbertsville. This is in the process of being abandoned. The third site is 6 miles below Gilbertsville. It may be that in the course of these surveys some more advantageous sites may finally be selected, but this bill commits the Congress to Gilbertsville.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not so understand it. I understand that the Gilbertsville Dam will be built wherever they ultimately determine on its location.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The other two sites the gentleman referred to were Colter and Watts Bar. Gilbertsville belongs to part of the same scheme.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 91, noes 22.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 271, nays 63, not voting 98, as follows:

Mr. ROBERTSON changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 6: Page 4, line 3:
"Books for adult blind: For an additional sum required to enable the Librarian of Congress to carry out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide books for the adult blind', approved March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 135a), as amended, fiscal year 1938, $100,000: Provided, That a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur in the same with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 6, and concur in the same with an amendment: In line 6 of the matter inserted by such amendment, strike out the word "detailed."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a great many Members have asked me for some information about the procedure for the rest of the short time that I hope we will be here this afternoon, and if I may have their attention I can give them the information and save myself answering 434 more questions.

There are two or three amendments that have to be voted on in this bill. Only one is controversial, and that is the one dealing with reenlistment pay for the Army and Navy. It will probably take 10, 15, or 20 minutes. Following that is the amendment for the Social Security Board and making the appropriation for the general payment for old-age benefits. Now, if you gentlemen will stay here and keep a quorum, I think we can get through here in 20 minutes; but unless we keep a quorum there will probably be two or three more roll calls.

Mr. Speaker, this particular amendment deals with the amendment of the Senate inserting $100,000 for books for the blind. I do not know of any objection to it.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 10: Page 10, line 11: "Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Tennessee Valley Authority is hereby authorized to incur obligations and enter into contracts for the procurement of equipment to be installed in dams and power-houses in an amount not in excess of $4,000,000, and this action shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the United States for payment of the cost thereof."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, there is no controversy about this amendment, but it had to be brought back for a separate vote in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 10 and concur in the same, and on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 30: Page 14, line 11:
"For the payment of final judgment, including costs, rendered against the District of Columbia, together with the further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 percent per annum on such judgment, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment, payable from the special fund created by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', approved April 23, 1924 (43 Stat. 106), and accretions by repayment of assessments, as follows."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 46: Page 23:
"Construction and equipment, Point Barrow Hospital, Alaska: For the construction and equipment of a hospital at Point Barrow, Alaska, $100,000, to remain available until June 30, 1938: Provided, That any money received from insurance on the Point Barrow Hospital building destroyed by fire shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 62: Page 47, after line 15 insert:
"No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service' approved June 10, 1922 (U. S. C., title 37, secs. 13 and 16)."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this clear, so that everybody understands just exactly what this amendment is. The Pay Act of 1922 for the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Coast Guard provided that after a man had been in the service 3 years, was discharged at the end of his term of enlistment, and reenlisted within 30 days, he would receive what was known as an enlistment bonus or gratuity. The amount varied according to the pay scale. The first three or higher grades received up to $200 on each reenlistment. The lower four grades received up to $100, according to the length of time they had previously served.

The men considered since 1922 that was a part of their pay. In 1933 an amendment went into the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill taking away or suspending this reenlistment bonus. That was a part of the economy move at the time. The provision was continued by inserting it in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill each year from 1933 until this year. It was in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill that was brought into the House for consideration this year. I raised a point of order against the provision on the ground it was legislation on an appropriation bill and that it did not come under the Holman rule. The Chairman of the Committee sustained the point of order.

The bill went to the Senate and the suspension was not placed in the bill. The second deficiency appropriation bill passed the House and went over to the Senate. This amendment was placed in there. It was clearly subject to a point of order in the Senate, but the point was not made against it.

It now comes back to the House for a separate vote as an amendment. If we vote for this amendment it means a further suspension of the reenlistment bonus to the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast and Geoedtic Survey, and Coast Guard. I think, since it was contained in the pay bill of 1922, the enlisted personnel is right and justified in considering that bonus as a part of its regular pay.

Mr. Speaker, that money is used for a variety of purposes. When a man enlists in any of these branches of the service it is up to the Government to provide him his clothing. When he reenlists they do not have to do that, but after serving 3 years the men have depleted their wardrobe to such an extent that they almost have to renew it. The reenlistment bonus most often is used for renewal of that wardrobe. If it is not used for that purpose, it is used to pay the expenses of a trip back home before going back into the service.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact if this amendment is adopted there may be saved, say, $5,000,000. On the other hand, that amount is saved by getting experienced men who have been in the Army, Marine Corps, and what not to come back into the service, and we do not have to train these men over again. We get a better class of men.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, prior to the depression it was difficult to get men in the service, so they had to offer them this bonus for the purpose of getting good men to stay in the service. Then came the depression and a lot of people wanted to get into the Navy. They had a waiting list and could be choosey about their selection. They could pick out their men and it was not necessary to offer them a bonus to get them into the service. The depression is not over, but it is becoming increasingly difficult as men find employment elsewhere to get them to come into the service or to stay in the service. I have received letters from men who are now in the service asking if we were going to pay this reenlistment allowance. They said, "If you do, I will reenlist." The wives stated, "If you do, I will let my husband reenlist. If you do not, I am going to see that he gets employment some place else."

If we do not get experienced men to stay in the Navy, we have to spend at least 3 years educating them up to a position of ability that the men who reenlisted would have at the end of their 3-year period.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the total amount involved?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no way of telling. That is the reason why it does not come under the Holman rule. In previous years the estimate was made that it was pretty close to $5,000,000 a year. That is as much as I know about it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California has stated the case correctly. I want to add my appeal to his that the House reject this Senate amendment. I make my appeal just as strong as I can on behalf of the enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Coast Guard. The gentleman from California has stated correctly that for years and years the enlisted men of the military services have regarded this reenlistment allowance as a definite part of their pay.

This has been paid to the enlisted men of the Navy for 82 years. That is, it has been in the laws governing the pay of the Navy for 82 years, although it was suspended during the economy program of 1933. In the Army it has persisted for more than a generation. I cannot give you the exact period during which the enlisted men of the Army have had this advantage.

In 1933, as a part of the economy program, Members will recall that the salaries of Congressmen were cut 10 percent for a time and that the President was authorized to reduce the pay of all civil servants of the Government up to a gross amount of 15 percent.

The officers of the Army and Navy also suffered reductions; in fact, the entire Federal service suffered a reduction. The enlisted men were cut 10 percent in their base pay. We even cut down the private of the Army from $21 a month to $17.80 a month.

In the period which has elapsed since 1933 every single pay reduction in the Government of the United States has been restored except this. Only these enlisted men have failed to receive that decent treatment from the Congress of the United States. They alone continue to suffer under the so-called and long-abandoned economy program. This reenlistment allowance means a tremendous lot to these men.

The Senate put the amendment in as legislation in a deficiency appropriation conference report. It is an amazing way to continue to legislate to withhold pay from these men, who are the poorest paid of any in the Government service, and I say this without fear of contradiction. The soldiers and sailors receive the lowest pay, proportionately, of those in any branch of the service. Here we stand, after having suspended this reenlistment allowance for 4 long years, and it is proposed we shall do it for a fifth year, when no one else is being treated in the same way.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Those who would be in favor of giving the reenlistment bonus back to these men would vote "no" on a motion to recede and concur?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They certainly would.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report to the President, has urged the restoration of this pay. I happen to know the War Department is exceedingly eager that these men receive good treatment, decent, generous treatment, in line with the treatment we have given everybody else in the matter of restoration. I hope the amendment will be rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC].

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I may be able to throw a little more light on this subject. It is true the total amount involved will probably be around $5,000,000—about $400,000 to the Coast Guard and $2,300,000 each to the Army and Navy. You may be laboring under the impression the Government is losing $5,000,000. Let me show you where that is wrong.

When you train a man at the naval training station, for instance, in just the first 3 months it costs the Government an average of $256.62 per man. If you keep on, the man who has experience, who has served a 4-year enlistment, or an 8-year or 12-year enlistment, does not have to be sent to the training station again, for you have an experienced man. This means permanency in the establishment, and I assure you such a man is a real asset to the Navy. This is true in all the other services. I wish I had time to read to you the record of the hearings, at which people from the War Department, from the Navy Department, and from the Coast Guard all begged during the last 4 years to please put this bonus back in the law. It is the basic law, as the preceding speakers have told you.

I believe this is an ill-concealed attempt to continue the evils of the Economy Act. I have no hesitancy in saying that it is pennywise and pound foolish to save $5,000,000 when the Government will get back a value of millions of dollars in its skilled men. The Navy, especially, today is not as it was in the olden days. We do not have deck swabbers now. We have radio men, engineers, internal-combustion experts, gunnery experts, and torpedo experts; and you cannot learn about a torpedo in 4 short years. This is the reason I believe we also would be foolish to continue to deprive these men and the Government of the service of skilled men.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. This pay will not be retroactive?

Mr. IZAC. No; it is not intended that it shall be retroactive.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. Yes.

Mr. DORSEY. We appropriate millions of dollars for national defense, but we oftentimes overlook the most vital factor, the human element. The restoration of this pay will build up the morale of the enlisted men.

Mr. IZAC. I believe that is a point we should not overlook, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. As an educator, I do not know of another brand of education or training which is so effective and economical as the line of education the gentleman has just indicated, considering the cost. If the Government can get trained men on payment of this small bonus, such impresses me as real economy.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to clear up one or two points about this matter. In the first place, I wish to emphasize the fact that the language in the amendment only asks to continue this legislation for the fiscal year 1938. We justify that by the efforts that we hope we are making to balance the Budget, and I hope we are making a serious effort to balance the Budget.

We ask in this amendment that during the next fiscal year this reenlistment bonus be not allowed; and I may say, Mr. Speaker, this is not taking one solitary thing away from any enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps. He is getting exactly the pay that was promised him, and every member of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps who enlisted during the last 3 years enlisted with the knowledge there was no reenlistment bonus going to be paid him if he did reenlist.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much does this cost per year?

Mr. WOODRUM. Five million dollars.

Mr. SNELL. How do the reenlistments during the last 2 or 3 years, when we have not paid this bonus, compare with previous reenlistments?

Mr. WOODRUM. Seventy-three percent of the members of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who reenlisted during the last 3 years knew there was no reenlistment bonus offered anybody.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. But the gentleman should bear in mind that it is really a depression reenlistment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. SHORT. And with the return of recovery, and when money is spent by private industry to hire more people, the percentage of reenlistments will not be so high.

Mr. WOODRUM. I have no reason to think there will be any difference in the percentage in 1938 from what it was in 1937, when 82 percent of the Navy men reenlisted and were glad to reenlist in that year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Virginia has stated that these men, when they reenlisted during the last 3 years, or since this economy program started, knew there was no reenlistment allowance. What they knew was that temporarily the Congress had suspended it, and now it looks, after 5 years, as if their hopes are blasted.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I would say to the gentleman from New York that they know now what they knew when they reenlisted, that the time has not yet come when the Congress can offer a bonus to people working for the Government.

I want to say to the gentlemen who are representing labor, who are representing men who toil, and to you men who are interested in W. P. A. and all such matters, you are giving here $5,000,000 as an extra bonus to men who have jobs and who have had jobs with the Government all through the depression. This will require another appropriation of $5,000,000 in 1938 if you vote it now.

There is not a Member of this House who has a higher regard for the fine enlisted personnel in our various services than I have, but I say there is no justification for this Congress, when we are scraping the bottom of the flour barrel to feed hungry people, to vote now to reinstate a bonus, and that is what it is. It is not pay; it is a bonus given to men on the theory that they need some inducement to have them reenlist in the service of their country, when 73 percent of them are reenlisting without any such bonus.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I simply want to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia whether or not these reductions resulted from the administration of the Economy Act of 1933; and if they did, why it is the President, in his numerous regulations, restoring to veterans a dozen or more times benefits taken away under that act, has not taken care of this matter?

Mr. WOODRUM. These men are not veterans to begin with. They are employees of the Government.

Mr. MAY. I understand that.

Mr. WOODRUM. Their salaries were cut, just as our salaries were cut, and their salaries were restored, just as our own salaries were restored. This is a gratuity, a gratuity originally voted by the Congress as an inducement to get men in the Army and Navy to reenlist after their term of service was up, and nearly all the men who would now be benefited, when they enlisted in this service, knew there was no such gratuity to be offered them at the end of their term of enlistment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if the idea of this is a gratuity to get the men to reenlist, or is it due to the fact that, having had this experience, they are worth this much more to the Government?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; the idea was to get them to reenlist so that private industry would not take them out of the armed forces. This was the basis on which it was originally put.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was not that a part of a proper military policy?

Mr. WOODRUM. It was a part of a proper military policy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And it is not simply for the purpose of giving them a gratuity?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it would be highly proper, if and when we can afford to do it, to reinstate this, just as I hope some day to trade in my Ford car and get a better one, but I cannot do that now.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. One Member here this afternoon said that for 82 years up to the time of the Economy Act the men of the United States Navy did get this bonus, and that it was a permanent Government policy for 82 years.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, without this bonus what salary would these men receive?

Mr. WOODRUM. The regular salaries paid to the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy. This does not affect their salaries.

Mr. FLETCHER. They receive the same salary without the bonus?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course they do. This does not affect their salaries. When a man's time of service expires, the Government says, "If you reenlist, we will make you a certain allowance, based on the time you have served and the salary you have drawn." That does not affect the rate of pay while in the service.

Mr. MAHON. And this would be in no way retroactive?

Mr. WOODRUM. No way at all. It is merely for one fiscal year.

Mr. IZAC. Does not the gentleman believe it is a rather poor type of economy which we must practice if we have to start on men getting from $20 to $21 a month?

Mr. WOODRUM. If you were to take anything away from them, yes; but it is a rather poor time to start increasing your deficit by $5,000,000 in order to pay men already in the service, when 73 percent of them like it so well that they are ready to enlist when their term is out.

Mr. SCOTT. The provision for the reenlistment bonus was paid up to the time of the act of 1932.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. And is not a renewal of that provision, the reenlistment bonus as connected with the pay act, some indication of the fact that Congress at the time expected this to go as a part of their pay?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is not a part of their pay; it is an inducement to reenlist. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 134, noes 101.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, the independent offices appropriation bill conference report is on the Speaker's table. If conditions were different, if time permitted, I would take an hour to consider that conference report. The bill is hung up on this controversial feature. An amendment was adopted in the Senate to the Social Security Act changing the basic law of the social security set-up, requiring that all appointments of attorneys and experts and everyone drawing salaries of over $5,000 should be made by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The House then agreed to that with an amendment providing a form of civil service for all of them. The Senate would not agree to that, and there we are. We are at an impasse on that. If time permitted, I would like to have a sort of round table consideration and see what Members think of it, but it does not permit. This situation exists. The Social Security Board is out of money to pay their grants to the States for old-age benefits on June 1.

There is no controversy about that. Instead of going into a long discussion over the conference report, I am going to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which will make available $18,000,000 for the fund appropriated in the independent offices appropriation bill in order that the Social Security Board may meet their obligations to the States for old-age benefits, and ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a concurrent resolution which will deduct from the independent offices appropriation bill, which is now in conference, the $18,000,000 which we now make available.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 386, making an appropriation to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance for the fiscal year 1937.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 386

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,000,000, to continue available until June 30, 1938, to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance, including the same objects specified under this head in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I simply want to say that the proposal of the gentleman from Virginia is entirely satisfactory to this side, and I hope the House will concur in his suggestion.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will take the Treasury statement issued May 24 and show me in that statement where there is any money that is not appropriated. When you look at the statement issued by the Treasury Department and see that on this very day we have lost $11,616,657, and every day it is the same, I would like to ask you where are you going to get the money? [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I offer House Concurrent Resolution No. 14, affecting the enrollment of H. R. 4064, the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 14

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to change the amount of "$150,000,000", in the third paragraph, under the heading "Social Security Board", to the sum of "$132,000,000" and to charge the total accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to ask this question: Our State legislature recently passed a resolution urging the Congress to hurry and pass this legislation in order that we might send money to Texas to help meet the State funds for the May payments. I wish the gentleman would say whether or not the May payments have been made.

Mr. WOODRUM. I have been informed, Mr. Speaker, that all payments have been made up to the present time, but that they do not have the funds to make the June payment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the distinguished gentleman from Virginia inform us when we shall have an opportunity to amend the Social Security Act itself in order to provide payment to cripples as well as to those who are suffering from the infirmities of age?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman will have to ask the Ways and Means Committee about that, for that is a matter over which they have jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker pro tempore be authorized to sign the deficiency bill and these two resolutions notwithstanding the adjournment of the House, and that the Clerk may have authority to receive a message from the Senate if the House is not in session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STARNES and Mr. DORSEY asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

SUGAR LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last reference was made to pending sugar legislation, and the speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK], took occasion to make some uncalled-for remarks about Hawaii, as well as about the three executive departments that have sponsored what they consider a well-rounded and equitable program for control of the sugar industry.

I am not called upon to defend these great Federal departments; they need no championship by me. But if their three Secretaries, three of the trusted advisers of the President, all of whom have publicly gone on record as supporting the program offered by the Department of Agriculture, are in the category of—I quote the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]—"little $100- or $125-a-month clerks", that is indeed news to us all.

I have here the letter of Secretary Wallace addressed to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], in which he says—I quote:

> In response to your request of March 29 with respect to the form of H. R. 5326, I am pleased to submit for your consideration the enclosed draft of the bill, which includes those changes recommended by the Department of Agriculture.

I have here the "Statement of the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, before the House Committee on Agriculture Friday, April 30, 1937"; and finally here is the letter addressed by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, to the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. Surely none of these gentlemen merit the description of $100-a-month clerks.

But I am called upon to speak for Hawaii, since there is no one else under obligation to do so but me. I have been contending on the floor of this House and in the committee having jurisdiction of this legislation for a fundamental principle, which resolves itself into the answer to a simple question, Is Hawaii a part of the United States of America or not? If it is, then as a matter of fairness and justice it should be treated on a basis of perfect equality with every other part of this Nation.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] contends that as a Territory, as an "offshore area", Hawaii could be and should be treated differently from a State. I would be the last to question the power of Congress, since my very position here depends upon the sufferance of Congress, but I do ask, Would Congress have treated the former Territories, in national legislation, differently from their neighboring States, as a matter of equity if not of law?

Not being an attorney, as my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] is, I cannot argue the constitutionality of discriminatory legislation, and the decisions are not clear-cut enough for a layman to interpret definitely. Many decisions can be advanced in favor of the principle for which I am contending. Dictum of the Supreme Court in cases not parallel to the point raised by this issue has been loosely applied to this question. No one can say beforehand what the decision would be on a specific question before the Supreme Court.

But as an organized and incorporated Territory, as a people overwhelmingly American citizens by nativity, as a community that bears every burden of citizenship, I submit that whatever may be the limitations of Congress, there is no fairness in any legislation that grants any part of the Nation a privilege at the expense of and to the detriment of Hawaii and its people.

The only justification advanced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] for such discrimination is what purports to be quotations from a United States Department of Labor Report on Labor Conditions in the Territory of Hawaii 1929–30, that pretend to show how different we are from the States. The quotations are hardly pertinent to the subject under discussion, and much can be said as to labor conditions in general throughout the Union, especially in agricultural areas, which I shall not touch upon. These quotations are partly statements from another source entirely, which is not given by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK]; and partly isolated sentences, completely removed from the text that accompanies them. Used in this manner, they are misleading, untrue, and grossly misrepresent conditions in Hawaii. A categorical reply to these quotations shows my statement to be true.

The supposed quotations, with the facts pertaining thereto, are as follows:

Quotation: "Americans do not work on plantations in Hawaii."

Facts in regard to quotation: The alleged quotation does not appear anywhere in Bulletin No. 534.

Quotation: "There was only one American adult on the pay rolls of the island of Hawaii in 1929."

Facts in regard to quotation: Pages 32 and 33 of Bulletin No. 534 deal with certain statistics of unskilled employees, mostly field workers. The employees are classified for purposes of these statistics by racial origin, not by citizenship or nationality. The classification of "American" by race covers a narrow range of racial descent. There were, nevertheless, 87 so recorded among the unskilled laborers on sugar plantations, only one of whom happened to be on the island of Hawaii—See table 16, page 33, Bulletin No. 534.

The sentence quoted was taken from a paragraph which explained the method of determining the percentage of unskilled employees who qualified for the attendance or "turnout" bonus which is paid in addition to basic earnings. The sentence, taken with its context, reads as follows:

> It (table 16) also shows for each * * * race the percent which, by attendance at work * * * qualified for or earned the attendance bonus of 10 percent * * *. There was only one American adult male on the pay rolls of the plantations on the island of Hawaii in May 1929. He did not work on as many as 23 days in the month, and therefore the percentage of Americans qualifying for bonus was 0.0. Forty-six, or 86.8 percent of the Americans on Maui * * *, etc. (See p. 32, Bulletin No. 534.)

There were in 1929–30 more than 7,000 American citizens, over 400 of them Hawaiians, among the employees. There are at present over 15,000 citizens employees.

Quotation: "Eighty-eight percent of all the employees on the sugar plantations are Filipinos and Japanese." (Reference, p. 3.)

Facts in regard to quotation: The sentence as quoted is not in the Bulletin.

The figure of 88 percent is obtained from table 3, page 3, of Bulletin No. 534. This table classifies employees as of the year 1929 by racial descent and not by citizenship. Over 20,000 Filipinos have left the Territory of Hawaii to return to the Philippine Islands since 1930.

Quotation: "The source of supply has largely been from the Philippines, from which labor has been imported to work on the Hawaiian plantations under labor contracts." (Reference to p. 14.)

Facts in regard to quotation: This purported quotation does not appear on page 14 or elsewhere in bulletin no. 534.

The applicable portion of pages 14 and 15 read as follows:

The source of labor supply for the sugarcane industry of the Territory of Hawaii has shifted many times, being originally the Hawaiian Islands, and subsequently China, Japan, Portugal, Spain, Puerto Rico, and Korea. The present (as of 1929) tendency is to depend almost entirely upon the Philippine Islands as the source of labor supply.

Hawaii entered the Union in 1898 as an incorporated Territory subject to all the immigration, labor, and other laws of the United States.

No Chinese laborers have entered Hawaii since 1898. No Japanese laborers have entered since 1908, when the Roosevelt-Ishii "gentlemen's agreement" was signed.

From 1912 to 1931 a number of Filipinos came to Hawaii, just as they came to other parts of the United States. This movement practically stopped in 1932, and since 1934 it has been prohibited by the provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Philippine Independence Act.

The term "contract" is often applied to the piece-work method of payment for agricultural work where payment is at a rate per acre or per unit of work performed. This term is applied to such work in the beet fields of Michigan or the Western States, just as it is in the cane fields of Hawaii.

The sugar producers of Hawaii, through their agricultural cooperative, have also, at the request of the Philippine government, undertaken to pay for the return to the Philippine Islands of any Filipino who of his own free will elects to qualify therefor by working as an employee of any one or more of the sugar producers.

There is no contract or "bound" labor in Hawaii, and there could not be under the laws of the United States.

There is no foundation for the purported quotation.

Quotation: "The average wage is only $10.92 a week." (Reference, p. 11, Bulletin No. 534.)

Facts in regard to quotation: The average weekly wage of $10.92 a week, given in table 9, page 11, is for unskilled employees, mostly agricultural workers, and is explained in note no. 3, appended to table 9, as follows:

Not including perquisites (rental value of houses, value of fuel, water, medical and hospital service for sickness or accidental injury of any kind) furnished to employees by plantations without any charge to employees. The value was estimated at $28 a month (p. 11, Bulletin No. 534.)

Therefore, the real wage, including value of perquisites, was found to be over $75 a month for agricultural unskilled employees.

Quotation: "The only labor organization recognized is the barbers' union." (Reference to p. 14.)

Facts in regard to quotation: The sentence purported to be quoted does not appear on page 14, nor anywhere else in regard to sugar producers.

On page 117 the following, dealing with conditions in general, appears:

Labor organizations in the Hawaiian Islands are few in number, small in membership, and, with the exception of the barbers' union, have no agreements with the employers.

The trades or occupations that have organizations are machinists, molders, molders' helpers, and boilermakers in foundries and machine shops; hand compositors and linotype operators in book and job and newspaper printing and publishing; marine engineers in steam navigation; carpenters and joiners, plasterers and plumbers in building construction and repair * * * etc.

As a matter of fact, the full report, so unfairly misused, gave Hawaii a high rating in its labor conditions; and during the 7 to 8 years that have elapsed since it was made there have been further advances and improvements in the living conditions, hours, and wages of our working people.

The organic acts calls for a labor survey every 5 years, and I have tried and will continue to try to have the Department of Labor carry out the one that was due in 1935, so that Hawaii may present to this Congress the situation as it exists today and be given credit for the great progress that has taken place in the past few years.

In 1935 a subcommittee of the Committee on the Territories spent 16 days in making a thorough survey of Hawaii, visiting six of our eight islands for that purpose. I quote the following from the report of the subcommittee:

Your subcommittee found the Territory of Hawaii to be a modern unit of the American Commonwealth, with a political, social, and economic structure of the highest type. Its educational program is an advanced one, with a large portion of the tax dollar being spent for the training of its youth. Even during the period of the depression this program was neither relaxed nor reduced, and its school facilities compare favorably with those of the most advanced States. Hawaii's economic standards are high, with an industrial and agricultural development forming a sound base for the continued growth of the Territory.

First-hand information certainly should have preference over hearsay, and no doubt there are many other Members of this House whose knowledge of Hawaii gives the lie to the charges that such terrible conditions exist in Hawaii as has been represented.

I ask no man to support Hawaii's plea who is not convinced of its justice, or who feels that the interests of his district conflict with those of mine. If the membership of this House accords Hawaii the position to which it is entitled, I shall be most happy. If not, I shall feel that it has been my failure in presentation and not yours. Either I or my successor in office will continue the effort to secure equality the very next appropriate time.

We are a kindly people in Hawaii, who welcome the stranger to our land and live among ourselves in mutual tolerance and good will. We are a loyal people, complying with all the requirements of American democracy, and accepting the obligations of American institutions willingly. There is not, nor has there been since we came under the American flag, any other desire on the part of my people than to be good Americans. We have no nationalistic or independence group. Our politics and the whole tempo of our life is American. All these efforts to becloud the simple issue before this Congress are irrelevant propaganda of the worst sort. If there be some phase of our island life that is not up to standard, let that be corrected as a specific command from Congress. It is not necessary that our rights as American citizens be refused, our economic life destroyed, or our status as a part of this country denied. Nor is it necessary to call names. The retort in kind would be easy. But I have waged my fight for the right of Hawaii to be recognized as an integral part of this Nation without recourse to criticism of any other part of the United States and without injury to any other part of the country. If we are under the American flag—and I saw it hoisted over our islands nearly 40 years ago and have yet to see it hauled down—then treat us as Americans. If we are not Americans, then, indeed, we are a people without a country. It is for Congress to decide. I thank you.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman referred in his speech to "the gentleman from Michigan." To which gentleman from Michigan does he refer?

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HOOK.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not an actual fact that down through the years, with all the fight for protection of the domestic industry, that Hawaii has thrown its resources, financial and otherwise, side by side and shoulder to shoulder, as the lips are to the teeth, along with the domestic beet and cane sugar industry of the continental United States?

Mr. KING. Absolutely. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that when the Territory was taken over we were told that we would have to take the bitter with the sweet, and the people of Hawaii, largely of American descent, said they would come under the flag with that understanding. We are not asking for any favors or for any exemption. We are offering to go right down the line with American industry. They have done it, and they will continue to do it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not also reasonable to assume that such friends as Hawaii has in the Congress at any time, from the standpoint of military preparations and defense, would also stand with Hawaii with reference to cane sugar, and that, therefore, the continental industry, so-called, would have the support of those friends on any question that might come up in Congress?

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Is it not true that Hawaii was annexed to the United States at the request of the people of the island, and that those people are happy to be a part of the United States; that they consider themselves a part of the United States, and resent any inference that they are not a part of the United States, and only expect from the American people the same reciprocal feeling toward them?

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GAVAGAN, for 2 weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. MEAD, for balance of week, on account of illness.

To Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT (at the request of FRED M. VINSON), for 2 days, on account of important business.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 28, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who art the giver of all blessings to the souls of men, and throughout the ages hast hearkened unto the prayers of Thy children: Draw very near unto us in this moment of lowly supplication and grant us the benediction of Thy peace.

We have dwelt so long in the realm of external relationships and have gazed so fixedly on the pageantry of passing things that these have become our chief concern; but do Thou guide our minds when we think our thoughts are all our own, and hold us by the hand even when we choose to walk alone, that we may know that Thou hast a purpose in our lives and art leading us all the way.

The day is Thine, when shines the sun and all our path is fair; the night is Thine, when stars light up the vastness of Thy world; but we shall neither weary of the day nor fear what night may bring if our only hope, O Holy One, be in Thy willingness to dwell with us 'til we be fit to dwell with Thee.

We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BYRNES, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, May 26, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. LAWS OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILS IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate two letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, ordinances and resolutions adopted by the municipal councils of St. Croix, and of St. Thomas and St. John, in the Virgin Islands, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

CLAIMS OF JOHN T. BRICKWOOD ET AL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of Memorial No. 2 of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, praying for the enactment of necessary legislation to pay amounts awarded by the United States Court of Claims April 15, 1912, to John T. Brickwood et al., on account of the establishment of a 60-foot neutral strip along the boundary line between the United States and Mexico in the town of Nogales, Ariz., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

CLAIMS OF INDIVIDUAL INDIANS AT SIOUX AGENCIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L.

484), and for other purposes, relating to the claims of individual Indians enrolled at the various Sioux agencies for loss of personal property and failure to receive allotments of land, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the action of the House of Representatives on Senate amendment numbered 6 to the second deficiency bill has just come over from the House. The House has made one very slight amendment to the amendment of the Senate by striking out at one place the word "detailed." It is the only amendment remaining in disagreement.

I ask that the action of the House be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate action of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
May 27, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 10, 30, 46, and 62 to the bill (H. R. 6730) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 6 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In line 6 of the said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "detailed."

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 6.

The motion was agreed to.

TARIFF EXEMPTION FOR ARTICLES FOR GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duties for the purpose of exhibition at the Great Lakes Exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 332, which has just been laid before the Senate. Since the exposition opens tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, while the House joint resolution has just been messaged to the Senate, I am advised that the Senate Finance Committee, anticipating the action of the House, has acted favorably upon the joint resolution?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. And the Senator from Ohio now asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, House Joint Resolution 332 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the international exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, by Great Lakes Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings, or exhibits at the said exhibition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That Great Lakes Exposition shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by Great Lakes Exposition to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930.

PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 386) making an appropriation to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance for the fiscal year 1937, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the joint resolution has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and I am authorized by the committee to report it back favorably without amendment. It proposes to appropriate $18,000,000 to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to the States for old-age assistance for the fiscal year 1937. It is not a new appropriation; it does not appropriate any additional money at all; but it merely, together with another resolution, transfers from the independent offices appropriation bill $18,000,000 for the use of the Social Security Board for the purpose indicated. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do the funds proposed to be appropriated come from the pay-roll tax or from general taxation?

Mr. McKELLAR. The funds come from general taxation, as I understand, there being a general appropriation in the independent offices bill for the purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand that, but is there not an offset from the pay-roll taxes?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, there is not. The money proposed to be appropriated represents one of the grants to the States in aid of old-age pensions. The money does not come from the pay-roll tax. The situation is that in the independent offices appropriation bill the total amount is made immediately available. The Social Security Board was relying upon the passage of that bill before this time. The bill, however, is still in conference. The effect of the passage of the joint resolution will be simply to make $18,000,000 appropriated in the independent offices bill now available. It has to be made available in order to comply with the commitments of the Federal Government to the States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 386) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,000,000, to continue available until June 30, 1938, to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance, including the same objects specified under this head in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936.

CORRECTION OF ENROLLMENT OF INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION ACT, 1938

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 14) affecting the enrollment of H. R. 4064, the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations has already considered the concurrent resolution, and I am authorized by the committee to report it back favorably without amendment. It has to do with the same matter involved in the joint resolution which has just been passed. It simply takes the $18,000,000 from the $150,000,000 appropriated in the independent offices appropriation bill and reduces the amount appropriated in the independent offices bill to $132,000,000. So it is not a new appropriation at all, but simply allows the Social Security Board to use the money immediately. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to change the amount of "$150,000,000" in the third paragraph under the heading "Social Security Board" to the sum of "$132,000,000" and to change the total accordingly.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to submit a declaration of war to a referendum of the people

Whereas the enormous expenditures for army and navy purposes by the Governments of the United States and many of the European countries, point indisputably to the fact, that efforts to amicably adjust questions of international importance have been greatly hampered if not entirely frustrated by imperialistic ambitions of some of the countries, by the desire for commercial supremacy by others, and last but not least, by those who profit most, the manufacturers of munitions of war and war material; and

Whereas war and warfare since time immemorial have been primarily instituted by a comparatively few of the high and mighty in the political and financial structures of the countries of the world, for political aggrandizement and commercial advantages, and paid for with the lives, limbs and health of those in the trenches, and by untold misery and suffering by the great mass of lowly and ordinary people of all countries who were left behind; and

Whereas the great World War, into which the United States was precipitated against the better judgment of a vast majority of the American people, has unwittingly planted the seed, which may again involve this country in a serious conflict, in that all but one of the nations engaged in that catastrophe, have failed to meet their financial obligations with the United States, but are inclined to and may default entirely, unless severe pressure is brought to bear; and

Whereas, this presents another serious aspect of an already disastrous situation, in that the American people are confronted with the alternative of either engaging in another war to recover vast sums of moneys represented in interest and capital, or to permit cancellation of these war debts and shifting this burden onto those of our people unable to bear more; and

Whereas nationalization of the industries engaged in the manufacture and traffic of munitions of war and war material, advocated by many of the more humane-minded of the prominent men in public life, appears almost hopeless, in view of the influence and power of the war mongers and the militarists in the National Congress; and would not of necessity eliminate war or the danger of wars; and

Whereas it seems but fair, that those of the people of this United States who, in the last analysis are called upon to bear the financial burdens entailed by warfare generally, to endure the suffering and privation, sacrifice of health, wealth, life, and limb, should have the opportunity to determine the need or the desirability of future wars: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to refrain from declaring war, before and until the question has been submitted to and decided by a popular referendum of the people of the United States, except that such referendum shall not be necessary in the case of invasion by foreign warring nations; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both houses of Congress, and to the Wisconsin Members thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Education for the School District of Rockford, Ill., favoring an appropriation of $14,483,000 for vocational education, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Lawrence F. Flick Forum of the American Catholic Historical Society and the West Philadelphia Christian Front Forum, both of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of the so-called Gavagan antilynching bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Lackawanna Municipal Housing Authority, of Lackawanna, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of pending low-cost housing legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the American Physiological Society, of Chicago, Ill., favoring adequate annual appropriations for medical publications for the Army Medical Library, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Peoria County, Ill., and adjacent communities, protesting against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wellington, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented several memorials signed by 19 citizens of Jefferson, Tex., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE presented sundry letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials from the president of the Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution; the South Boston Women's Civic Club; the Margaret Brent Civic Guild, of Waltham; members of the State board of Massachusetts of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America; numerous councils of the Knights of Columbus; the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, and also various courts of that order; the National Circle Daughters of Isabella of Massachusetts; the Catholic Alumni Sodality of Boston; and the grand regent of Court St. Ann, No. 897, Catholic Daughters of America, of Dorchester, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the proposed entry of Basque children from Spain into the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY EXPOSITION

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 538, being Senate Joint Resolution 88, which relates to the San Francisco Bay Exposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution, which the clerk will read by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the United States Golden Gate International Exposition Commission, and to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of a world's fair and celebration in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939.

SEC. 2. There shall be a United States Commissioner for the Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and one Assistant Commissioner for said Golden Gate International Exposition, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner with the advice and approval of the Commission herein designated and shall receive compensation not to exceed $7,500 per annum. The salary and expenses of the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and such staff as the Commission may require shall be paid out of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution for such period prior to the opening of the Golden Gate International Exposition as the Commission may determine, for the duration of the Golden Gate International Exposition, and for not more than 6 months after the official closing thereof.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of the United States Commissioner and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable, in order that there may be exhibited at the Golden Gate International Exposition by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments, such articles and materials and documents and papers as may relate to the growth and development of civilization on the American continents from the first arrival of man to the present day, and such as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrating the historic growth and nature of American institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

SEC. 4. In carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized—

(a) To appoint, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants, and to engage by contract or otherwise such other services as may be necessary in connection with the performance of the functions of the Commission, including the preparation of exhibits plans.

(b) To erect such building or buildings or other structures, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof: Provided, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1494), shall be paid; to rent such space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem necessary; and to provide for the decoration and maintenance of buildings, structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission.

(c) To contract with the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., without advertising, for the designing and erection of such building or buildings, structure or structures, the rental of such space, and for such other services as the Commission shall deem advisable to be contracted for in that manner.

(d) To use funds appropriated under authority of the joint resolution to pay salaries of employees of other Government agencies detailed or loaned for duty with the Commission at rates not in excess of the rates received in the agency from which detailed or loaned; to purchase books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals, payment for which, and for telephone service, rents, and similar items, may be made in advance; to purchase, hire, maintain, repair, and operate passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner without regard to the statutory restrictions upon the price for new cars or the amounts which may be expended for maintenance, repair, and operation; to have printing and binding done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office in the discretion of the Commission; to entertain distinguished guests; to provide for reimbursement of expenses of travel by airplane when deemed necessary notwithstanding the cost may exceed the cost by rail; to provide for insurance on privately owned exhibits loaned to the Commission; to purchase ice and drinking water for use in buildings and offices; to purchase uniforms for guards and attendants; and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary to the fulfillment of the purposes of this joint resolution.

(e) To allot funds appropriated for the purposes of this resolution to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the head thereof, for direct expenditure in executing the duties or functions delegated by the Commission.

(f) To delegate any of its powers and authority, in its discretion, and any power or authority vested in the Commissioner by this resolution or delegated to him may be delegated or subdelegated by him to the Assistant Commissioner or to any other person or persons in the employ of the Commission or detailed to it.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with said Commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the Golden Gate International Exposition, with the knowledge and consent of said Commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits as said Commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such world's fair and celebration, to be placed with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of such Golden Gate International Exposition, to appoint without regard to civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such draftsmen and other assistants as may be necessary, to contract for labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary, and to designate officials or employees of their departments or independent offices and establishments to assist said Commissioner. At the close of the world's fair, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments and independent offices and establishments concerned, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions and fairs, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the appropriation authorized herein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the Commission and the departments or independent offices and establishments concerned, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

SEC. 6. The sum of $1,750,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of this joint resolution, and shall remain available until expended; except that, upon the termination of the Commission, any unexpended or unobligated balances shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. And, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to erect such building or buildings, or other structures, for its own use, and such other buildings and structures as will further the trade and good will between the United States and the other nations of the world, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof; to rent such space without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; to provide for the decorations of such buildings or structures, and for the proper maintenance of such buildings or structures, sites, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission: Provided, That the facilities of the Public Buildings Branch, Procurement Division, Treasury Department, shall be utilized in the preparation of plans, drawings, designs, specifications, and estimates, the execution of contracts, and the supervision of construction in connection with any buildings or structures erected for Federal exhibits, and for other purposes: Provided further, That funds designated for the foregoing construction purposes shall be available for transfer to and expenditure by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, to the extent and at such times as may be deemed necessary by the Director of Procurement to permit him to carry out the work herein designated. The Commission may contract with the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., sponsors of the Golden Gate International Exposition, for improvement or improvements, the rental of such space and for other services as shall be deemed necessary and proper. The appropriation authorized by this joint resolution shall be available for the operation of the building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, including light, heat, water, gas, maid, janitor, and other required services; for the rental of space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arrangement, repair, safekeeping, exhibition, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibits and in the exhibits of the Golden Gate International Exposition; for the purchase of uniforms, for the compensation of said Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, water, and automobile, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day: Provided, That no Government official or employee detailed for duty with the Commission shall receive a salary in excess of the rate which he has been receiving in the department or branch where regularly employed, plus such reasonable allowance to officers and enlisted men of the armed forces for additional uniforms and equipment required by participation in the Golden Gate International Exposition, including alteration, laundering, cleaning, and pressing thereof, as deemed proper by the Commissioner; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, uniforms, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscripts, newspapers, and all other appropriate publications, and ice and electric refrigeration and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes, may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished visitors; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commissions: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility, as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representatives may allot funds appropriated herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment, for the purpose of defraying any proper expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by said Commissioner or by such assistants as the Commission may designate, except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, and permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein: And provided further, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, as amended, shall be paid. Subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution. The Commissioner is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the world's fair and celebration or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property; and, under the direction of the Commission, dispose of any buildings or structures which may have been constructed and account therefor: Provided, That all disposition of materials, property, buildings, etc., shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Commission may, if it deems it desirable and in the public interest, transfer without consideration the title to the Federal Exhibits Building erected or constructed to the city of San Francisco.

The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission and in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall make provision for participation in the exposition by the Indian citizens of the United States. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to set aside from the appropriation herein authorized so much as may be necessary for the erection of buildings, the employment of supervisory and other personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for all other expenses incident thereto, including the classes authorized under section 4 of this joint resolution.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the world's fair, a detailed statement of all expenditures, and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference. Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I have two amendments to offer to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. What are the amendments?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. One proposes to omit the Secretary of State as member of the Commission, and then I desire to suggest an amendment, which, I understand, has been agreed upon, proposing an appropriation of $1,500,000 instead of the sum proposed by the joint resolution. If the amount I shall propose shall not be satisfactory, I am willing, of course, to have the proceedings take such course as may be desired.

I now move in the committee amendment on page 11, line 3, to strike out the words "the Secretary of State." The amendment is offered upon the expressed desire of the Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Now, I move to strike out the amount proposed to be appropriated in section 6, page 16, line 12, and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount provided by the joint resolution and what is the amount of the reduction under the amendment offered by the Senator from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The amount provided by the joint resolution is $1,750,000. Under my amendment the reduction would be $250,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CROP INSURANCE FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 108), submitted by Mr. PEPPER March 21, 1937, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, a plan and recommendations for the establishment of a system of crop insurance for fruits and vegetables, and to make such studies as may be necessary in connection therewith.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

FOREIGN TRADE WEEK—MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT AND ADDRESS BY SECRETARY HULL

[Mr. GEORGE (on behalf of Mr. KING) asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the message of the President on Maritime Day and Foreign Trade Week, and also a radio address delivered by Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, on the subject The Next Step for Trade and Peace, broadcast from Washington on May 22, 1937, which appear in the Appendix.]

FLOOD CONTROL—ADDRESS BY SENATOR CLARK

[Mr. HARRISON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered May 27, 1937, by Senator CLARK on the subject Flood Control, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST MONOPOLY—ADDRESS BY ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL JACKSON

[Mr. GEORGE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "The Struggle Against Monopoly", delivered by Hon. Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, at the annual meeting of the Georgia Bar Association, which appears in the Appendix.]

ENLARGEMENT OF SUPREME COURT—ADDRESS BY HON. HERMAN WRIGHT

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the proposed enlargement of the Supreme Court, delivered by Hon. Herman Wright before the American Legion post at Amarillo, Tex., on Mar. 16, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

DROUGHT CONDITIONS IN MONTANA

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Missionary Herald, written by Rev. Gale Anderson, describing drought conditions in Montana, which appears in the Appendix.]

AGRICULTURAL AND BUSINESS STABILITY—ADDRESS BY H. R. TOLLEY

[Mr. MCGILL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of Agricultural and Business Stability, delivered by H. R. Tolley, Administrator, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably absent from the Senate today. He stated to me that, in view of the fact that the calendar had been called last Monday, it was his thought, in line with the statement he made to the Senate last Wednesday, that further call of the calendar today should be dispensed with and that the Senate should adjourn until next Tuesday. It is my purpose to submit such a motion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator makes the motion I desire to make a few comments on a statement issued yesterday by the Secretary of the Interior. I do not care when I do it. If the calendar is not going to be called, I shall make my statement now.

Mr. BYRNES. It is not the purpose to call the calendar today.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the calendar?

Mr. BYRNES. Very well. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that while the Senate is in recess or adjournment following today's session the Vice President be authorized to sign bills or resolutions which may be duly enrolled and presented by the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

P. W. A. POWER LITIGATION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to read into the RECORD a very short statement which was issued by the Secretary of the Interior to the press, and which, so far as I can understand, received very little attention:

Asked today—

That was yesterday—

Asked today what is the status of the P. W. A. municipal power-loan litigation, Public Works Administrator Ickes replied:

"That is a difficult question, and the Supreme Court may give you the answer next Tuesday.

"For 3 long years the utilities have held up these loans. They have lost 13 times in five different circuit courts of appeals, with jurisdiction in 22 States. And still the utilities continue their fight to keep the hands of the P. W. A. tied by injunctions for which not a circuit court of appeals in the land has found a legal basis."

Let me emphasize that statement. For 3 years injunctions in the lower courts have held up the carrying out of the statutes of the United States by the P. W. A. in its loan and grant proceedings, though not a circuit court of appeals has sustained any of the injunctions issued by the lower courts.

The utilities have filed a petition for certiorari in the Supreme Court to hold up the decision in our favor by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the District involving allotments to cities in Iowa and Alabama. That brings the dispute back to the same status it had attained a year ago this month.

The Government is asking the Supreme Court to refuse to review the case on the ground that decisions from five different circuit courts of appeals is enough, particularly when the Social Security cases of Monday went much further than is needed to uphold the constitutionality of these power-plant loans.

Chief Justice Taft often said that justice delayed is justice denied; and whatever may be the abstract requirements of technical procedure, if there ever was a case illustrating Chief Justice Taft's dictum this is it.

Unless the Supreme Court both acts upon and rejects this new writ of certiorari prior to its summer recess, scheduled for June 2, the Government will remain restrained and be without determination of this question after several years of litigation, and its effort to secure final adjudication will be necessarily postponed until next winter.

A large number of cases—speaking from memory I believe it is 56—are held up awaiting the decision of the Supreme Court. They were held up first by the South Carolina case which was pending in the Supreme Court. The idea was to wait until that case was decided on its merits by the Supreme Court and that the other cases would follow that decision. However, the case was not decided on its merits by the Supreme Court and the question involved was not alluded to, but it was settled on a different point and went back for trial.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is aware that in cases involving the Interstate Commerce Commission the carriers cannot secure an injunction against the Commission unless they go before what is called a three-judge court, comprised of two district judges and one circuit judge. Does not the Senator think if that statute were broadened so that no act of Congress could be enjoined except by a three-judge court, it would obviate some of the difficulties he has in mind?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, I think it would. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. As I have said repeatedly, in my opinion the greatest difficulty of all with our courts is the promiscuous way in which our lower courts, our district courts inferior to the circuit courts of appeal, issue temporary and permanent injunctions restraining the Government of the United States and the States from carrying out acts of Congress or of State legislatures. The fault is not with the circuit courts of appeal and not with the Supreme Court.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, nearly all such cases are based on the alleged unconstitutionality of the act involved, are they not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; every one of them. I have had prepared a brief history of the legislation which I shall submit in a few moments, but before doing so I desire to refer to the case to which the Secretary of the Interior referred, which was submitted to the Supreme Court on an application for writ of certiorari. It had been hoped the Supreme Court would act on it today, although no fault can be found with the Supreme Court if it does not act at all or if it allows the writ. I am not making any complaint about that.

The truth is that all these cases coming up from some 25 or 30 States, from various circuits of the United States, are involved in the one suit in which the power companies obtained an injunction. As the Secretary of the Interior said, for 3 years that case traveled its weary way through the courts and was held there awaiting action by the Supreme Court. When the Supreme Court did not act on the merits of the case, then the Secretary of the Interior gave orders to prosecute all the other cases. The case in the District of Columbia, involving a number of the suits, was pushed to trial in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, the court of general jurisdiction here, decided in favor of the P. W. A. The case was taken to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. That court by unanimous decision decided in favor of the P. W. A. In order to enable the power companies to get the case into the Supreme Court of the United States they had to get from that Court a writ of certiorari. They waited until the last day, or very nearly the last day, upon which, under the law, they could apply for a writ of certiorari, and then submitted their application to the Supreme Court.

Ordinarily I presume the P. W. A. would have applied for time in which to file a brief in opposition to the issuance of the writ of certiorari. The Government, however, was extremely anxious to have this matter determined and settled, in view of the fact that 50 or 60 other cases depended upon the decision of the South Carolina case; and meanwhile all the money was tied up, interfering with employment and the activities of the various municipalities and States and districts that are interested in the suit. So, as I understand, the Government attorneys prepared their brief in advance, so that after the power company's brief was served upon them under the rules the Government attorneys were ready the next day to file their brief, all because they desire to have the Supreme Court pass on the matter before it takes its summer recess. Even though the Government attorneys waived all the time to which they were entitled, and hurried as much as possible, with the other side using all the time they could, it was impossible to get the matter to the Supreme Court, as I understand, until last Saturday; and, of course, the Supreme Court has had but little time to consider it. I do not know whether or not the Court will pass on the matter today, but if not the case will necessarily go over until next October, and this weary waiting will continue until the case can be reached in the Supreme Court after the beginning of the October term.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I presume the case the Senator has in mind is the South Carolina case, known as the Buzzard Roost case.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Buzzard Roost case.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator will be interested to know that after the Supreme Court determined that it would not pass upon the constitutional issue presented, but did, by reason of some question of procedure involved in the case, send it back to the district judge, the district judge heard the case, and at the conclusion of the hearings 3 or 4 months ago announced that he would not render a decision until he heard some other case involving somewhat similar questions; and, as a result, the district judge has not yet rendered a decision in the case which was heard by him last February or March.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true, as I understand.

Mr. BYRNES. And the further result is that, of course, the case has not been brought to the Supreme Court, and cannot be heard until next fall.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for interrupting me.

Mr. President, I now desire to read a short statement which has been prepared for me. It gives a very much condensed record of the P. W. A. and its experiences with injunctions issued by lower courts on the constitutionality of the act that ought to have been passed on a long, long time ago; but the litigation is still pending, and millions of people—if we count the citizens of the various municipalities directly affected by it—are concerned in it, to their damage and to their injury:

The nearest to a final ruling P. W. A. reached was last year, when in May the Supreme Court allowed a writ of certiorari sought by the Duke Power Co. appealing from a P. W. A. circuit-court victory on the same question. Subsequently the Supreme Court sent the Duke case back to lower courts without expressing opinion on the merits, but declaring:

"Delusive interests of haste should not be permitted to obscure substantial requirements of orderly procedure. There is no exigency here * * *."

The Duke case was reheard for the third time in the district court last February, but still no decision has been rendered—

As the Senator from South Carolina has already pointed out—

Fifty-six injunctions still block the efforts of the Federal Government to provide employment through the construction of power facilities as useful public works. Out of the 76 injunctions that have been granted by the courts against P. W. A. power projects, 21 cases have been tried by the district courts. Sixteen have been won and five lost in the district courts. Thirteen have been decided by five different circuit courts of appeals, and no one of these has decided against the Federal Government's right to make the loans and grants, although one case was lost on State issues. Twenty of the original 76 injunctions have been settled out of court, leaving 56 still pending and awaiting some final action on the part of the Supreme Court.

Two of the injunctions allow the Federal Government to advance funds for certain aspects of the contemplated construction on the Central Nebraska Public Power and Irrigation District and the Lower Colorado River Authority, both of which projects have other aspects than power.

In each of those cases irrigation was a very material part of the object of the project.

The rest of the injunctions are all-embracing in their prohibitions.

Sixteen of the pending injunctions are against the applicants, and 40 are against the Administrator of Public Works. The 54 projects which are being held up as the result of these injunctions have allotments of more than $51,000,000. These allotments should provide, according to figures worked out by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor on the basis of six previously completed P. W. A. power projects, approximately 95,000,000 man-hours of employment, including employment on site and off site.

Box-score summary of P. W. A. power litigation

	District court		Court of appeals
	Won	Lost	Won	Lost
Cases in which P. W. A. was a party defendant	6	3	5	----
Cases in which P. W. A. was not a party defendant	10	2	7	1

Twenty-two States and the District of Columbia are included in the five circuits within the jurisdiction of the five courts of appeals which have given decisions upholding the right of the Public Works Administration to make loans and grants to municipalities for power purposes.

Mr. President, many of these grants were made 3 years ago. The employment of millions of men who would have been employed on the works proper, and in the factories in making the necessary materials that would go into the projects, has been prevented during the great depression, all waiting for action on these injunctions that have been issued by the district courts of the United States, when there has been in effect no prospect of the power companies winning the suits in the end.

I think this matter presents to the country a consideration that we cannot avoid—that some method must be devised by which these useless injunctions, and I think many of them malicious injunctions, have been sought, with the knowledge that the suits will be lost in the end. In many cases it is profitable for the power companies to get the injunctions even if they know they are going to lose in the end, because during all the litigation, which is dragged out for years, in most of the cases the companies themselves are supplying power to the municipalities and the projects where the injunction is secured; and the injunction permits them to continue to supply the electricity. Therefore, although the power companies lose the cases in the end, they make money even though they lose; and although the people may win in the end, they lose even though they win.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6730. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 332. Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at Great Lakes Exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 386. Joint resolution making an appropriation to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance for the fiscal year 1937.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred Executive H (75th Cong., 1st sess.), being the amendment of annex II (6) (a) of the International Load Line Convention, signed at London, July 5, 1930, reported it favorably and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 8) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of J. Cullen Ganey, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, vice Mr. Guy K. Bard, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first business in order on the Executive Calendar.

TREATY OF ESTABLISHMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND GREECE

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Executive C (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty of establishment between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Greece, signed at Athens on November 21, 1936.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, that is simply a favored-nation treaty, one of the customary treaties. That is about all there is to it. I ask that it be considered and ratified.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY OF ESTABLISHMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE KINGDOM OF GREECE

The United States of America and the Kingdom of Greece, being desirous of prescribing the conditions under which the nationals, corporations, and associations of each country may settle and carry on business in the territory of the other country have decided to conclude a treaty for that purpose and have appointed their plenipotentiaries;

The President of the United States of America, His Excellency Mr. Lincoln MacVeagh, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Athens;

His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, His Excellency Mr. Nicolas Mavroudis, Permanent Under Secretary of States for Foreign Affairs;

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following provisions:

ARTICLE I

The nationals, limited liability and other corporations and associations of the United States of America and Greece respectively, shall receive in the territories of the other country treatment with respect to entry, establishment, and residence which shall be, in all respects, no less favorable than the treatment which is or shall be accorded to nationals, corporations, or associations of the most favored third country.

Nothing in this Treaty shall be construed to affect existing statutes or regulations of either of the High Contracting Parties in relation to the immigration of aliens or the right of either Party to enact such statutes.

ARTICLE II

The present Treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Athens as soon as possible.

It shall take effect on the day of the exchange of ratifications and shall remain in force for three years. After this date it shall remain in force until the expiration of twelve months from the day on which notice of its termination shall have been given by either High Contracting Party to the other Party.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done in duplicate in the English and Greek languages, both authentic, at Athens this 21st day of November one thousand nine hundred and thirty-six.

LINCOLN MACVEAGH. [SEAL]
N. MAVROUDIS. [SEAL]

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive C, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, a treaty of establishment between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Greece, signed at Athens on November 21, 1936.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move the adoption of the resolution of ratification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

AMENDMENT TO INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR PROMOTING SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Executive I (75th Cong., 1st sess.), an amendment to the International Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, as recommended in a report of the Secretary of State and a memorandum of the British Board of Trade, concerning the unintentional omission from section (2) of regulation XIX of annex I of the regulations attached to the Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, signed at London on May 31, 1929.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has examined this amendment to the International Convention. It simply proposes a minor administrative change in the existing treaty, and in no way affects it materially. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the amendment to the International Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, which was read the second time, as follows:

Add after the end of the first paragraph of section (2) of regulation XIX of annex I of the Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, as a separate paragraph, the words:

"In all cases an additional independent power pump shall be fitted when the criterion numeral exceeds 30."

So that the said section (2) shall read as follows:

"(2) In addition to the ordinary bilge pump, worked by the main engines, or its equivalent engine-room pump, two independent power bilge pumps shall be provided, except that in ships less than 300 feet (91.5 meters) in length, having a criterion numeral less than 30, either two efficient hand pumps of the crank type fitted one forward and one aft, or a portable power pump, may be substituted for one of the additional independent power bilge pumps.

"In all cases an additional independent power pump shall be fitted when the criterion numeral exceeds 30.

"Sanitary, ballast, and general service pumps may be accepted as independent power bilge pumps if fitted with the necessary connections to the bilge pumping system."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the amendment to the International Convention will be reported to the Senate.

The amendment to the International Convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive I, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, an amendment to the International Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, as recommended in a report of the Secretary of State and a memorandum of the British Board of Trade, concerning the unintentional omission from section 2 of regulation XIX of annex I of the regulations attached to the Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, signed at London on May 31, 1929.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move the adoption of the resolution of ratification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators presenting concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the amendment to the treaty is ratified.

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Keegan, of Florida, to be a member of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Warden McK. Wilson, of Indiana, to be consul general.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ron Stevens, of Oklahoma, to be State administrator for Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate adjourn until Tuesday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 1, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 28, 1937

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

John J. Keegan to be a member of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

CONSUL GENERAL

Warden McK. Wilson to be a consul general of the United States of America.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Ron Stevens to be State Administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Oklahoma.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 28, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of wisdom and truth, be with us today. Thine arm make bare and Thy righteous will be done. These moments, thus set apart, may we retire into the hushed depths of our own beings. Lead us to ponder Thy teaching and weigh the magnitude of our obligations as public servants. He hath showed thee, O man, what is good and what doth the Lord require of thee but to deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with Thy God. With our faces turned toward the light, may we be transfigured by the power of our great mission, believing that nothing can sully the standards of our high calling. Heavenly Father, in all our tasks we pray for Thy guidance. Stimulate us with great care and patience. With these virtues our labors can hardly prove vain. Blessed Lord, keep us in the love fold of the Good Shepherd. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, for some reason unknown to me certain individuals were extremely busy last evening calling Members of the House over the telephone stating that they were representatives of the New York Times and wanting information as to how I had cast my vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] reducing the salary of Harry Hopkins, Administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

Had they taken the trouble to call me in the first instance and asked how I had voted, I would have told them immediately that I had voted against the amendment, as I am one Member of Congress who is always willing to let anyone know how I vote, whether it is a record vote or not.

Being personally acquainted with members of the Washington staff of the New York Times, I called the office and asked who it was that desired the information, but was informed that whoever had stated that they were members of the New York Times staff had done so without their permission.

As the Members who called me and advised me that they were asked the question stated that they were not asked how they voted, I could not understand why the information was desired. Probably it is because of my activity in trying to cooperate with the President in preventing the passage of bills containing new authorizations that will require large appropriations, or it might be that they could consider my vote upon the amendment as an indication of my views as to whether or not I was in favor of the reduction of salaries of Government officials and employees. Being chairman of the House Committee on Reorganization, I have been asked that question numerous times, but I have stated frankly that I was not in favor of a revision of salaries at this time, either increases or reductions.

If the amendment had provided for an increase in salary for Mr. Hopkins, I would have opposed it.

There are a lot of officials and employees in the Government service that are underpaid and there are likewise a lot of officials and employees in the Government service, in my opinion, that are overpaid, but whenever the Congress intends to increase salaries, so far as I am concerned personally, it will be those in the lower brackets who will receive first consideration from me.

I have received a large number of letters from persons throughout the country protesting the passage of any bills providing for the reorganization of the Government, many of them indicating that it would result in a reduction in salary. While the committee has been meeting in executive session and I have never made it a practice to discuss what happens behind closed doors, nevertheless I feel that I am justified in stating that that question has never been advanced at any time at any meeting that has been held, nor has the committee ever received any recommendation that calls in any way for a reduction in salary.

The meetings that have been held by the joint committee, with the exception of the meeting held Thursday, have been for the purpose of hearing the representatives of the President's committee as well as the representatives of the Brookings Institute, who explained their recommendation. Those hearings having been completed; in the interest of expediting legislation, it was decided that until further notice the House committee and the Senate committee would act individually. There has been absolutely no definite agreement of any kind as to the future policy of the House committee. Just as soon as Speaker BANKHEAD returns and Mr. WARREN, who has been acting in his place, is free, a meeting of the House committee will be held.

In closing, let me emphasize that our meetings with the Senate committee at all times, including the one held Thursday, were as peaceful as any legislative committee could hold. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point and include therein excerpts from resolutions and articles on aviation.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's request covers a broad territory when he asks permission to include articles without reservation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, may I say that the gentleman from Connecticut is the author of the bill which makes today National Aviation Day, and this is the purpose he has in mind in reference to the excerpts from resolutions. The gentleman from Connecticut introduced the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Is there some limit to the excerpts which the gentleman proposes to insert?

Mr. SHANLEY. I shall not use any excerpts from newspapers. Out of consideration for the time of the House, I am just asking for 30 seconds at this time, and I am sure I will use the same consideration, modesty, and restraint in regard to the extension of my remarks which prompted me to ask for this slight indulgence.

Mr. MAPES. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, Edmund Spenser once said:

> And later times things more unknown shall show.
> Why then should witless man so much misween,
> That nothing is, but that which he hath seen?
> What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
> What if in every other star unseen,
> Of other worlds he happily should hear?
> He wonder would much more; yet such to some appear.

Today we celebrate National Aviation Day. This House of Representatives and the Senate passed the resolution and the President of the United States issued the following proclamation:

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

By the President of the United States of America

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the people of the United States may justly claim to have taken a leading part in the development of the science of aeronautics and to enjoy today an outstanding position among the nations of the world in the use of air transport; and

Whereas Public Resolution No. 32, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, approved May 25, 1937, provides in part: "That the President of the United States is authorized to designate May 28, 1937, as National Aviation Day, and to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on that day, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate exercises to further and stimulate interest in aviation in the United States":

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, acting in accord with the purposes of the Congress to stimulate interest in aviation with a view to the further advancement of the science of aeronautics, do hereby call upon the people of the United States to observe May 28, 1937, as National Aviation Day with appropriate exercises, and do direct Government officials to display the flag on all Government buildings on that day.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 26th day of May, in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and thirty-seven, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-first.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:
[SEAL]

SUMNER WELLES,
Acting Secretary of State.

Stressing Spenser's magnificent feeling that all has not been discovered or learned may we not spend some time in speculating and reflecting upon the future of aviation?

Many and divers, indeed, are the groups that see in this celebration the projection of new, renewed, and sustained interests in aviation. Those whose prime concern is adequate national defense behold in this effort a chance to get before the American people the supreme importance of air possibilities. Their work is in many ways that of comparison and relatively a determination that the herculean endeavors of the men in the air will not be fossilized or embalmed in outmoded principles of war tactics and prejudices.

Another group deeply concerned with international culture, understanding, and all the avenues of good will are concerned to make sure that the quickened tempo of world-wide existence will profit from air innovations.

Other groups from industrial, commercial, or adventurous, or other understandable multilateral phases will help to render this day an adequate one in presenting to the American people this new arm of commercial and certainly military protection.

It is hoped that from this celebration of National Aviation Day, May 28, may come a quickening of realization and interest in the intrepidity of our flyers, the courage and initiative of our sustaining financial backers, and the heroic struggle that is being daily made for mastery of the trade routes in the air above. No more glamorous chapter is being written in courage, financial backing, patriotism, and often in blood than is being constantly pieced together in that battle for supremacy. On a world-wide scale our aviators are etching a mosaic masterpiece of valour and peaceful penetration.

What the Crusades in the Middle Ages did to stimulate a greater learning in geography and science and awaken Europe to a mental activity that foreshadowed the Renaissance, what they did to stimulate the Venetian Marco Polo, the maritime enterprise and adventure of Columbus, Vasco da Gama, and Magellan; what they did to stir the various growths, movements, commercial, social, political, intellectual, and geographical trends in European society, may well form the relative background for the future consequences of air adventure and enterprise.

Air lanes today present no piratical crafts scouring either to pillage and rob, as was done to the sea-surface merchants of the eleventh and twelfth centuries, nor does there seem to be any necessity for another Hanseatic League of the air to bolster trade.

In the terrors of the medieval imaginations which invested the unknown regions of the earth with diabolical creatures of darkness there were conjured up demons, dragons, and whirlpools in all those undiscovered portions of the earth's surface. Brave, indeed, therefore, were those who were inspired by Prince Henry, the navigator. Look at a fifteenth, sixteenth, or seventeenth century map and discover the trade routes of those days. Exploration, colonization policies of blood and iron, cruel rivalry all feature the struggles that followed the opening of the new Eldorado in the West. History was being made and trade moved in to reap its reward.

The same repetition occurs in the air with an increased tempo and more immediate results, for during the last 10 years in the air the history of 400 years on the seas has been again and again duplicated. Air distances, air achievements, air courage, have gone the gauntlet of conditions that once faced the Cabots and Drakes. Airplanes have annihilated distance. The choicest products of the animal and vegetable world of intellect and spirit are within reach of us all by plane. Air transportation offers unparalleled possibilities of freight carriage. Our mail history indicates another phase. Are we willing to appreciate this stirring drama of the air?

The newspaper of a future tomorrow morning printed on this side of the Atlantic may be read in the evening of that same future tomorrow on the other side of that vast oceanic stretch.

Another generation prior to ours saw a world war with vast cataclysmic upheavals, while a prior one to that began its imprint on time's history by withholding a smile at a contraption in the air. It had hardly accepted the achieved and accepted invention of automobiles before it stared in amazement toward the sky.

Even the generation of the World War did not see or could hope to predict the tremendous advance in air progress. One thing they did realize in the most vivid pictures of the day was the brilliant esprit de corps of aviators on both sides. Alfredian chivalry, Achillean courage, and amazing progress characterized the flying aces and their lesser-known brethren on both sides in that conflict.

The panorama of history unfolds before us the history of navies on the seas, the armies on the land, the merchant marine, the peaceful penetration of trades, all the plethora of international devices to promote friendship and trade and developments in man's progress throughout the ages.

But a force was at work without fanfare and without notice that would reshape the trade routes and the trade contents of the world. A new dynamo, as Henry Adams would say, entered the scene, or, we might say, glided into history. Twentieth century America struck out for the trade of the world with a weapon as powerful as the nineteenth century "iron horse." Morgan's house gave its blessing to an air armada across the Pacific that silently reached for new domains. An intrepid young man, Juan Terry Trippe, with the spirit of a conquistador, gathered around him the nucleus of a group which included the wealthiest young men about town in America—a Vanderbilt, a Whitney, and a Rockefeller.

Out of their brains and courage came Colonial Airways in 1926 connecting the "hub of the universe"—Boston—with the wheel of American finance—New York.

Then came Pan American development, blessed with Federal aid. A closed corporation saw Pan American moved Caribbean way, skirting the coasts of South American littorals and into the hinterlands. Today it has over 32,000 miles of air transportation, far in excess of all its competitors. It reached Alaskan shores, and even treated with China for concessions to operate over 3,000 miles in Chinese territory.

The wisest of all financial houses of age-old wealth were putting money and their youth into this new enterprise. It reached out across the north Pacific, and the titanic struggle of the generation finds this intrepid and kindred groups matching wits and money against the French, the British, Dutch, Soviets, Germans, and Japanese. Mighty air fleets equipped beyond man's imagination are pawns in an agonizing combat for world trade mastery. The most remarkable industrial and transportation development in history forms the background for these world-wide contests among the nationalistic armadas of the air.

Hitherto inaccessible mountaintops, miasmic swamps, jungle wilds never visited by man, all the outskirts of civilization form the background for the earth pattern which these modern-day clipper ships of the air see in their daily flights. Just recall that a decade is practically all that has elapsed since our first intercontinental attempt in the sky. Luxurious comforts, micromatic calculating instruments, measuring and calibrating to the *n*th degree of precision, characterize these fleets. Hovering above and permeating the policy, the objectives, and the morale is still the silent battle for world-wide monopoly.

America the laggard at first in South America is fast pulling up into first place. For formerly in speed, technical mastery, flight operation, and safety the outside world excelled us, but today we are sweeping forward with newer maps, better meteorological data, enlarged airports, and safety—in short, in everything but an American consciousness of the game that is going on, the plays, the players, and the prizes.

That is why in a humble way an American Aviation Day may help this last weakness. Already we are happy to say there has been a renewed interest in this portentous clash of winged air Mercuries. Perchance some writer will tell the story of these knights-errant of the air as they charted unknown courses, plotted newly discovered terrain, and by their deaths in a holocaust of a ribbed plane left to their successors new ideas and new conclusions.

Another gifted writer might take the progress and influence of man's intercourse with man, through war, conquest, nomad journeys, and inventions.

Writers might speculate on the importance of the first vehicle of animal-aid transportation, the introduction of the wheel, water progress, down through the vessels of steam, Diesel engines, and then the mechanical air giants. Man's devotion to a holy crusade once opened up the east to industry, relieved the excess of the feudal system, and taught the people of the Middle Ages that it was possible to live and prosper without dependence on feudal lords. Ships of the sea gave outlet, to the spirit of exploration, provided for religious escape, as the Puritans and Huguenots.

Adventure, the respect for courage, and native humor soon passed territorial lines, and man became more cosmopolitan. World-wide collective action became incipiently possible. What will be the effect of these Brobdingnagians of the air?

Today our effort to unify North and South America in the commonest bond of fellowship through unital action and trade adjustments are uppermost. Every phase of trade penetration, commercial circulation, neighborly agricultural intercourse, immigration, diplomatic negotiations in all its ramifications, and intellectual exchanges are wrapped up in part in the progress of aerial success.

Our diplomats, tuned to the advances of each country, know this, for witness the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace at Buenos Aires December 1–23 of last year. The conference said:

Whereas the reduction in the cost of rates, fares, and freight charges would considerably increase the use of airplanes, which is at present one of the most effective means of communication and interchange of ideas between, and recognizing that the development of air transport contributes to a better knowledge and understanding among the American peoples, and aids in the maintenance of a lasting peace:

The Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace recommends:

1. That the American Government study and, insofar as possible, apply measures tending to a reduction in the cost of air transport and the simplification of present administrative formalities.

2. That, to the same end and with the intention that this matter be considered in the Conference on Aviation to be held in Lima in 1937.

Prior to that, in Montevideo, there were strong, significant efforts, as characterized by the following excerpts:

LXXXVII. MONUMENT TO AMERICAN PIONEERS IN AVIATION

The Seventh International Conference of American States at Montevideo resolves, That there be erected, in the name of America, a monument of homage to the American initiators of world aviation, Santos Dumont, Brazilian, and Wilbur and Orville Wright, North Americans.

That at the base of the monument there be engraved the names of the aviators of each country whom the corresponding governments may consider worthy of this homage.

That the monument be erected on the Cordillera of the Andes, at the aviation field of La Paz, the highest city in America and in the world.

It adds further, under the heading of "Commercial Aviation":

COMMERCIAL AVIATION

Each nation of this hemisphere is, of course, vitally interested in every aspect of aviation. No single agency is more productive of the very results which this conference and its predecessors are seeking and succeeding conferences will seek. Air transport makes neighbors of peoples long isolated by the vast distances of space; it brings their thoughts and their products to the service of each other; it leads directly to closer cultural, economic, and social relations. It is a powerful agency for peace. The statesmen here assembled will recall how, at the height of the recent misunderstanding between Colombia and Peru, His Excellency Dr. Lopez, new president of the Colombian delegation to this conference, conceived the plan of casting normal diplomatic procedure to the winds and proceeding by first available plane to discuss with his friend and colleague of long standing, the President of Peru, the desirability of reaching a fair and satisfactory but peaceful agreement in the interests of both countries concerned, and of the nations of America indirectly involved. As is well known, this personal conference in an instant of crisis, made possible by air travel, was largely instrumental in the present satisfactory status of negotiations between these two countries * * *.

In starting the development of this air service which the peoples of America now enjoy, formidable obstacles of nature had to be overcome. The topography of our continents is an amazing mixture of lofty mountains, vast jungles, impenetrable swamps, ravines, glaciers, and other natural barriers tending to inhibit the free and natural exchange of goods and ideals between nations.

Aviation though but recent in its flowering is but the result of increments of knowledge piled high upon each other. Just as the scientific discoveries of Darwin owed much to prior scientists, so aeronautics, the roots of modern aeronautics might well begin with the established principles of Archimedes, the Greek mathematician, who lived several centuries before Christ. The mythological legend of Daedalus, the Hellenic sculptor, and his companion Icarus, whose ill-fated flight is known to all, but what is probably little known is that it was the former who fashioned the wings.

The hiatus of aerial progress to 1617 when Fasute Veranzio risked his life in jumping from a high tower in Venice with a primitive parachute of a framework covered with canvas seems to anticipate the death of the "bat man" in Paris but a fortnight ago. Fanciful, crude attempts on this fill the pages of history, but from them came the germ of reflection that air had a definite weight just as any liquid or solid, and that bodies lighter than air "would rise as would a chip of wood when released under the surface of the water." Eighteenth century experiments in Germany next developed the theories on the law of resistance. The way was being set for the first take-off.

Cavendish's discovery of hydrogen gas in 1776 proved that it was lighter than air. Then follow the Montgolfier brothers; Saint-Fond and Roberts brothers; De Rozier; Count Zambressi; the American, Dr. Jeffries; Charles Green; Henri Giffard; Professor Bergson; and all the linked progress in power and kite balloons, dirigibles, and the modern airplane.

The pedigree of any idea is apt to be irritating, so I therefore mention these great names of pioneers, but in my hasty dismissal of their doings I do not intend to minimize their outstanding contributions.

In the same way I pass over the studies of Wilbur and Orville Wright and their resultant glider which fitted with a light motor which they built, made those historic flights on December 17, 1903, for 12 to 59 seconds at Kitty Hawk, a place which is today so ably represented by our distinguished Speaker pro tempore, the Honorable LINDSAY WARREN, of North Carolina. That was, indeed, the birthplace of the airplane. The South American, Albert Santos-Dumont, made his flights in Brazil, flying 50 to 700 feet in a straight line. We next move on to Glenn H. Curtiss, who developed an effective type of plane—the Dawn of Reality.

It is an amazing and glamorous history which cannot be but touched in this rapid survey. From the first cross-channel flight of August 25, 1919, to the recent flight of Merrill and Lambie, there is bracketed aeons of time compressed into almost two decades. Gems of achievement are in the tiara of world air accomplishments—Lindbergh spanning the Atlantic, May 20, 1927, in a New York to Paris flight of 33½ hours; Chamberlin's flight to Germany 14 days later; the Schlee-Brock New York to Tokyo take-off in August of the same year; Amelia Earhart et al. across the Atlantic in 1928, all serve to show the increased tempo of daring successes.

Nineteen hundred and thirty-six closed in an epochal series of air deeds. September 29 F. R. D. Swain scaled heavenward to a new altitude record of 49,967 feet. October 6 the Swedish flyer Kurt Bjorkvall went from New York on a projected flight to Stockholm, but was forced down in Ireland to complete a "lone eagle" flight of 2,400 miles. Mrs. Beryl Markham, of England, on September 4 flew from Abingdon, England, on the western trip to land in New York, but only reached Nova Scotia. She had but 26 hours of gas in her plane—a daring undertaking. Richman and Merrill finished the first round-trip Atlantic flight. James Mollison was the first pilot to reach London nonstop from America, the first airman to fly the Atlantic three times and the third man to fly solo over the Atlantic and reach his predetermined landing place nonstop. The other two were Colonel Lindbergh and the late Wiley Post. Howard Hughes broke Colonel Turner's record flight for cross-country by doing the trip in 9 hours 26 minutes 10 seconds. Blind flying reached a new peak in the doings of Maj. Ira Baker's New York to Los Angeles jump. Two Russians—Sigismund Levanevsky and Victor Levchenko—flew 10,000 miles from Santa Monica, Calif., to Moscow, Russia.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, out of this pioneer effort to obtain national concentration and interest on the affairs of the air we hope we may see a fuller appreciation of the tremendous strides that are being made in scientific development in Europe, with their additional gains in mass production of military aircraft, their serious threat by research programs, and their official consciousness of the destiny of air mastery.

We ought to hope for increasing interest in our Army and Navy Air Corps, the developments in the Coast Guard, with a widening field of duties in weather warning aids, storm rescues, and mercy flights. We ought to understand what our Government is doing in departments where we might least suspect that aviation is a vital handmaid—Fisheries, Communications, Forest, Geological Survey, Standards, Public Health, and Tennessee Valley Authority.

So, too, our larger commercial expansion in larger transports, mail developments, G-men aids—all are worthy of our interest and study.

Today's issue of the New York Times, certainly a comprehensive country-wide collector of news, has aviation stories which include such widely different phases as a dispatch from Hanson V. Baldwin from London describing plane sales throughout Europe; the news of the second Soviet plane to reach the Pole; the shifting of the Hindenburg inquiry to New York City; a crash in Oslo, Norway; gifts to the Duke of Windsor by plane; a mercy flight of a surgeon to George F. Baker; another dispatch from Clarence K. Streit from Geneva on German bomber developments; weather data for planes; the usual stock quotations on air stock; Dr. Eckener's testimony on helium in Washington—all indicative of a single daily chart of air affairs.

This is the new frontier, inexhaustible in its infinity of space and possibilities, beckoning on the imagination of the entire world. Let us make the most of our chances.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Clerk of the House may be authorized to receive a message from the Senate, and the Speaker pro tempore may be authorized to sign the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at Great Lakes Exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, sometime ago a newspaper item appeared in a Honolulu paper which misquoted the RECORD of this Congress. Yesterday the Delegate from Hawaii saw fit to attack me on the floor of the House. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter which I have received from Honolulu, Hawaii.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and following the address of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has just been granted permission to address the House for 1 hour on Thursday next, I would like to ask the majority leader if he is prepared to say what the program for next week will be, after the disposition of the relief bill on Tuesday? As the gentleman will recall, Friday has been set aside for special memorial services for the late Speaker Byrns. This leaves only 2 days of the week remaining.

Mr. RAYBURN. We hope to take up the "hot oil" bill on Thursday. I understand there will be only 2 hours of general debate on this bill, and I think we can complete the consideration of the bill on that day. There are also conference reports on the appropriation bills for the independent offices and for the State and Justice Departments, the judiciary, and the Commerce and Labor Departments. These conference reports will probably not take much time. I understand there is complete agreement on the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriation bill, but there is not a complete agreement on the independent offices appropriation bill. If the business in order on Calendar Wednesday does not take a great length of time, one of these conference reports may come up.

There are also two noncontroverted bills from the Ways and Means Committee, as I understand it, one known as the marihuana bill, on which there is a unanimous report. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is very anxious to have these two bills brought up some time next week. If we can sandwich them in without inconveniencing the House, we would like to do so.

Mr. MAPES. Is the gentleman prepared to say whether the House will take up Calendar Wednesday business on Wednesday or dispense with it?

Mr. RAYBURN. There has been no decision as yet to do away with Calendar Wednesday business.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the majority leader concerning the procedure on Tuesday? Will it be the purpose to continue the consideration of the relief bill on Tuesday, or to take up the Private Calendar, which is scheduled under the rules?

Mr. RAYBURN. Frankly, as we have called the Private Calendar so many times there may be an effort made to do away with the call of the Private Calendar on Tuesday. However, this has not been determined. I have not discussed it with anyone as yet.

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say to the majority leader there are a number of bills on the calendar, the session is getting along, and I am sure a great many of the Members are interested in these particular bills.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to look at the calendar before I make an agreement with the gentleman, but we have usually been calling the Private Calendar in about 45 minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The number of bills on the calendar would indicate that we might call the calendar in that length of time, and if this can be done on Tuesday, I certainly would not object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions and a concurrent resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 332. Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at Great Lakes Exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 386. Joint resolution making an appropriation to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance for the fiscal year 1937; and

H. Con. Res. 14. Concurrent resolution affecting the enrollment of H. R. 4064, the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6 to the bill (H. R. 6730) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEA, Mr. MAVERICK, and Mr. DIRKSEN asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] a moment ago complained about a Honolulu newspaper misquoting a Member of Congress. Does not the gentleman realize that close association of editors from Honolulu with American editors would give them that liberty and privilege?

Mr. HOOK. Yes; and a close association with the Delegate from Hawaii, too.

Mr. SHANNON. That I know nothing about.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOOK, for 15 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FORD of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. WILCOX, indefinitely, on account of illness.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—FIVE-YEAR LEVEL-PREMIUM TERM POLICIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 5478, an act to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period.

The War Risk Insurance Act, which authorized the writing of life insurance by the Government for the members of the military and naval forces, stated that "not later than 5 years after the termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, the term insurance shall be converted", thus clearly manifesting the intent that term insurance was to be temporary in character and of limited duration. This pronouncement put all applicants on notice that within 5 years after the declared ending of the World War it was expected that, so far as Government life insurance was concerned, they were to have properly planned their permanent insurance program. By amendment to the law the 5-year period was extended for 1 year, so that on July 2, 1927, yearly renewable term insurance ceased except for a few types of cases.

The kind of insurance to which term insurance was to be converted was founded upon a mutual basis, the Government simply administering the system for the benefit of the policyholders. Premiums received on account of such insurance were for deposit in the Treasury in a trust account separated from and not commingled with the general funds of the United States.

When the last date fixed for converting term policies approached, it was argued that many veterans were not then able to do so, and the law was further amended authorizing for issuance a special 5-year term policy providing for automatic change to a converted form at the and of the 5-year period. Subsequently, in 1932, when many of these policies expired as term insurance, it was contended that the personal affairs of some veterans were still so unsettled as not to permit them to convert the term insurance they continued to carry, and again the law was amended granting another 5 years' grace. The bill before me would provide for a fourth postponement.

It is not believed that any further delay in the adoption of an insurance program is warranted or ultimately will prove profitable to the individuals concerned. The lower initial premium rates on term insurance policies are beguiling, and the holders thereof should realize that the time must ultimately come when such charges, which keep ever increasing, will become so great as to compel numbers of veterans to drop their insurance when it will probably be most needed.

Furthermore, enactment of this proposed legislation would constitute a breach of faith on the part of the Federal Government toward the large body of converted policyholders contributing to the Government life-insurance fund, and on two counts: (1) The small group of term insurance policyholders would continue to carry their life insurance at considerably lower premium rates than the great majority of converted policyholders are allowed; and (2) the reserves which have been built up almost entirely by the converted policyholders would continue to be drawn off to meet undue losses sustained in carrying the low-premium term policies.

It should be kept firmly in mind that the veterans of the World War expected that the Federal Government, in setting a limiting date for the conversion of term insurance into some permanent form of life insurance, would stand by its declaration. Consequently at the close of the 5-year period allowed to veterans within which to convert their term insurance, 423,557 had converted to some permanent form of insurance in a total sum of $1,773,075,664. In many cases, veterans made considerable sacrifices, either reducing the amount of insurance carried or paying the increased premiums required to maintain the original temporary war insurance on a permanent lifetime basis. When legislation was subsequently enacted and reenacted, permitting a relatively small preferred group who had not seen fit to make the same sacrifices as the converted policyholders have made, to extend their temporary insurance at the war-time low premium rates, an unwarranted disservice was rendered to the several hundred thousand who had placed their insurance on a permanent basis.

Of the present policyholders over 85 percent have converted their insurance to whole-life or endownment forms, while the reserve which the converted policyholders have been chiefly instrumental in creating is being used to supplement the inadequate premiums paid by term insurance policyholders in order to pay the extra losses on the policies of the latter group. It is pertinent here to observe that at level of the American Experience Table of Mortality according to which the premiums are computed, the most favorable year showing a loss ratio of 3.89 percent above that table, and in one year it went as high as 32.44 percent above the table. In other words, had the accounts of the term policyholders been kept separate from those of the converted policyholders their fund for the payment of losses would now be hopelessly insolvent. In contrast to the above loss experience on term policies, the highest loss ratio on converted no time has the loss ratio on term policies been down to the policies in any year was only 84.03 percent of the expected loss under the American Experience Table of Mortality, and in one year it got down to as low as 53.52 percent. In other words, the loss ratios on term policies range from 45 to over 100 percent higher than those on the converted forms.

There appears to be no justification whatever for continuing to burden the converted policyholders with the excess losses of the term-insurance policyholders who, under the present law, without physical examination are privileged to convert their policies to whole-life or endownment forms. It, therefore, should be obvious that the remaining less than 15 percent of the policyholders who continue to carry term insurance should now make provisions for the future by determining the amount which they can afford to pay as insurance premiums and plan accordingly.

For these reasons I am withholding my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 28, 1937.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message may lay on the table until the House convenes on Tuesday.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, my understanding was that no business would be transacted today.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, this business has already been transacted.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; I had in mind that the gentleman could ask for a vote today.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; but I prefer not to do that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; I think we agreed not to take up any business today, so it is not fair to the Members who will want to vote on this measure and who are not here to take up the bill today.

Mr. DOWELL. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Are we to have an opportunity to vote on this matter?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I see no escape from it. Any Member can force a vote. The members of the subcommittee held extensive hearings. The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has nothing new to offer on the subject. It was our deliberate judgment that this bill should pass. Now, it comes back with a veto, and the members of the subcommittee, and especially the chairman of the subcommittee, who is present, want the House to pass on it. So I am merely asking that it go over until Tuesday.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. I am very anxious for a vote on this bill, and I am very anxious to have the bill become law. Since the gentleman from Mississippi has made his statement, I am satisfied to have the bill go over until Tuesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the message and bill lie on the table until Tuesday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 6730. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 332. Joint resolution providing for the importation of articles free from tariff or customs duty for the purpose of exhibition at Great Lakes Exposition to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, beginning in May 1937, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 386. Joint resolution making an appropriation to enable the Social Security Board to make payments of grants to States for old-age assistance for the fiscal year 1937.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 1, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whom the pure in heart alone can ever see: Be near us in our need, that we may feel Thy love trembling toward us and the sweet music of Thy pity stirring our very souls.

Look Thou upon our troubled world; and, though our feet ofttimes have sought the easy paths where the gladness of the day of sin but ends in death, where the flowers of hope have faded and joy hath turned to dust, do Thou kindle again among the nations the lights that have flickered and failed; lift from us all the burdens too heavy to be borne, and fetch us anew into the way of love, wherefrom our feet too early and too long have wandered. We ask it in the name of Him of old, who, walking upon the troubled waters of human sin and sorrow, brought peace to anxious hearts, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 28, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

A draft of legislation providing for the sale of the two dormitory properties belonging to the Chickasaw Nation or Tribe of Indians, in the vicinity of the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to enact legislation to relieve California champagne makers from discriminatory regulations of the Federal Alcohol Administration

Whereas the Federal Alcohol Administration, under the requirement of regulations no. 4, relating to labeling and advertising of wine, has discriminated against California champagne, which derives its effervescense solely from the secondary fermentation of the wine within containers of greater than 1 gallon capacity; and

Whereas, by such regulations, California champagne, deriving its effervescense solely from the secondary fermentation of the wine in containers of greater than 1 gallon capacity, is denied interstate selling privileges; and

Whereas the California grape and wine industry is by said regulations denied the use of modern methods of making champagne; and

Whereas the State of California is denied by the Federal Alcohol Administration the right of continuing this important industry by this discrimination against the State of California: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the President and Congress of the United States are respectfully urged to enact legislation that would bring about a modification of regulations no. 4, Federal Alcohol Administration, so that California champagne, deriving its effervescence solely from the secondary fermentation of the wine within containers of greater than 1 gallon capacity will not be discriminated against in the territory of the United States outside of the State of California; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, and the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the Members from California of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting of representatives of numerous school boards and other local governing bodies, held at the State capitol, St. Paul, Minn., favoring continuance of the Public Works Administration for not less than 2 years from July 1, 1937, and the appropriation of necessary funds therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, favoring determination by the several States of the extent to which branch banking, if any, should be permitted in the various States, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the curators of the Georgia Historical Society, Savannah, Ga., favoring the enactment of pending legislation providing for the erection of a memorial to Gen. Zachary Taylor, twelfth President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Economy Commission of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 4006) for a survey and examination of Jobos Harbor, Guayama, P. R., which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution of the Silver Spring (Md.) Business Men's Association, protesting against the enactment of legislation providing daylight-saving time for the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a mass meeting held in the Church of the Brethren, Westminster, Md., sponsored in joint executive session by the Carroll and Frederick Counties W. I. L., protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCHWARTZ presented resolutions adopted by the Casper Trades Assembly and Local No. 230, International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers of America, both of Casper, Wyo., favoring the enactment of the so-called O'Mahoney bill, being the bill (S. 10) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce by prescribing the conditions under which corporations may engage or may be formed to engage in such commerce, to provide for and define additional powers and duties of the Federal Trade Commission, to assist the several States in improving labor conditions and enlarging purchasing power for goods sold in such commerce, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCHWARTZ also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate joint memorial memorializing Congress to waive the right to impose certain terms of the land grant whereby certain lands were granted to the Territory and State of Wyoming

Whereas that heretofore the Congress of the United States of America passed an act whereby the Territory of Wyoming was admitted into the Union of States, which act was approved on the 10th day of July 1890; and

Whereas by the terms of said act said lands were granted to said State for the establishment and maintenance of an insane asylum in Uinta County, for the establishment and maintenance of a penal reformatory or educational institute in Carbon County, and for a penitentiary then situated in Albany County, and for a fish hatchery then situated in Albany County, and for the deaf, dumb, and blind asylum then situated in Laramie County, and for a miners' hospital, for a poor farm then situated in Fremont County, and for public buildings at the capital of the State in addition to other lands already granted for such purposes, and for State, charitable, educational, penal, and reformatory institutions; and

Whereas that theretofore on the 18th of February 1881, an act was passed by the said Congress whereby certain lands were granted to the Territory of Wyoming for university purposes, which lands were by the terms of an act of admission, July 10, 1890, vested in the State of Wyoming, and, such lands within such grants as had not been selected by said Territory were also vested in said State; and

Whereas by the terms of each and all of said grants there was fixed a minimum limit of $10 per acre for which said lands might be sold by said State; and

Whereas now after the lapse of 40 years and after due effort has been made to sell such granted lands within and subject to the terms of the grant aforesaid, i. e., at the sum of $10 per acre, time and experience have disclosed that the unsold portions of such granted lands are not worth the sum of $10 per acre and cannot be sold for such sum; and

Whereas the minimum limit of $10 per acre as the least price for which such remaining portions of said lands can be sold has proved to be and is now proving to be a hindrance and an obstruction to the sale of said lands and is retarding the disposal thereof, and the development of the State of Wyoming incidental to such disposal: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-fourth Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States take such favorable, necessary, and prompt action as will result in the Government of the United States waiving its right to exact a compliance with the terms of such land grants which fixed the minimum limit of $10 per acre as the least price for which such granted lands may be sold, to the end that the people of the State of Wyoming may dispose of said lands under such laws and regulations as may be prescribed by the legislature of said State, and hereby be permitted to enjoy the benefits of the proceeds of the sale of the lands so as aforesaid granted.

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

Mr. WAGNER presented a letter from the secretary of the College of Bishops, Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, Ill., together with resolutions adopted by the College of Bishops and General Connectional Boards of that church, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 19, 1937.

The Honorable Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Honored Sir: Representing the College of Bishops and General Boards of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, I am herein presenting to you the enclosed resolutions and expressing to you the hearty appreciation of your valuable service to the loyal but too oft-forgotten minority group, the American Negro, in fostering the antilynching legislation with which your name is inseparably linked.

But surely this is not only a bill destined, when passed, to hearten the Negro group but will raise the ideals of all the American people.

We pray for divine aid to you and your allies in this great effort.

I have the honor to be, yours respectfully,

JAMES A. BRAY,
Secretary, College of Bishops,
Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

P. S.—You will grant a valuable favor by sending me a copy of the antilynching legislation as it will be presented to the Senate.—J. A. B.

ANTILYNCHING RESOLUTIONS

The College of Bishops and the General Connectional Boards representing one of the largest church organizations among Negroes (400,000 communicants), passed unanimously at their regular annual session, held in the Connectional Publishing House rooms May 4–7, the following resolutions, urging wholehearted support of the Federal antilynching bill passed by the House of Representatives and now before the Senate.

The resolutions said:

"We deplore and brand lynching as a disgrace to our professed Christian ideals, an insult to our courts, a violation of the principles of orderly government, a repudiation of our claims for democratic government, a brutal denial of the constitutional rights pledged every citizen of our great Republic.

"The lynching of human beings in America, with all its attendant brutalities and inhumanities as exhibited in so many instances has awakened the American conscience to the danger of corrupting the American mind to a criminal bent. The records show that by far the Negro people, though constituting but one-tenth of the population of our Nation, furnishes the greater number of lynched victims, which fact leads to the impression that lynching is based most largely on race prejudice, race hatred, with economic rivalry and political agitation as contributing causes.

"In view of the fact that lynching continues and the States in which most lynchings occur do nothing to stop it, compels the idea that the National Government must do something to abolish this crime.

"That the House of Representatives of the United States passed by an overwhelming majority vote the Gavagan Federal antilynching bill lends hope for suppression of this brutal practice.

"Realizing the fact that the final passing of such a bill now rests with the Senate, also that in our Senate such antilynching legislation has been twice defeated, mostly through tactics peculiar to the United States Senate, denominated the filibuster:

"Resolved, That we the College of Bishops and the General Connectional Boards of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, herein endorse the Gavagan Federal antilynching bill and express our unstinted approval of this legislation.

"Resolved further, That we urge the Senate of the United States that they will give wholehearted support in bringing this bill to a vote in the Senate, preventing the usual filibuster, and that they will see the bill through.

"Resolved, That we appeal to Senators, north and south, to make this demonstration of their concern in the constitutional rights of every American citizen, and that no stone be left unturned in passing a Federal antilynching bill before the present Congress adjourns.

"We shall with profound interest await the fate of such antilynching bill in the Senate, and shall note with deep concern the earnest efforts of our friends, the enemies of lynching.

"Resolved, That we appeal to the President, His Excellency Franklin Delano Roosevelt, that he will use his personal influence in furthering the passage of this Federal antilynching legislation.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President, as the President of the Senate, Congressman GAVAGAN, Senators WAGNER and VAN NUYS, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

The bishops are Bishop E. Cottrell, Holly Springs, Miss.; Bishop C. H. Phillips, Cleveland, Ohio; Bishop R. A. Carter, Chicago, Ill.; Bishop J. C. Martin, Memphis, Tenn.; Bishop J. A. Hamlett, Kansas City, Kans.; Bishop J. W. McKinney, Sherman, Tex.; Bishop H. P. Porter, Jackson, Tenn; Bishop J. A. Bray, Chicago, Ill.; Bishop J. H. Moore, Little Rock, Ark.

The General Connectional Boards represent constituencies throughout the length and breadth of the Nation.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER presented various letters and resolutions, and an editorial from the New York Sunday News, pertaining to slum-clearance and low-cost housing, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF NIAGARA FALLS, May 18, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the City Council of the City of Niagara Falls, N. Y., held May 17, 1937, the council adopted a resolution memorializing the United States Senate to enact at the earliest possible date the United States Housing Act of 1937, being Senate bill 4424, and memorializing the House of Representatives to enact the identical measure, being H. R. 5033, and agreeable to said resolution I am enclosing herewith a certified copy of the same.

Yours respectfully,

GEO. J. RICKERT,
City Clerk.

I hereby certify that the following resolution was adopted at a meeting of the council held May 17, 1937:

"Whereas many persons in this community are unable to provide themselves and their families with decent, safe, and sanitary housing facilities without some degree of aid from Government; and

"Whereas the continued maintenance of our slum areas is not only socially undesirable but constitutes a great economic drain on the community and should, therefore be no longer tolerated; and

"Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States the United States Housing Act of 1937, being S. 1685 and H. R. 5033, which, if enacted, will make possible the continuation of the low-cost housing activities of this and other communities, and embodies the major provisions of the Housing Act passed by the Senate last year: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact at the earliest possible date the United States Housing Act of 1937, being Senate bill 4424, and that the House of Representatives be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact the identical measure, being H. R. 5033; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to Senator HUGO BLACK, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, to Senators ROBERT F. WAGNER and ROYAL S. COPELAND, and to Representative WALTER G. ANDREWS."

Witness my hand and seal this 18th day of May 1937.

GEO. J. RICKERT,
City Clerk.

Resolution passed by the South Florida District Sunday School and Baptist Young People's Union Conference on the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, Mount Gilboa Church, Bartow, Fla.

Whereas it has been proven that bad housing is detrimental to the health of the people in a community and that slums constitute an economic waste; and

Whereas it is an acknowledged fact that good housing for persons of low income cannot be provided through the ordinary channels of private enterprise; and

Whereas city, State, and National Governments have accepted the principles and acknowledged the obligation of governmental responsibility for the housing of persons who cannot be reached through private enterprise; and

Whereas it is necessary for the Government to bear a certain portion of the burden of financing the clearance of slums and the construction of low-rent housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the South Florida District Sunday School and Baptist Young People's Union endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL, Congressman from Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

"A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes."

Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. C. O. ANDREWS and CLAUDE PEPPER, Senators from Florida, and the following Representatives: Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON, Hon. WILLARD CALDWELL, Hon. MARK WILCOX, Hon. LEX GREEN, and Hon. JOSEPH HENDRICKS, from Florida.

Resolution passed by the Union Foreign District Sunday School and Baptist Young People's Union Convention on the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, assembled in Clearwater, May 21, 1937

Whereas it has been proven that bad housing is detrimental to the health of the people in a community and that slums constitute an economic waste; and

Whereas it is an acknowledged fact that good housing for persons of low income cannot be provided through the ordinary channels of private enterprise; and

Whereas city, State, and National governments have accepted the principles and acknowledged the obligation of governmental responsibility for the housing of persons who cannot be reached through private enterprise; and

Whereas it is necessary for the Government to bear a certain portion of the burden of financing the clearance of slums and the construction of low-rent housing: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Union Foreign Baptist Association endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL, Congressman from Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

"A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes."

Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. C. O. ANDREWS and CLAUDE PEPPER, Senators from Florida, and the following Representatives: Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON, Hon. WILLARD CALDWELL, Hon. MARK WILCOX, Hon. LEX GREEN, and Hon. JOSEPH HENDRICKS, from Florida.

CHICAGO HOUSING AUTHORITY,
Chicago, May 18, 1937.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing a copy of the resolution adopted at their last meeting by the Chicago Housing Authority, endorsing the United States housing bill of 1937.

Our own belief in the importance of this bill is strengthened by the increasing tide of public opinion in Chicago favoring a permanent national housing program on these lines. Recent developments have brought forcibly to our attention the necessity of securing passage of the bill in this session of Congress.

Be assured of our strong support and of our willingness to do everything in our power to aid you in securing its enactment.

Very truly yours,

JOHN R. FUGARD, Chairman.

Whereas Chicago, in common with all large American cities, has had a serious shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary housing for families of low income;

Whereas the resulting living conditions have been proven to be detrimental to health and to normal family life, as well as expensive to the taxpayers of the city;

Whereas this situation has become aggravated in recent months, causing extensive doubling up of families in living quarters in many parts of the city;

Whereas these substandard housing conditions are in residential areas in which the families cannot afford to pay enough for housing to induce private enterprise to provide decent facilities for their use;

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill (S. 1685; H. R. 5033), now pending before Congress would provide financial aid from the Federal Government to local housing authorities and limited-profit housing agencies; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall bill recognizes the principles of local responsibility in housing and the limitation of public, subsidized housing to families who cannot get decent housing quarters through the normal workings of private enterprise: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chicago Housing Authority hereby heartily endorse the Wagner-Steagall bill now pending in Congress and urge its passage as soon as possible in the present session of Congress; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, Senator WAGNER and Congressman STEAGALL, to Senator BLACK, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, to Senators LEWIS and DIETERICH, of Illinois, and to all Members of the House of Representatives from the Chicago metropolitan area.

ALUMINUM WORKERS UNION, No. 19256,
Massena, N. Y., May 25, 1937.

Senate bill 1685.

Mr. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senator, Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WAGNER:

Whereas we in Massena, N. Y., are urgently aware of the bad housing conditions here and elsewhere, of acute housing shortage now rapidly growing worse, of the inability of private enterprise or local initiative alone to remedy this situation, and of the suffering caused by chronic unemployment in the building trades; and

Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, if enacted, would provide the first concrete step toward solving this tremendous national problem: Be it therefore

Resolved, That Aluminum Workers Union, No. 19256, heartily endorses the Wagner-Steagall bill, and urges its immediate adoption by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby petition Congress, in view of the alarming need for new low-rent housing, that the financial provisions be doubled, while the administrative set-up remains intact; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President, to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and the House Committee on Banking and Currency, and to the Senators and Congressmen from this State.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK R. MEYERS, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM SUNDAY SCHOOL COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION,
Birmingham, Ala., May 24, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator from New York,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: As secretary of the Birmingham Pastors' Union, and as directed by that body, I am attaching hereto a copy of resolutions passed by them at their recent meeting.

Your careful consideration of their wishes will be very much appreciated.

Respectfully yours,

D. R. PRICE, Secretary.

Resolutions by the Pastors' Union of the City of Birmingham, Ala., adopted May 3, 1937, at the regular monthly meeting of that union.

Whereas a large part of our people live in dwellings and neighborhoods so inadequate and so deteriorated as to endanger their health, safety, and morals, and to interfere with their normal family life; and

Whereas the continuance of these conditions encourages the spread of disease, lowers the morale and vitality of the inhabitants, increases the hazards of fire and accidents, conduces to the spread of crime and radicalism, impairs productive efficiency, lowers the standard of living, and necessitates large expenditures of public funds; and

Whereas the continuance of these conditions is inimical to the general welfare of the Nation and calls for the employment of public funds and credit to alleviate and remedy the same; and

Whereas Senate bill 1685, now pending before the Committee on Education and Labor, and House bill 5033, now pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, would, if enacted into law, provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income who are unable to pay economic rent, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Pastors' Union of the City of Birmingham, Ala.:

First. That this Pastors' Union urge upon Congress the prompt enactment into law of the legislation aforesaid.

Second. That the secretary of this Pastors' Union be, and he is hereby, directed to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Representatives and Senators in the Congress and bespeak their support of these measures.

D. R. PRICE, Secretary.

THE METHODIST FEDERATION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE,
New York City, May 20, 1937.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: The New York east annual conference of Methodist ministers, a conference that has a membership of over 300 ministers, with churches located in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens, Long Island, Westchester County, and Connecticut, at its eighty-ninth session, held at the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., May 12–17, passed the following social-action resolutions by an overwhelming majority:

"4. THE WAGNER ACT

"Because all religious groups have repeatedly declared the right of labor to organize, and also the desirability of democracy in industry, we urge that workers and employers cooperate in the enforcement of the Wagner Act, especially that section which establishes the right of 51 percent or more of the workers to become the representatives of their fellow workers. Discharging of workers for voting their convictions or joining a union should be made a major crime in a democracy."

"2. HOUSING

"We join heartily with the New York Federation of Churches in endorsing Federal housing plans and urge that the providing of decent homes for the one-third of our population inadequately housed is both patriotic and Christian."

It is my understanding that our conference, in endorsing the Federal housing plan, was endorsing the bill that you now have before the United States Senate on the subject of housing.

At the Eighty-eighth Session of the New York East Annual Conference, held at the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Mount Vernon, N. Y., May 28–June 1, 1936, the ministers passed the following resolution:

"7. PUBLIC HOUSING

"Conservative economists are urging that a vast low-cost housing plan costing from five hundred million to one billion per year would provide homes for one-third of our people. It would employ millions now idle in the heavy industries and building trades. If we can spend over $1,000,000,000 annually for war, we cannot reasonably evade our responsibility to provide homes for our lower-income groups.

"Therefore we favor the creation of a permanent Federal public housing authority, which will have power to build decent living quarters for the low-income group in cooperation with local public agencies; and we request Congress and the President to enact legislation such as the Wagner housing bill (S. 4424) now before the Senate, which will establish a 'United States housing authority' for the execution of such low-rent housing and slum-clearance projects through the medium of loans and grants to public housing agencies."

I sincerely hope that our support of your housing bill will help enable you to secure its passage at the present session of Congress.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES C. WEBBER.

[From the New York Sunday News]

BRITAIN'S 1,200,000 NEW HOUSES

We've all been hearing for years about the successes of Britain's slum clearance and low-rent housing programs that got going after the war, and scattered figures on these achievements have been published here and there. It remained for Langdon W. Post's New York City Housing Authority to write to Herbert Morrison, chairman of the London County Council, ask and get the essential facts from Morrison, and publish them in a valuable booklet just issued. It is called A Housing Tale of Two Cities—London and New York, and copies can be obtained free of charge from New York City Housing Authority, 10 East Fortieth Street, New York City.

The story of what England has done about slum clearance and low-rent housing with its limited national wealth is enough to bring a pretty blush to American cheeks. With our enormous resources, we have done nothing to compare with the British achievements. Yet 40,000,000 out of the 130,000,000 of us live in slum or blighted areas; and the housing shortage resulting from the depression's paralyzing effect on building activity is now pushing up the rents of even our shoddiest, dirtiest, and worst-equipped dwellings.

Since 1919 the United Kingdom has built more than 1,200,000 low-rent dwellings of modern construction. Its current program specifies that 266,000 more slum houses are to be rubbed out and 285,000 new houses built to accommodate 1,240,000 persons.

Students of low-rent housing problems agree that Government subsidy is necessary. This fact frightens economy-minded people, which may account for some of our slowness in clearing slums. Here is a table furnished by Mr. Morrison, showing the city of London's experience in the matter of subsidy:

Dwellings built since 1919	60,000
Number of persons housed	250,000
Capital expenditure	$250,000,000
Deficit subsidy to date	$45,000,000

The taxpayers, in other words, had to absorb a loss of about 20 percent on these projects improving the health, hopes, and, presumably, morals of 250,000 underprivileged people.

The biggest low-rent housing and slum-clearance plan now before this country is the Wagner-Steagall bill in Congress for a billion dollar bond issue spread over 4 years, to complete from 250,000 to 300,000 dwelling units in that period.

COST TO TAXPAYER

Subsidy comes in here, too. The Government under this bill would get back its capital outlay, paid over 60 years from the rents to be charged. It would make up the difference between what is called the economic rental, meaning a rental that will yield a profit, and the rents the low-income group can actually pay.

It is estimated that the taxpayers' bill under this program would be about 40 percent, as against the London taxpayers' bill of 20 percent. But costs are notoriously higher in this country than in England; and it seems reasonable to hope that as we gained some experience in actual large-scale housing projects we could cut down the subsidy costs to the taxpayer.

In any event, the benefits to the Nation would be tremendous; and we have no alternative to Government-financed housing programs if we hope to clean up our slums and blighted areas at all. Private enterprise can't make quick enough or sure enough profits out of such projects; landlords, though many of them hate it, make money by keeping slum property slummy.

Of course, any project of this kind in a democratic country runs the risk of what the other Senator from New York, Dr. COPELAND, is now trying to do to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The H. O. L. C. has financed about 1,000,000 people in modernizing or building homes, at 5 percent, the Government guaranteeing both principal and interest on the H. O. L. C. bonds. Out of these one million-odd contracts, the Government has foreclosed on a few; may foreclose on about 160,000 eventually. Senator COPELAND is now organizing a lobby to press Congress for interest cuts and mortgage moratoriums, which would force the H. O. L. C. to do business at a loss—a loss the taxpayers would stand.

But these raids on the taxpayers are always being attempted, and sometimes succeed. We hope Congress will take a chance on that and pass the Wagner-Steagall bill. In addition to forcing large-scale low-rent housing projects into existence, it would force employment of much labor at wages prevailing in each community—the best kind of relief, we believe.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 369) to allow credit to homestead settlers and entrymen for certain military service, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 646) thereon.

Res. 154) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain securities and the income derived therefrom and on the compensation of officers and employees of the States and their political subdivisions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2419) for the relief of the Sheboygan Chair Co., heretofore introduced by me, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance. The question has been taken up with the Committee on Claims, and they feel that the bill properly should be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

On motion by Mr. BLACK, the Committee on Education and Labor was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 719) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours performed by engineers, firemen, laborers, and mechanics while employed in the care of public buildings of the United States outside the District of Columbia certified by the Court of Claims, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WHEELER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 35, after line 15, to insert the following new paragraph:

"For the rehabilitation and maintenance and operation of the irrigation system on the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, Mont., including the purchase of any necessary rights or property, $95,000, reimbursable."

On page 37, line 17, after the name "Flathead" and the comma, to strike out "$200,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$300,000."

On page 37, line 18, after the word "reimbursable" and the semicolon, to insert "Crow, $200,000, reimbursable."

On page 71, after line 20, to insert the following new paragraph:

"Marias River, Mont.: For a survey to determine the feasibility of an irrigation project on the Marias River, Mont., $50,000."

DIRECTOR AND ASSISTANT DIRECTOR, BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Mr. BYRD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 15), which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Executive Agencies of the Government (appointed under S. Res. 217, 74th Cong.):

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in order to improve the efficiency of the Bureau of the Budget, the President is requested to appoint a full-time Director and Assistant Director of such Bureau to carry out the powers and duties conferred and imposed upon it by law.

TEMPORARY CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 138), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Resolution 116, agreed to April 22, 1937, authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to employ an assistant clerk for 2 months to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $120 per month, hereby is continued in full force and effect for an additional period of 2 months.

PRINTING OF PRAYERS OF THE CHAPLAIN

Mr. ROBINSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 139), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That following the biennial adjournment of the present session of Congress the prayers offered by the Reverend ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, at the opening of the daily sessions of the Senate from the beginning of the first session of the Seventieth Congress to the end of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress be printed as a Senate document.

CROP INSURANCE FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 108), submitted by Mr. PEPPER March 21, 1937, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to transmit to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, a plan and recommendations for the establishment of a system of crop insurance for fruits and vegetables, and to make such studies as may be necessary in connection therewith.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the resolution be transferred to the list of resolutions on the table, so that it may not be necessary to call it every day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TERCENTENARY OF BIRTH OF PERE MARQUETTE

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, on May 28 of this year the President of the United States issued a proclamation requesting that this day, the 1st of June, be observed in honor of Father Marquette. I ask unanimous consent, as a part of my remarks, that the President's proclamation in full may appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERCENTENARY OF BIRTH OF PERE MARQUETTE

By the President of the United States of America

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas the premable to Public Resolution No. 33, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, approved May 27, 1937, requesting the President to proclaim the tercentenary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette, recites:

"Whereas the 1st day of June 1937 marks the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette, the first white man to explore the upper Mississippi Valley; and

"Whereas it is eminently fitting that the tercentenary of the birth of this zealous missionary and fearless explorer should be commemorated by suitable patriotic, religious, and public exercises during such year."

And whereas the text of the said public resolution provides: "That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on June 1, 1937, and inviting all people of the United States to observe the day and the anniversary year in schools, churches, and other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the tercentenary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette": Now, therefore,

I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby direct all Government officials to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on the 1st day of June 1937, and I invite all people of the United States to observe that day and anniversary year in schools, churches, and other suitable places with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the tercentenary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 27th day of May, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and thirty-seven, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-first.

[SEAL] FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

CORDELL HULL,

Secretary of State.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, in the northeastern part of France is located the city of Laon. It is the capital of the Department of Aisne. It is a very ancient town and has been prominent in history for many centuries. Christianity in this city goes back to the third century; and in the year 515 A. D. St. Remy, known as the Apostle to the Franks, constructed at Laon a very small and crude cathedral. From that time on down through the days of the World War, when Laon was occupied by enemy forces, this city has been the center of many historic occasions. But perhaps no event brought the name of Laon to this New World in the Western Hemisphere more than the fact that 300 years ago this date there was born in that city a boy who is honored today by localities and sections which were not on any map of the world at that time.

There has been some difference of opinion as to the date of Marquette's birth. However, later investigations show that June 1 is the correct date, so that today is the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Father Marquette.

I may say, parenthetically, that until recently there has been some confusion as to the date of Marquette's birth. In a number of early works and writings the date of June 10 was given. However, the most authentic work is by R. G. Thwaites, editor of Jesuit Relations and Allied Documents, who, on page 401, says:

> Until quite recently the accepted date of his birthday was June 10, but a closer inspection of the records in France shows that 1° (die) Junii was mistaken for 10 Junii.

In other words, the contraction "1°" would make the figure appear "10" instead of "1." I think, since Thwaites' investigation, there is little doubt that today is the three hundredth anniversary of Marquette's birth.

In the Middle Ages Laon was known chiefly as a center of learning. A fine Gothic cathedral was constructed early in the twelfth century. For hundreds of years the Laon school was one of the best known in Europe. So many students came to the school that it is said they often exceeded the population of the city itself.

The Marquettes were prominent and well-to-do people in Laon. Jacques Marquette, the youngest son of Nicholas Marquette, is more commonly known in this country as Father Marquette or Pere Marquette.

Marquette grew to manhood under circumstances and surroundings that might have brought him a career of no personal hardship or suffering.

The financial condition of the family was such that many avenues were open to him whereby he could have lived a life of ease and comfort. However, history records that Marquette had, at a very early age, a clear idea of his life's work. It is apparent that he must have read with absorbing interest the reports and accounts received from the missions in New France and America.

On October 6, 1654, Marquette, who was then 17 years of age, entered the Jesuit college in the neighboring city of Nancy. Young Marquette made rapid progress in his studies.

In February 1659 Marquette applied to General Oliva, the head of the order, to be permitted to enter the foreign mission service. This request was denied because he had not yet finished his course in philosophy and theology. It was just at this time that the Jesuit missions in New France were attracting much interest throughout Europe and especially in France. The names of the various Indian tribes, such as Huron, Iroquois, Ottawa, and Algonquin, became familiar, especially to churchmen. As one missionary after another was either destroyed by the Indians or perished because of the hardships of living in the great forests, new recruits came eagerly forward.

Marquette made a second appeal on March 19, 1665, in which he asked to be sent out upon missionary work. On December 8 the necessary permission was given. Marquette stated to his superior:

> I only ask that you give me your blessing so that I may show myself a true son of the society and bring no disgrace upon so good a mother.

Of course, in those days a journey from the shores of France to the St. Lawrence River was in itself a great undertaking, but apparently the voyage was made without undue incident, and Marquette reached Quebec on September 20, 1666.

The first problem, of course, was that missionaries had to learn the language of the Indians, not one language but those of the several tribes that would be encountered. It can be realized that the Indian languages, with their idioms and intricacies, were quite difficult to master. However, Marquette made very rapid progress in mastering the Indian tongues.

Apparently he had arrived in New France at a very auspicious time, as the Governor, Marquis de Tracy, had defeated the Iroquois Indians, and the territory of the Great Lakes was thus opened up. A part of the Huron Indians, which had gone west before the Iroquois, had now united with the Ottawas, and a settlement was formed on the south shore of Lake Superior, in what is now a part of the State of Wisconsin. In 1665 a mission had been started there by Father Allouez. Many of the several Indian tribes which had been driven out by the Iroquois sought contact with the white men at this place. While these settlements were known as Ottawa missions, they were not exclusively occupied by Indians of the Ottawa tribes but received the name from the Ottawa River, which had to be traversed in order to reach that area.

Miss Louise Phelps Kellogg, senior research associate of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, has made some interesting researches with reference to the life of Father Marquette, and considerable new information has recently been discovered by her in the Jesuit archives at Rome.

From all the information we have on hand, we know that Father Marquette recognized the great difficuty that was before him when he received the appointment to the Ottawa Mission. "This mission", wrote Marquette, "is very rough. They are 500 leagues from here. There are 56 portages to make before you reach them. For 3 or 4 months you have nothing to eat among them but bits of bark."

The choice of Marquette for this mission was very fortunate indeed. He was well acquainted with the Algonquin language; he was in excellent health, but, most of all, his personality and his gentle ways caused the barbarian Indians to have great confidence in him.

We thus see this young man, who could have had all the reasonable luxuries in life, setting out upon a most difficult and exhausting journey. He had to pack luggage, help make camp, and do all the other duties that the others were required to do on such a voyage. The trip took a period of 10 weeks. There was a shorter path over the Great Lakes, but, because of hostility of the Iroquois, Father Marquette and his party found it necessary to follow the routes of the rivers.

Marquette had been appointed to the mission at Sault Ste. Marie. It had been planned to have a central mission there, in order to keep open the route through Lake Superior and to be the mother house for other missions to be established to the south and west.

The Chippewa Indians received Marquette with a great deal of enthusiasm and were very eager for his instructions. His days were filled with teaching and explaining the Christian mysteries to the tribesmen. He became proficient in six Indian dialects, and this, of course, was a great advantage.

A number of traders and explorers, seeking furs and mines, visited this mission house. In Marquette's first year there one of the visitors was Louis Jolliet, who later became so closely associated with him.

Father Allouez, who was at the La Pointe Mission, had become discouraged because he had not been able to interest sufficiently the Indians in that locality. However, at about that time one division of the Kiskakons decided to embrace Christianity. Likewise, there was a group of Christian Hurons at La Pointe, and, because Marquette had such splendid knowledge of both the Huron and Ottawa languages, he volunteered to go to La Pointe.

Different tribes visited Marquette and especially a number from the south, known as the Illinois. One of these bands left with him a young slave with whom he studied the Illinois language during the long, cold days of 1669 to 1670. These tribesmen often had spoken of a great river in the country where they lived, and Marquette soon formed the resolve that he would like to explore it, and, if possible, establish a mission in their country.

It is very difficult for us to realize the hazy ideas of geography that prevailed when the missionaries were laboring in the wilderness of mid-America. "When the Illinois come to La Pointe, they cross a great river, which is nearly a league in width", Marquette wrote. He described the river as flowing from the north to the south, but said that the Illinois Indians had never heard anyone speak of its mouth. Marquette believed that it emptied into the "South Sea", as the Pacific at that time was known.

It is an interesting coincidence that the Sioux Indians, sometimes called "the Iroquois of the North", who lived along the banks of the Mississippi, should have been the cause of Marquette abandoning the region of Lake Superior. The Ottawa and Hurons, fearing reprisals by roving bands of Sioux Indians, decided to desert their villages, and Father Marquette accompanied the Hurons to the Mission of St. Ignace.

Marquette made one more visit to Sault Ste. Marie, and there took his final vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience on the 2d day of July 1671.

While Marquette was at St. Ignace his great opportunity came to find the river of which the Indians had so often spoken. Count de Frontenac, the new Governor for New France, had arrived. He decided to enlarge the Empire of France in the New World. He selected Louis Jolliet, who had already visited the upper country, to have charge of the undertaking. Jolliet went to the Ottawa country in 1672, so as to be ready to start the journey in the spring of 1673. Marquette was still the youngest missionary in the West, and his place could be easily filled. During the winter Jolliet and Marquette made the plans for their trip. On May 17, 1673, a little flotilla of two bark canoes containing seven men set out from Mackinac Island.

Marquette drew a chart showing the south shore of Lake Superior and the west shore of Lake Michigan. He indicated the degrees of latitude as far south as Florida.

Marquette wrote that the only provisions were Indian corn and some smoked meat, and that he and Jolliet were fully resolved to do and suffer everything for so glorious an undertaking.

The voyagers went down the shores of Lake Michigan until they reached Green Bay. They then went into what is known as the lower Fox River to the Mission of St. Francis Xavier at what is now DePere, Wis. Thus far other Frenchmen, missionaries, and traders had been before them. Those at this mission attempted to dissuade Marquette from going farther, and tales were told of savage warriors and horrible marine monsters who devoured men and canoes. "I thanked them for their good advise that they gave me," Marquette wrote, "but told them I could not follow it, because the salvation of souls was at stake, for which I wou'd be delighted to give my life."

They then ascended the Fox River, and portages were made at what is known now as Kaukauna and Appleton, Wis. As Marquette wrote—

> They were very difficult of passage on account of both currents and the sharp rocks, which cut the canoes and the feet of those who were obliged to carry them.

But the going was somewhat easier as they approached Lake Winnebago, and in that lake they apparently went along the west shore, and then left Winnebago at the point where the city of Oshkosh is now located. This is a point that I can see from the front porch of my summer cottage on that lake.

As they went up the Fox River they came to the Mascouten village, where Father Allouez had established the St. Jacques Mission and erected a large cross. No white man had ever ventured beyond this village. Marquette, it is said, drank from the spring near this cross, and this is known even to this day as "Marquette's well." This village is undoubtedly near the present site of the cities of Berlin and Princeton, Wis.

About 8 miles above this village lay the portage to the Wisconsin River. At this point, after their canoes had been set into the Wisconsin River, the guides left for home, as Father Marquette expressed it, "leaving us alone in this unknown country in the hands of Providence." Father Marquette refers to this river as the "Meskousing", which was the earliest Indian name for Wisconsin.

On June 17, just a month from the time they left the Straits of Mackinac, the two canoes shot out from the mouth of the Wisconsin into the Mississippi River. Marquette wrote:

> At 42½° of latitude we safely entered the Mississippi on the 17th of June with a joy that I cannot express.

The party floated down the Mississippi, seeing nothing but deer, turkeys, and various kinds of game. On June 25 they discovered an Indian village and the tribesmen proved to be Illinois. They welcomed Marquette with great enthusiasm. They again set down the river as far as 34° of latitude, and it was there that they learned there were white men on the river below. It was apparent to Marquette that these men must be Spaniards, with whom the French were then at war. It became clear also that the river emptied into the Gulf of Mexico, and so they turned northward again.

Instead of retracing their steps, Marquette and Jolliet ascended the Illinois River and portaged to the Chicago River. They were the first white men to stand on the site of the great city of Chicago.

In September, after skirting the shores of Lake Michigan and Green Bay, Marquette and his party reached the St. Xavier Mission. Jolliet returned to Canada to report his discoveries. Before he reached Montreal, Jolliet's canoe overturned and he lost all his papers and maps. Thus it was that Marquette's journal is the only record of the expedition; and while most of the credit of the journey is usually given to Marquette, he generously and unselfishly gave this credit to Jolliet.

As the result of this voyage of exploration, Marquette suffered an ailment that defied all efforts to cure. During the winter of 1673–74, and the following summer, he was incapacitated by illness. He was not able until the following November to leave in company with two Frenchmen to establish his promised mission among the Illinois Indians.

The voyagers went down Lake Michigan, and by the time they reached the river of the Illinois the winter season had set in. On the present site of the city of Chicago a cabin was constructed; and although Marquette's health was in a perilous condition, he continued his work as a missionary.

On March 29 of the following year they resumed their journey. Eleven days later they arrived at the Illinois village. When Marquette arrived at this village he was received with the greatest enthusiasm, but as the warm weather came his condition of health became more precarious. He apparently had lost hope for his recovery, but decided that he would attempt to reach his beloved St. Ignace. Marquette's strength failed rapidly, and on May 17 they put ashore at the mouth of a little river, in what is now Michigan, ever since called by his name. On Saturday, May 18, on the site of the present city of Ludington, the dauntless spirit of Father Marquette left his disease-racked body under circumstances precisely as he had always desired.

In the spring of 1676 the Indians who made their home at Mackinac, returning from the winter's hunting, found Marquette's grave. They uncovered his body and, after cleaning and drying the bones according to their custom, set out in 30 canoes for St. Ignace. The remains were placed in a small vault in the church at that place. Fire destroyed this church in 1700, and not until 1877 were the remains of the great missionary again uncovered.

Marquette died at the age of 38, after only 9 years of labor in his chosen field as a missionary among the Indians. His name is revered wherever dauntless courage and unwavering faith are honored.

Marquette University in Milwaukee, one of the very fine and outstanding schools in this Nation and where at least some of his bones repose today, was named in his honor. At Prairie du Chien, Wis., where Marquette first saw the Mississippi River, there is a statue of him. The Wisconsin State Legislature selected Marquette as one of the two men to be honored by a statue in the Hall of Fame in this Capitol.

Overlooking Pere Marquette Lake near Ludington, Mich., a granite rock commemorates Pere Marquette's death. A simple stone, surmounted by a cross, marks his final resting place at Pointe St. Ignace. In 1884 a statue of Father Marquette was placed in the facade of the city hall in Detroit. At Portage, Wis., a stone monument establishes the site where Marquette entered the Wisconsin River. In 1895 a statue was unveiled in the city square of Marquette, Mich., and in the same year a Marquette monument was erected in the State of Illinois at Summit.

Mackinac Island dedicated a statue in 1909 in the center of Marquette Park. It is a copy of the statue located in the corridors of this building. A granite marker is located in Dewey State Park, at the mouth of the Wisconsin River, and commemorates the greatest explorative feat of the missionary. The new bridge near the mouth of the Chicago River is known as the Jolliet and Marquette Bridge.

There are numerous other memorials in many cities, and other political divisions are named in honor of Father Marquette; but the greatest memorial is that important portion of this Nation which was opened, due to his courage and zeal.

No State in the Union, as now designated, was more thoroughly covered in the travels of the famous missionary than my State of Wisconsin. In addition to going through the very center of the State on his trip up the Fox and down the Wisconsin Rivers, on his second voyage he passed by the present location of such thriving, prosperous Wisconsin cities as Sturgeon Bay, Algoma, Kewaunee, Two Rivers, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, Port Washington, Milwaukee, Racine, and Kenosha.

Of course it might be stated that if Marquette had not undertaken this journey, eventually someone else would have done so; but the fact remains that it was Marquette and Jolliet who went into this unknown wilderness and made these great discoveries. When their reports went back to the Old World they created a sensation. It was Marquette's journal that first brought to the attention of the world the knowledge of the invigorating climate, the fertile soil, and the transportation possibilities in the Mississippi Valley and the Great Lakes Basin.

Wisconsin is indeed happy, on this three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Father Marquette, to pay tribute to this brave, courageous, God-fearing man.

CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

This morning the Senator put in the RECORD an editorial with reference to the action of the independents in Puerto Rico. I am informed that within the past few days every effort has been made by the authorities in Puerto Rico to prevent anything in the nature of public meetings, or expressions on the part of the people in public meetings of their views as to independence, or as to Territorial government or as to statehood. What does the Senator from Maryland know in regard to that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently well informed to give the Senator an accurate answer to his question. I think the Senator is referring to the disorders that broke out in the city of Ponce as the result of parading without a permit. Outside of that one occasion, I have no accurate knowledge of the situation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BORAH. I am advised that the Governor of Puerto Rico has adopted something in the nature of an iron rule with reference to public meetings or demonstrations of any nature or kind relating to political questions. I have not introduced a resolution in regard to the matter because it was my purpose to call the Senator's attention to it; but if the statements which have been made to me are true, it is a subject about which we ought to take some action.

Mr. TYDINGS. Insofar as I know, outside of the incident to which I have alluded, there has been no effort by the administration in Puerto Rico to prevent assemblages about political matters. There may have been such efforts, but I have no knowledge of them.

Mr. BORAH. When I refer to the administration, of course, I mean the local administration. I am told that the Governor dashes around through the towns and cities like a Roman consul surrounded by guards. If the Senator from Maryland does not have some better way to ascertain the facts, I shall be glad to secure them through investigation; but I should prefer to have them come, if it is practicable to do so, through a report by the Governor in the first instance.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator would like to have that information, and would like me to get it, I shall endeavor to get it both from the Governor and from other sources, so that, whether the accusation be well founded or not, the matter can be cleared up in the light of the facts so far as I am able to ascertain them. Of course, the Senator from Idaho can get the facts as easily as I; but if he would like to have me, as chairman of the committee, act in the matter, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator, as chairman of the committee, would be better able to ascertain the facts.

PREVENTION OF INCOME-TAX EVASION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

A condition has been developing during the past few months so serious to the Nation that the Congress and the people are entitled to information about it.

The Secretary of the Treasury has given me a report of a preliminary study of income-tax returns for the calendar year 1936. This report reveals efforts at avoidance and evasion of tax liability so widespread and so amazing, both in their boldness and their ingenuity, that further action without delay seems imperative.

We face a challenge to the power of the Government to collect uniformly, fairly, and without discrimination taxes based on statutes adopted by the Congress.

Mr. Justice Holmes said, "Taxes are what we pay for civilized society." Too many individuals, however, want the civilization at a discount.

Methods of escape or intended escape from tax liability are many. Some are instances of avoidance which appear to have the color of legality; others are on the border line of legality; others are plainly contrary even to the letter of the law.

All are alike in that they are definitely contrary to the spirit of the law. All are alike in that they represent a determined effort on the part of those who use them to dodge the payment of taxes which Congress based on ability to pay. All are alike in that failure to pay results in shifting the tax load to the shoulders of others less able to pay and in mulcting the Treasury of the Government's just due.

I commend to your attention the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 29, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: As you know, the Treasury was surprised and disturbed by the failure of the receipts from the income tax on March 15 to measure up to the Budget estimates. Therefore we undertook an immediate investigation. Only a preliminary report can be made at this time, because the complete investigation, covering all the income-tax returns filed, will require the balance of this year. Furthermore, since many of the returns of large manufacturing corporations have not yet been filed, the present report is confined almost wholly to data disclosed by the individual tax returns.

But even this preliminary report discloses conditions so serious that immediate action is called for. More than the usual examination and audit by the Treasury is needed. It seems clear that if tax evasion and tax avoidance can be promptly stopped through legislation and regulations resulting from a special investigation, a very large portion of the deficiency in revenues will be restored to the Treasury.

I herewith enumerate some of the principal devices now being employed by taxpayers with large incomes for the purpose of defeating the income taxes which would normally be payable by them. As we continue our preliminary examination other devices are being disclosed.

1. THE DEVICE OF EVADING TAXES BY SETTING UP FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING CORPORATIONS IN THE BAHAMAS, PANAMA, NEWFOUNDLAND, AND OTHER PLACES WHERE TAXES ARE LOW AND CORPORATION LAWS LAX

Americans have formed 64 such companies in the Bahamas alone in 1935 and 1936, and 22 more were organized by Americans in the Bahamas during the past 2 months. Panama and Newfoundland seem to be even more fertile territory since their corporation laws make it more difficult to ascertain who the actual stockholders are. Moreover, the stockholders have resorted to all manner of devices to prevent the acquisition of information regarding their companies. The companies are frequently organized through foreign lawyers, with dummy incorporators and dummy directors, so that the names of the real parties in interest do not appear.

One American citizen with a $3,000,000 Bahamas corporation has apparently attempted to prevent the Bureau of Internal Revenue from catching up with him by filing his individual tax returns in successive years from towns in New Brunswick, British Columbia, and Jamaica.

Another individual believes that he has been so successful in removing his assets from the United States to the Bahamas that he is defying the Treasury to collect a tax upon a $250,000 fee he has received; and by way of insult he has offered to compromise his admitted tax liability of $33,000 for past years by a payment of $1,700.

Still another individual showed a large net loss on his personal return for 1936. In considerable part the loss was due to the large deduction he claims for interest on a loan made to him by his personal holding company. But the man in question is no object of charity, for his personal holding company, organized in Canada, had an income of over $1,500,000 from American dividends in 1936, though it has not yet filed a return.

Perhaps the most flagrant case of this character is that of a retired American Army officer with a large income from valuable American securities which he desires to sell at a very large profit. To escape our income and inheritance tax laws he used the device of becoming a naturalized Canadian citizen, and 6 days later organized four Bahamas corporations to hold his securities. He and his lawyers apparently think that he can now sell his securities free from any taxes on his profits, since there are no income taxes in the Bahamas, and that he has adroitly escaped American taxes.

2. THE DEVICE OF FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES

Two New York insurance agents have caused the organization of insurance companies in the Bahamas with a view to enabling taxpayers to secure spurious deductions for interest through an ingenious scheme for the issuance of life-insurance policies. Americans who went into the scheme purported to pay a large single premium for their policies, but immediately borrowed back practically the entire sum. Under the plan the so-called policyholders sought to obtain a large deduction for interest on this loan, although the fact was that no interest was really paid. By this means five prominent Americans sought to evade nearly $550,000 in income taxes in the years 1932 to 1936. This fraud was discovered by the Treasury's investigators and all of the taxpayers have now submitted offers to pay the full amount of taxes evaded, plus interest. Until our investigation is completed we do not know how many similar companies may have been organized in other countries and utilized by our citizens, nor do we yet know whether this newly invented type of fraud has other ramifications.

3. THE DEVICE OF DOMESTIC PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

The rates of tax applicable to personal holding companies were reduced in 1936 at the time of the enactment of the undistributed profits tax. It was believed at that time that the combined rates of the two taxes would be sufficient to insure the distribution of the entire incomes of these companies, and the consequent imposition of surtaxes upon their owners. This expectation has not been realized.

Thus the single stockholder of one large personal holding company saved himself $322,000 by causing his company to distribute none of its income to him.

In another case a man and his wife saved $791,000 through the use of personal holding companies in 1936.

In a third case the personal holding company reported over $500,000 of net income, but the total taxes paid by the two stockholders, husband and wife, were less than $60,000, due principally to credits for payments on indebtedness the holding company prudently incurred in accumulating properties for its owners. If the personal holding company had not been in existence, the stockholders would have paid over $200,000 additional income taxes.

Another favorite device is to organize a considerable number of personal holding companies not only for the sake of reducing the tax but of increasing the Treasury's difficulties in auditing transactions between companies. At last accounts one man had caused to be set up some 96 companies scattered all over the country. Two other individuals were utilizing 23 personal holding companies.

4. THE DEVICE OF INCORPORATING YACHTS AND COUNTRY ESTATES

Many wealthy taxpayers today are dodging the express provisions of the law denying deductions for personal expenses by incorporating their yachts or their country estates, turning over to the yacht or to the estate securities yielding an income just sufficient to pay the entire expenses of operation. Hundreds of thousands of dollars in income taxes are annually avoided in this way.

Thus one man's yacht is owned by his personal holding company, along with $3,000,000 in securities. He rents the yacht from his company for a sum far less than the cost of upkeep, and the company uses its income from the securities to pay the wages of the captain and crew, the expenses of operating the yacht, and an annual depreciation allowance. None of these items would be deductible if this individual owned the yacht personally.

A great many wealthy taxpayers are utilizing a similar arrangement for the operation of their country places and town houses.

One man has placed his $5,000,000 city residence in such a corporation; another his racing stable, whose losses last year were nearly $200,000. The tax savings he thus sought to obtain through the use of the holding company were $140,000.

One wealthy woman has improved on the general plan of evasion by causing her personal holding company, which owns her country place, to employ her husband at a salary to manage it. She can thereby supply him with pocket money, and in effect claims a tax deduction for the expense of maintaining him.

5. THE DEVICE OF ARTIFICIAL DEDUCTIONS FOR INTEREST, LOSSES, ETC.

Taxpayers are seeking greatly to reduce their personal income taxes by claiming deductions for interest on loans to them by their personal holding companies, or on loans to them by their family trusts. These transactions normally have no business purpose, but are mainly an artificial means of shifting income from one member of the family subject to high surtax rates to another member of the family subject to lower rates.

Thus, one woman claims a large annual deduction for interest on a loan made to her by her husband as trustee of a trust which she created for their children. The mother thereby seeks to secure a deduction for her contribution to the children's support, and since the trust is revocable by her husband, the parents still have the desired control over the property and its income.

In the same category are losses deducted by taxpayers who claim that their racing stables or hobby farms were operated for profit, even though a profit is never realized. Thus a prominent manufacturer seeks a deduction of over $125,000 against his income from his business on account of his losses in operating a chicken farm.

6. THE DEVICE OF THE CREATION OF MULTIPLE TRUSTS FOR RELATIVES AND DEPENDENTS

Splitting income two ways, between husband and wife, reduces income taxes and leaves the family income intact. Splitting the family income many ways by means of many trusts, all for the same beneficiaries, may effect a much greater saving, while leaving the money actually in the same hands. For the creator of the trust often constitutes himself or his wife as trustee, and thus retains full control over the investment and disposition of the fund itself and of its income.

One thrifty taxpayer has formed 64 trusts for the benefit of four members of his immediate family and thereby claims to have saved them over $485,000 in 1 year in taxes.

Another thrifty pair have constituted 40 trusts for their relatives, and a prominent lawyer and his wife utilize 16 trusts for the same purpose. The first pair maintains numbered brokerage accounts, and only at the end of the year are the beneficial owners identified. In this way innumerable transactions are carried on, often between accounts, which do not actually affect the beneficial interests of their owners but which are designed solely to reduce tax liability.

7. THE DEVICE OF HUSBAND AND WIFE OR FATHER AND CHILDREN PARTNERSHIPS

The purpose of these partnerships, like the multiple trusts, is to split the family income artificially into two parts; or, if the children are taken in, into still smaller fractions.

There are many instances of this kind; but to illustrate the point, it is sufficient to cite the case of a New York brokerage firm which late in 1935 admitted into partnership the four minor children, two boys and two girls, of one of the partners. The tax saving he sought thereby in 1936 amounted to over $50,000.

8. THE DEVICE OF PENSION TRUSTS

For 10 years the revenue acts have sought to encourage pension trusts for aged employees by providing corporations with a special deduction on account of contributions thereto and exempting the trust itself from tax. Recently this exemption has been twisted into a means of tax avoidance by the creation of pension trusts which include as beneficiaries only small groups of officers and directors who are in the high-income brackets. In this fashion high-salaried officers seek to provide themselves with generous retiring allowances, while at the same time the corporation claims a deduction therefor, in the hope that the fund may accumulate income free from tax.

Thus in one case $43,000 is annually appropriated by the corporation to a pension trust for the benefit of its two chief owners. One of the co-owners will retire at the age of 65 with a monthly pension of $1,725, and the other will retire at 60 with a monthly pension of $1,425.

These types of tax avoidance are sufficient to show that there is a well-defined purpose and practice on the part of some taxpayers to defeat the intent of Congress to tax incomes in accordance with ability to pay. In some cases, the Bureau of Internal Revenue under existing law can establish a liability or indeed proceed on the ground of fraud; but many of these cases fall in the category of a legal though highly immoral avoidance of the intent of the law. It seems, therefore, that legislation should be passed at this session of the Congress in order to eliminate these loopholes which our preliminary investigation has proved; and that as a result of the further investigation this summer and autumn the next session of the Congress should finally close any further loopholes which may be discovered.

In addition to these cases of moral fraud, there are three other major instances in which the law itself permits individuals and corporations to avoid their equitable share of the tax burden.

I. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION

This is perhaps the most glaring loophole in our present revenue law. Since 1928 large oil and mining corporations have been entitled to deduct from 5 to 27½ percent of their gross income as an allowance for the depletion of their mines or wells, and the deduction may be taken even though the cost of the property has been completely recovered. Thus, in 1936, one mining company deducted nearly $3,000,000 under this provision, although it had already completely recovered the cost of its property. The amount of the deduction was a sheer gift from the United States to this taxpayer and its stockholders, and the revenue that we lost thereby was $818,000. Similar annual losses of revenue in the cases of a few other typical companies are $584,000, $557,000, $512,000, $272,000, $267,000, $202,000, and $152,000. The estimated annual loss of revenue due to this source alone is about $75,000,000. I recommended in 1933 that this provision be eliminated but nothing was done at that time; and it has since remained unchanged.

II. THE DIVISION OF INCOME BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE IN THE EIGHT COMMUNITY PROPERTY STATES

This is another major cause of revenue loss, which is unjustifiable because obtained at the expense of taxpayers in the 40 States which do not have community property laws. A New York resident with a salary of $100,000 pays about $32,525 Federal income tax; a Californian with the same salary may cause one-half to be reported by his wife and the Federal income taxes payable by the two will be only $18,626. The total loss of revenue due to this unjustifiable discrimination against the residents of 40 States runs into the millions.

III. TAXATION OF NONRESIDENT ALIENS

The 1936 act eliminated the requirement that a nonresident alien (without United States office or business) should file a return; fixed the withholding rate for individuals at 10 percent; and freed the nonresident alien from taxation on American capital gains. Since the total Federal tax upon a citizen or resident amounts to 10 percent of his total net income at about $25,000 (in the case of a married individual with no dependents), the withholding rate has proved in practice to be too low as applied to wealthy nonresident alien individuals. There are a number of cases of nonresident aliens with large incomes from American trusts or with large American investments whose taxes have been cut to one-third or one-fifth of what they paid under the prior act.

Thus, one American woman who married an Englishman had an income from this country in 1935 of nearly $300,000. Her tax for 1936 will, therefore, be approximately $30,000 as against over $160,000 under the prior law.

Another American woman who married a Frenchman has an income of over $150,000 from American trusts, on which she paid a tax of about $55,000 in 1935. Her tax is reduced to about $15,000 by the 1936 law. Although the tightening of the withholding provisions in 1936 will tend to insure more revenue from nonresident aliens in the lower income brackets, the present taxing provisions are not satisfactory as applied to nonresident aliens with income in the higher brackets.

The problem of tax avoidance is not new. The Congress devoted particular attention to it in 1933 and 1934, and by legislation effectively put a stop to many evasive devices discovered then as having been in use. The practices outlined above can and should be stopped in the same way.

In conclusion, I have two observations to make from the evidence before me. In the first place, the instances I have given above are disclosed by a quick check of comparatively few individual returns. As I have said before, most of the large corporation returns have not yet been filed. The general audit of 1936 returns is just beginning. Nevertheless it is likely that the cases I have digested above are symptomatic of a large number of others, which will be disclosed by the usual careful audit.

In the second place, the ordinary salaried man and the small merchant does not resort to these or similar devices. The great bulk of our 5,500,000 returns are honestly made. Legalized avoidance or evasion by the so-called leaders of the business community is not only demoralizing to the revenues; it is demoralizing to those who practice it as well. It throws an additional burden of taxation upon the other members of the community who are less able to bear it and who are already cheerfully bearing their fair share. The success of our revenue system depends equally upon fair administration by the Treasury and upon completely honest returns by the taxpayer.

The disclosures are so serious that I recommend that authority be given to the Treasury Department, with an adequate appropriation, in order that a complete and immediate investigation may be conducted. The cost of such an investigation will be returned many times over to the Treasury of the United States.

Faithfully,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

A feeling of indignation on reading this letter will, I am confident, be yours, as it was mine.

What the facts set forth mean to me is that we have reached another major difficulty in the maintenance of the normal processes of our Government. We are trying harder than ever before to relieve suffering and want, to protect the weak, to curb avarice, to prevent booms and depressions, and to balance the Budget. Taxation necessary to these ends is the foundation of sound governmental finance. When our legitimate revenues are attacked, the whole structure of our Government is attacked. "Clever little schemes" are not admirable when they undermine the foundations of society.

The three great branches of the Government have a joint concern in this situation. First, it is the duty of the Congress to remove new loopholes devised by attorneys for clients willing to take an unethical advantage of society and their own Government. Second, it is the duty of the executive branch of the Government to collect taxes, to investigate fully all questionable cases, to prosecute where wrong has been done, and to make recommendations for closing loopholes. Third, it is the duty of the courts to give full consideration to the intent of the Congress in passing tax laws and to give full consideration to all evidence which points to an objective of evasion on the part of the taxpayer.

Very definitely, the issue immediately before us is the single one relating to the evasion or unethical avoidance of existing laws. That should be kept clearly in mind by the Congress and the public. Already efforts to befog this issue appear. Already certain newspaper publishers are seeking to make it appear—first, that if an individual can devise unanticipated methods to avoid taxes which the Congress intended him to pay, he is doing nothing unpatriotic or unethical; and, second, that because certain individuals do not approve of high income tax brackets, or the undistributed earnings tax, or the capital gains tax, the first duty of the Congress should be the repeal or reduction of those taxes. In other words, not one but many red herrings are in preparation.

But it seems to me that the first duty of the Congress is to empower the Government to stop these evil practices, and that legislation to this end should not be confused with legislation to revise tax schedules. That is a wholly different subject.

In regard to that subject, I have already suggested to the Congress that at this session there should be no new taxes and no changes of rates. And I have indicated to the Congress that the Treasury will be prepared by next November to present to the appropriate committees information on the basis of which the Congress may, if it chooses, undertake revisions of the tax structure.

The long-term problem of tax policy is wholly separate from the immediate problem of glaring evasion and avoidance of existing law.

In this immediate problem the decency of American morals is involved.

The example of successful tax dodging by a minority of very rich individuals breeds efforts by other people to dodge other laws as well as tax laws.

It is also a matter of deep regret to know that lawyers of high standing at the bar not only have advised and are advising their clients to utilize tax avoidance devises, but are actively using these devises in their own personal affairs. We hear too often from lawyers, as well as from their clients, the sentiment, "It is all right to do it if you can get away with it."

I am confident that the Congress will wish to enact legislation at this session specifically and exclusively aimed at making the present tax structure evasion-proof.

I am confident also that the Congress will give to the Treasury all authority necessary to expand and complete the present preliminary investigation, including, of course, full authority to summon witnesses and compel their testimony. The ramifications and the geographical scope of a complete investigation make it necessary to utilize every power of government which can contribute to the end desired.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1937.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the message of the President explains itself. Of course, both the Senate and the House heretofore, upon the advice of experts, have made every effort to plug every loophole that might be found in the tax laws; but these revelations are so startling that I am sure the sentiment of the Congress will be to set in motion the machinery to obtain the necessary information as soon as possible, and, after it has been acquired, then to endeavor to provide some plan, working with experts, that will plug the loopholes that may be found.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the Senator says "experts", he means experts furnished by the Treasury Department, does he?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. We have, of course, acccepted opinions of experts outside the Treasury Department, but we have followed, for the most part, the experts of the Treasury Department and our own experts of the Joint Commite on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. What the Senator from Texas meant to indicate was that the Senate Finance Committee, in the enactment of the last tax act, cooperated with and undertook to follow the advice and suggestions of experts outside the Treasury with reference to filling up the loopholes so far as it could find loopholes at that time.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield there?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The message of the President and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury indicate that there are probably just as good experts outside the Treasury as there are inside.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the revelations of this message with reference to the creation of corporations by American citizens in foreign countries are, in my opinion, the most startling of any and show the extremes to which various wealthy people have gone in the creation of personal holding companies. So the whole situation ought to be investigated.

I now introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have read to the Senate, after which I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee).

(b) The joint committee shall be composed of six Members of the Senate who are members of the Committee on Finance, appointed by the President of the Senate, and six members of the House of Representatives who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the methods of evasion and avoidance of income, estate, and gift taxes, pointed out in the message of the President transmitted to Congress on June 1, 1937, and to report to the Senate and the House, at the earliest practicable date, and from time to time thereafter, but not later than January 5, 1938, its recommendations as to remedies for the evils disclosed by such investigation.

SEC. 3. (a) The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said joint committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House. The provisions of sections 101 and 102 of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena, or to testify when summoned, under authority of this joint resolution.

(b) (1) The Secretary of the Treasury and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the joint committee, shall furnish such committee with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return of income, estate, or gift tax.

(2) The joint committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee, or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all such returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.

(3) The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate, the House of Representatives, the Committee on Ways and Means, or the Committee on Finance, and shall have the right to make public, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, any such information or any such returns. The Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance may submit such information to the House or to the Senate, or to both the House and the Senate, as the case may be.

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government and of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

SEC. 5. The joint committee may authorize any one or more officers or employees of the Treasury Department to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings, and require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony as the committee may authorize. In any such case subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

SEC. 6. All authority conferred by this joint resolution shall expire on January 5, 1938.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the joint resolution. I may say that a similar joint resolution is being introduced today in the other House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the clerk read the message of the President I was impressed by the declaration that this authority was sought to be conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury and that that was the wish of the President. However, I am very happy that we are retaining some powers in our own hands, and I very much prefer the plan now proposed by the able Senator from Mississippi, in that he desires to have appointed a joint committee consisting of members of the Finance Committee of the Senate and of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives; so that Congress will have control of the investigation. In view of the declaration and attitude of the chairman of the committee, and of my opinion that the plan that he proposes, is very much wiser, more wholesome and more to the point than that of the President, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, at various times during almost 50 years there has been presented to this House and to the other House the proposal that corporations engaged in commerce among the States shall derive their powers from the Federal Government. In August, 1935, a bill was introduced having that purpose in view. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] many years ago introduced a similar bill. The Committee on the Judiciary has been holding hearings upon the bill which is now pending. I rise merely to recommend to every Member of the Senate, including the members of the Committee on Finance, that copies of those hearings be procured and read, because it will be discovered that in those hearings it has been pointed out that taxes have been evaded by the use of the corporate device.

I have no hesitation in saying—and I do not intend to take more of the time of the Senate—that the problems which beset the Government will not begin to be solved until we seriously contemplate the possibility of solving them by enacting a law that all corporations affecting national matters shall receive their authority from the National Government.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is very kind of the Senator from Texas. Only a few words will suffice for what I have to say at this time.

The message of the President, based on information supplied by the Treasury Department, reveals a shocking condition pertaining to evasions of the spirit of our income-tax laws. No doubt, as is stated in the message, there are numerous other instances that have not as yet come to light of the law either being violated or its spirit being evaded.

It is, of course, of primary importance that the laws shall be fairly and impartially observed and enforced. In order to do that it is necessary to have the investigating authority carried in the joint resolution introduced by the chairman of the Finance Committee. Under that resolution it is expected not only that facts will be assembled, but that the way to close the gaps which have been referred to in the President's message may be pointed out, to the end that legislation may be enacted as speedily as circumstances permit.

I think it appropriate to say in this connection that it will be necessary not only to carry on the investigation proposed by the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi, but that in due course a fund will be necessary for use by the Treasury Department in order that it may make its inquiries and assist in the very important investigations which must be carried on if we want the law to be properly enforced.

It is noted that the report of the committee may not be made under the terms of the resolution until the beginning of the next year.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The hearings must be closed and the committee must make its report by January 1, 1938. The committee must complete its labors by that time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I do not know that it will be possible to conclude the work intelligently even by the 5th day of January next. It is important that legislation be enacted just as speedily as possible to prevent the frauds and the evasions which are manifestly taking place under existing law. It would not be possible in a few weeks or even in a few months to devise plans which would prevent skilled and well-trained legal minds from working out processes designed to evade the statute, but it will be possible to take the violations and evasions which are known, which are readily discoverable, and to impose additional restrictions and penalties which in a measure will protect the public.

While I am speaking on the subject I wish to say a few words in regard to certain provisions of the measure mentioned by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. The right of the United States to control the charters of corporations permitted to engage in interstate commerce is unlimited. The Government by appropriate legislation may not only require all corporations engaging in interstate commerce to procure their charters from the National Government, but it may also attach such conditions to the charters as will give real assurance that the creatures of the Government of the United States will not openly defy or violate or evade the laws enacted and the restrictions imposed by the Government upon such corporations.

One of the great difficulties which has arisen in the enforcement of antimonopoly and antitrust laws and in the protection of the public against abuses incident to monopoly grows out of the definition which has been given to the word "person" as used in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. It seems to me that the word "person", as there used, really meant a living human being. When Congress referred in the fourteenth amendment to "persons born or naturalized" under the laws of the United States it did not embrace corporations. No one could contend that it did. When in the fourteenth amendment provision was made that no State "shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law", it appears to me that the most enlightened interpretation of that provision would be that the word "person" had been used in its ordinary, old-fashioned, dictionary sense.

In any event the United States Government, if it is willing to do so, can put into our antitrust laws and antimonopoly laws the life which was in a measure taken from them through what appears now to be strained constructions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, by requiring all corporations which are to engage in interstate commerce to take out a charter from the Federal Government, and by attaching just and proper conditions to the charters so to be granted.

No corporation has the inherent right to engage in the commerce of the United States and at the same time to foster or promote monopoly. It may be compelled to observe reasonable rules and regulations. The legislation proposed by the Senator from Wyoming is well worthy of consideration in connection with the subject matter of the message of the President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very grateful to the Senator from Arkansas for his remarks. As I said a moment ago, for almost 50 years Members of the House and the Senate have been rising in their places in the two bodies and fighting for the method of national incorporation as a solution of our difficulties. Today it is possible for anyone to go to the secretaries of state of certain States and obtain for his own purposes corporate charters in half a dozen names, so that he may bandy them about and thwart the very purposes which the Federal Government seeks to effectuate.

The history of corporation development, the investigations which have been conducted by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, particularly of railroad monopolies, have demonstrated over and over again that every law and every regulation which the Federal Government undertakes to impose for the benefit of the rank and file of the people of the United States is violated by those who use the corporate device for that purpose.

Here today we have the message of the President of the United States, in which he says, on page 2:

> The device of evading taxes by setting up foreign personal holding corporations in the Bahamas, Panama, Newfoundland, and other places—

Observe the words "other places." They mean "States of the United States"— > where taxes are low and corporation laws are lax.

A few years ago Congress created the Communications Commission, empowering it with authority to rule the air, as it were. In the city of Washington are lawyers who practice before the Communications Commission who, with their stenographers and their messenger boys, go to this State and to that State and create corporations to evade the laws of the United States. We cannot begin to balance the Budget, we cannot begin to establish social justice, until we decide that Federal laws shall control the corporations which engage in Federal or interstate business.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a few moments ago, during these remarks, I referred to what may be termed a strained construction or interpretation which has fastened itself on the fourteenth amendment in connection with the definition of the word "person." I do not wish at this time to enter into a prolonged discussion of that matter, but it seems appropriate to complete the statement by saying that the great difficulty which is encountered now in the enforcement of the antitrust laws grows out of the incorporation into the statute by the courts of the word "reasonable" in relation to restraints which were forbidden as to trade and commerce by the Sherman antitrust law and amendments to it.

I point out the fact that when the word "reasonable" was written into the statute by the courts, which is one way of stating the matter, the power to enforce the antitrust laws was greatly restricted for the reason that that interpretation made the judicial department of the Government the judge of when a restraint was reasonable or unreasonable, when a trust was "good" or when a trust was "bad", which made it morally impossible to have any uniformity in enforcement, for the reason that a district judge in Arkansas might take a very different view as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of an admitted restraint of trade from that taken by a district judge in Pennsylvania, or in Ohio, or in Rhode Island, or in New York. Thus were established almost as many standards as there were courts, because it became a matter of pure discretion as to when a restraint was reasonable and when it was unreasonable.

In consequence of that, it has been very difficult to enforce antimonopoly laws, and it may be necessary to rewrite the statute, and again say that combinations, conspiracies, and pools in restraint of trade shall be unlawful. I do not know, however, of any way to prevent some judge, if he chooses to do so, from saying that Congress did not say what it meant, or did not mean what it said, or did not know what it said when it prohibited, or sought to prohibit, all restraints of commerce.

That, of course, is a much broader subject than the one which is raised by the pending joint resolution. Let me now express the hope that the Congress may take the occasion to study the related questions, and not only seek to correct the mistakes which are now shown to exist in connection with our revenue laws but fairly anticipate the probable recurrence of similar mistakes under new devices which the ingenuity of great legal minds that have nothing better to engage them may be able to devise.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

If this joint resolution shall be passed, does it mean that the Finance Committee will not take up the subject of the President's address at this time?

Mr. HARRISON. It does not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the next to the last paragraph of the President's message:

> I am confident that the Congress will wish to enact legislation at this session specifically and exclusively aimed at making the present tax structure evasion-proof.

I am wondering if it will be the purpose of the proposed joint committee to go to work on that matter at once, and to report a bill at this session—and I hope it may be passed—making the tax structure proof against evasion, as the President has pointed out.

I notice that the Senator's joint resolution, in providing for the appointment of a joint committee, requires it to make an investigation, but it is not to report until the opening of the next session of Congress. I hope the legislation which the President recommends, and which the Secretary of the Treasury recommends, may be speedily enacted into law; and I take this occasion to commend the Secretary of the Treasury for his letter. I think it was a wise and a proper thing to communicate these facts to the President and to the Congress; and I entirely approve and heartily endorse the Secretary of the Treasury for his act in boldly coming out and giving the facts to the Congress and in writing this courageous letter to the President. He has done the Government and the country a notable service.

I think, however, that at this session of Congress the Finance Committee ought to consider the facts which the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have so cogently pointed out, and report legislation at this session, and not wait until the next session for such legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee in answer to his question that that is exactly what we are trying to do. The Senator from Mississippi shares exactly the views of the Senator from Tennessee. There is nothing in the joint resolution which says that the joint committee shall not report until the 5th day of January of next year. We expect to make a report at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. During the present session of Congress?

Mr. HARRISON. During the present session. We desire first to ascertain the facts, and when we have done so we shall report them to the Congress. We shall try to have legislation passed just as soon as possible; but the joint resolution does provide that the joint committee which is to be created shall not be a permanent one, and for that reason we wrote into the joint resolution the limitation to which reference has been made.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very happy to hear the Senator say that the Finance Committee are going to take that course; in other words, that they are not going simply to refer the matter to a joint committee of the two Houses and then let it go over until next January.

These tax facts have been known to many persons for quite a while. The Senator may recall that more than 2 years ago I made a very elaborate speech on the subject on the floor of the Senate. I then expressed the hope that tax evasions would be corrected. I intensely believe that they should be corrected at this session, and I hope the Senator's committee will report a bill to that effect. Especially should these loopholes which the President and the Secretary point out be plugged. These evasions should be stopped without delay.

Mr. HARRISON. We hope it can be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Tennessee takes his seat I desire to ask him a question, if he will yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee and also to the Senator from Mississippi the advisability of fixing the time for the final report of the proposed joint committee at, say, February 1 instead of January 1, so that if it is found in the course of the joint committee's labors and investigations that the work of the joint committee cannot be completed within the time fixed, Congress will be in session and can extend the time.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that the limitation was inserted in the joint resolution this morning at my instance, because I did not want the impression to be created that we wished to create a permanent joint committee. I have, however, no objection to fixing any other date.

Mr. NORRIS. If the joint resolution is passed as it is presented, ending the work of the joint committee on the 1st of January, suppose—and I think it might very well happen; I believe it would happen—that the joint committee should be in the midst of investigations which it would be impossible to complete within the time fixed and more time should be needed. If the joint committee knew that before it had to make a final report the conditions could be explained to Congress, and an extension of the time could be made, if necessary, would not that be a great improvement and assist the joint committee in making a more systematic investigation?

Mr. HARRISON. That is exactly what will happen. If the joint resolution is passed as written, and we find that we need more time, we certainly will come here and ask for an extension of time; but we did not want to create the impression that we were trying to establish a permanent joint committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; I do not think anybody would get that impression.

Mr. HARRISON. But there will be no objection to a change of date. If the Senate wishes to fix a later date, I shall not object. I thought fixing the date that was suggested might spur up the committee to do the work expeditiously.

Mr. NORRIS. I should suggest the 1st of February instead of the 1st of January, so that Congress would have time to act in case an extension should be desired.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator from Michigan begins, let me say that there is no difference of opinion between the Senator from Tennessee and myself. If this joint resolution can be passed by the Senate, we hope it or a similar measure will be passed by the other House, in which case the joint committee will be appointed by the respective presiding officers and will immediately go to work. The first witness to be brought before the joint committee, I imagine, will be the Secretary of the Treasury, who will detail to us all the revelations outlined in the President's message.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senators that the date fixed in the joint resolution is January 5 instead of January 1.

Mr. HARRISON. We put it a few days after the meeting of Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I to understand that the special joint committee is to take exclusive jurisdiction of the subject, and that the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee will be unrelated to it in the meantime?

Mr. HARRISON. We proposed to create the joint committee because it did not seem wise to have one committee in the House and another committee in the Senate working on the President's suggestions. So, after many conferences, we thought it would be wise to have a joint committee made up of Members of the House and Members of the Senate; but, whatever their recommendations are, they will come to Congress before legislation is passed, and the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate will frame the bill and report it to their respective bodies.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely; but there will be no activity in either the Ways and Means Committee or the Finance Committee pending the receipt of the report of the joint committee?

Mr. HARRISON. I should not say that. The Committee on Finance will have plenty of other work to do while this investigation is going on.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am simply trying to ascertain where the jurisdiction will lie.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the legislative jurisdiction of neither the House Ways and Means Committee nor the Senate Finance Committee is in anywise affected. This is merely an investigation which will be performed by members of the two committees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Finance Committee may report bills whenever it gets jurisdiction of them, at any time, whether or not the joint committee shall have finished its labors.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me ask a practical question which will probably answer what I am trying to ascertain. Who gets the President's message by way of reference? Does the Senate Finance Committee get it?

Mr. HARRISON. It is referred to the Senate Finance Committee here, and the Ways and Means Committee in the other body; but the Senator will notice that the joint resolution reads:

> It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate the methods of evasion and avoidance of income, estate, and gift taxes, pointed out in the message of the President transmitted to Congress on June 1, 1937, and to report to the Senate and the House.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Should we not enlarge the authority? The joint committee may get into court, and probably will, before it concludes its labors; it may have some injunctions served on it. It would have authority only to investigate those matters pointed out in the message of the President and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. They do not show on their face that only a partial investigation has been made. There are other fields still uninvestigated, and should not the authority be enlarged so that the joint committee could enter any field it saw fit to enter?

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that it may be we will have to broaden the authority before we finish the work. As was suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, I think we are going to need an appropriation for the Treasury Department before the investigation is concluded, so that they can employ more investigators.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Mississippi would do well to modify his joint resolution now so as to give general authority to investigate methods of tax evasion.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be well.

Mr. ROBINSON. The investigation is limited in the joint resolution to the specific cases pointed out by the President, when the message itself shows there are numerous other cases expected to arise which might just as well receive attention.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator might insert the words "and other methods of evasion."

Mr. HARRISON. I accept the amendment. What we wanted was to get under way the investigation of the things which have been reported by the President in his message. I am perfectly willing to have the resolution broadened. I think it is very appropriate, if the Senator desires to broaden it. I first ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection, but if the amendment is to be inserted, it should be done now. Has the Senator secured consent for consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Consent for its consideration has not as yet been obtained.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which he has introduced?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in connection with the pending request, remarks have been made relating to a bill which is now before a subcommittee, and I think that those remarks deal with the most attractive features of the bill referred to and have relation to its least objectionable characteristics. I wish to take this earliest possible occasion to call attention to the fact that in that measure providing for national incorporation there is contained a scheme to control production, manufacturing, and mining, in effect, to control all the activities of the affairs of men which heretofore have been exclusively regulated by the several States. The definition of interstate commerce as set forth in the bill comprehends all such activities, and the project is not merely one to require that new corporations shall be chartered by the Federal Government, but it comprehends all corporations, however ancient their charters, and requires that they obtain from this powerful Central Government probably the most powerful central government on earth today, a license which shall be founded upon conditions of the greatest restrictive character, reaching inside the factories, mines, foundries, and to the farms, regulating hours, wages, conditions of employment, and prices; in fact, every feature of commerce. I welcome the suggestion that upon the request now pending the Senate should consider carefully the printed hearings thus far taken by the subcommittee, having in view these considerations which are mentioned, as well as the very desirable considerations which have been spoken of by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I had stepped out of the Chamber for a moment. Does the Senator from Vermont suggest that the bill to which I referred earlier in the day undertakes to regulate prices?

Mr. AUSTIN. Inevitably it will have that effect.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator means that the inevitable trend of present activities leads to that end, does he not?

Mr. AUSTIN. I contend also that the program now being put into effect very swiftly by the present administration is bound to result in fixing prices and to create a monopoly of business. In other words, the slogan is, "We do not believe in prices being fixed by those who are engaged in the sale and purchase of goods, but we do believe in the fixation of prices by this all-powerful Central Government."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then the Senator is not referring to Senate bill 10, which is the bill to provide for Federal incorporation and Federal licensing.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I think that is the number of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator will not say, will he, that there is anything in that bill which specifically deals with fixing prices?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, Mr. President, I say that every feature of that bill, if it shall go into effect, has that objective, and will accomplish that purpose. In my opinion, if that bill, as it is written today, should go into effect, with all of its control centered in Washington, there would be no more free trade between the citizens of this country.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a question to ascertain if I correctly understand the point at which he is driving. If the bill to which the Senator from Wyoming refers shall be enacted, corporations engaged in interstate commerce will be required to take out Federal licenses, or to incorporate under the Federal Government, the purpose being to put into the license or in the charter of a corporation certain restrictions and limitations which the corporation must live up to, and by that means and method the Federal Government would be controlling manufacturing, mining, and so forth, as the Senator said a while ago, and in that instance would be flying in the face of the decisions of the Supreme Court, which started, I think, with Hammer against Dagenhart.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a more recent case to which I would refer is that in which the Supreme Court found the applause of the administration greeting it. That was the case which supported a statute of the State of Washington regulating those internal affairs to which I have referred. Having applauded that, having said "amen" to the doctrine that a State should regulate its domestic affairs, and that the Federal Government could not occupy the same field at the same time, what I say is that Senate bill 10, if that be its correct number, flies in the face of that principle. I have not thus far discussed the constitutional question; but I thought that while proceeding to act on the request for unanimous consent, which has provoked praise of Senate bill 10, we ought at the same time consider that what has been said relates to only the good part of the bill, and that the Senate should have in mind that there is this other feature of the bill, which further tends to suppress the State's opportunity, to wipe out the State's boundaries, and magnify the already too great power centered here in Washington.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is a very able and helpful member of the subcommittee which has been conducting hearings on the bill which has been mentioned, Senate bill 10. Because we have been so busy with the hearings the members of the subcommittee have not had an opportunity to sit down and study the bill. Consequently, I am afraid the Senator from Vermont is allowing himself to be governed by a conclusion with respect to the purposes of the measure which is not borne out by the measure itself.

I do not intend now to enter upon any lengthy discussion of the terms and purposes of the bill, except to say that as I have conceived the measure, it draws a distinction between the corporation and the natural person; and, far from creating a Federal agency which shall control the activities of natural persons, it will only create a system by which States which have neither the authority nor the desire to regulate commerce among the States shall be prevented from creating artificial corporations which evade every Federal law, and which, more than that, create the difficulties from which we are all trying to escape.

Mr. AUSTIN. In the Senator's view of this program, is there any difference in the effect upon our economy or upon our social relations whether the bread that we eat, the clothes that we wear, the shelter that we occupy are produced by a person who is an animate being, or by a person that has a purely artificial being?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes; a very great difference, and I shall be very glad to go into that subject with the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think that must be a vital point of difference between us in viewing this matter.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure that if the Senator and I had an opportunity to sit down and discuss this question, it would not be long before we would dissolve any differences between us.

I may say that a corporation is permitted to gather its capital from the four corners of the country. No natural person in his natural capacity is enabled to acquire the capital which enables him to do business on such an interstate scale as to cause any difficulty for the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the opportunity of incorporating now, as a part of my remarks, a radio address which I made upon this subject just a few days ago.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Thomas Jefferson, who is universally regarded as one of the greatest of all American statesmen, on one occasion condensed his whole philosophy of government into this brief sentence: "That government is best which governs least."

Every American citizen understands just what Jefferson meant. It is that the individual should be as free as possible and that there should be no control over his activities save that which is necessary for the preservation of order and the maintenance of society.

This country of ours has been dedicated to this principle, and yet for a period of 50 years there has been a steady expansion of the powers of government over the individual, and to a greater and greater degree all classes of our people are turning to Washington for the control and direction of their affairs.

When Thomas Jefferson lived, when the Constitution of the United States was drafted, the Central Government exercised comparatively little influence upon the individual.

How does it happen that this great change has come about? The answer is that the business, trade, and commerce of the country are no longer carried on by natural persons but by corporations.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY

The corporation was practically unknown as an instrumentality of business life when this Government was first established. It was so unusual that Adam Smith, founder of the modern science of economics, specifically declared in one of his books that the joint-stock corporation could never succeed in ordinary business affairs because, as he put it, no man could be expected to manage other people's money efficiently and honestly.

Today the bulk of the business of this country is carried on by corporations which, in many instances, have grown so great that they exceed in wealth and power most cities and many States. With both stockholders and employees numbering tens of thousands, with assets of far greater value than of most governing units, with properties and plants scattered all over the face of the continent, indeed sometimes all over the world, the modern corporation exercises a more direct, definite, and important effect upon the daily lives of all the people than most political States.

They are brought into existence by law. They have no existence outside of the law; they possess only those powers which the people, through the Government, see fit to give them. Yet they actually operate without public authority. The modern corporation is an economic state, a social agency greater than most governments, but totally unresponsive to any democratic impulses.

CONTROL OF INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS

The interstate corporations, the activities of which so intimately affect the economic lives of all of our people, are not controlled by their employees. That is very certain. They are not controlled by their stockholders. That also is very certain. The corporate employee comes and goes, working at a salary or at wages for a very uncertain period of time. The corporate stockholder also changes very rapidly, many of them holding their stock only for purposes of trade in the markets. Many others hold the stock in such small amounts that they make no effort to assert any degree of ownership. Indeed they could not assert any authority in the management of the affairs of the economic state of which they are, as it were, citizens.

The modern interstate corporation is controlled by a small management group which in turn is dominated by another and smaller financial group, the members of which, by virtue of the loose corporate laws of a few States, have found the means by which to wield complete control of these huge aggregations of capital, gathered in small amounts from innumerable investors scattered all over the land. Under the modern corporate system there has been a total separation of ownership and control with consequent effects of such far-reaching importance as to threaten the survival of democracy itself.

The trouble with America and with the world is that the political machinery and the economic machinery are not running in harmony. It is as though two parts of a huge engine which ought to work in unison had been disconnected while running at full speed, with the result that the whole machine is unable to function and is in constant danger of disastrous collapse.

The resources of the earth are amply sufficient to support all of the people of the earth in plenty and happiness. The corporation is a natural instrumentality for the development of these resources. Heretofore, however, it has not been used in the public interest. Public benefits have been only incidental. Monopoly has not been restrained and the result has been that while wealth has accumulated and the control of economic power has been concentrated, economic dependence of the masses has increased at the same time.

CONCENTRATION OF ECONOMIC POWER

The concentration of economic power has been the cause of concentration of political power. When men are unable themselves to cope with the institutions that control their bread and butter, they are driven to some form of united action—and their first recourse is naturally to the Government. If you seek the explanation of the expansion of the powers of the Central Government in Washington, if you seek the explanation of the rise of the authoritarian state in Europe, you will find it in the concentration of economic power through the modern corporation.

Fifty years ago, when it became apparent that the railroad corporations operating throughout the United States had become in effect a law unto themselves and were too great to be regulated in the public interest by the State governments, the people turned to Washington, and the Interstate Commerce Commission was created to regulate some phases of the railroad business. Through the law establishing this Commission we committed to the newly created body certain discretionary powers over the conduct of railroad corporations. From that day onward, as business corporations have grown, we have undertaken, after they have been created, to regulate them by official command from the Central Government.

To state it in another way, for 50 years we have been following the policy of trying to lock the stable door after the horse has been stolen instead of preventing the theft in the first place. Because we have permitted the States to create these modern economic giants without concern for the general public welfare, we have been unable to prevent abuses at the very beginning. No State since the establishment of this Government has been admitted to the Union until its constitution was approved by Congress. Yet we permit States which could not set up their own governments without the consent of Congress to create corporations which actually dominate, control, and regulate the entire commercial and industrial life of the country under charters which have never been submitted to any national authority for public approval. In other words, we allow the States from which the power to regulate interstate commerce was withdrawn by the Constitution to create agencies which now control the field of business, the regulation of which was committed to the Federal Government.

GOVERNMENTS CREATE CORPORATIONS

Let us get this thought clearly. A corporation arises only as a result of a contract between some government and the natural persons who desire to do their business in the corporate form. The only government in this country which has any jurisdiction over the field of interstate and foreign commerce is the Federal Government. It must be perfectly plain, therefore, that the Federal Government is the only public authority that should be permitted to make the contracts—that is to say, to issue the charters or licenses—by which interstate corporations are brought into existence.

If we take the simple precaution to write into the charters of these corporations rules which will enforce honesty and fairness in management, which will guarantee fair dealing with employees and which will prevent monopoly, it will be unnecessary to continue to expand the Federal bureaucracy for the purpose of regulating them after their operations have become a public problem.

Let me repeat, a corporation has no power except that which is granted in the charter. State governments now create corporations under blanket charters that allow the incorporators to do anything that they please. They may set up dummy directors; they may rob the stockholders; they may rob the public by the manipulation of stock and bonds and corporate assets; they may with the utmost impunity engage in all of the practices which experience teaches us are ruinous.

STATE CHARTERS HAVE NOT WORKED

We know that the old system of letting the States set up these social agencies to operate without public responsibility has not worked. That system was incompetent to protect itself from the forces that brought about the crash of 1929. When that disaster came we found no relief at the hands of the great corporate managers because there was no uniform rule, national in scope, upon which national recovery could be built without resort to the Federal Government. Because of that collapse it became necessary for Washington to assume tremendous powers which had never before been exercised, to spend sums so huge that they had never before been imagined, and, finally, to create a Government bureaucracy greater than any that had ever existed before upon the face of the globe.

The Federal Government did a splendid job in the emergency, but we must now devise the plan for permanent recovery. We cannot go back to the old system. Unless we are willing to resign ourselves to a system under which all our affairs shall be directed by some central authority, we must lay down a fundamental rule, a rule that will be national in its scope for the Government within themselves of the interstate corporations upon which our economic lives depend. Recognizing the modern corporation as a social unit, we must make it an instrument of democratic power in accordance with the fundamental ideals of America or else we shall continue to be at the mercy of concentrated power of some kind.

GOVERNMENT AND BUSINESS MUST WORK TOGETHER

Government and business must be made to work together. The task of finding the formula by which this may be accomplished is a challenge to the intelligence, patriotism, and good sense of the people of America and, for that matter, of the whole world.

Democracy everywhere is facing a crisis because the economic life of the world has changed, and we have not, as yet, adapted ourselves to the change.

For almost a generation statesmen, students, and economists have been urging the Federal Government to assert the power which it has to write the charter of every corporation that desires to engage in interstate or foreign commerce.

I have introduced in Congress a bill intended to make this principle effective. The measure is based upon principles which have been recognized by Presidents like Cleveland and Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson. Its purpose is not to increase the discretionary power of government over business but to make unnecessary the exercise of that power by depriving corporations and their managers of the corporate authority to do the things which have been the cause of most abuses.

For example, it would do away with the vicious practice by which some manipulators make their stenographers and office boys the officers and directors of their puppet corporations. It would prevent an officer or director of one corporation from milking it and its stockholders through another corporation formed for his own purposes. It would prevent officers and directors from voting themselves big salaries and bonuses. It would establish a system by which the rights of the small stockholder would be protected and by which he would be assured of disinterested representation at stockholders' meetings. It would make officers and directors trustees for their stockholders.

In short, a measure of this kind could be used to prevent the occurrence of the abuses which have caused such widespread losses instead of vainly trying to punish them after they had taken place.

Moreover, the measure would make possible the development of a national industrial system calculated to benefit all factors of the population. For example, it authorizes the Federal Trade Commission to call a national industrial conference in which employers, employees, the investing public, and consumers may be represented for the purpose of developing a general program for the coordination, stabilization, and orderly development of the basic industries of the country. The report of such a conference would then be submitted to Congress for its action in case additional legislation should be necessary.

LET US SET INDIVIDUALS FREE

One vitally significant feature of this plan is that it would apply only to corporations. It would thus set the natural person free. The great defect of most plans which have been tried heretofore is that they have applied to every citizen. The truth is that we don't need to establish Government regulation of the natural person. The man who operates on his own capital as an individual or in a partnership cannot control sufficient economic power to make his activities ordinarily a matter for national control.

Those commercial activities which do not directly or indirectly overflow State lines are not matters of national concern and should be left to the State. John Quincy Adams, when he was President, expressed the principle simply in these few words: "Whatever is of domestic concernment unconnected with other members of the Union or with foreign lands, belongs exclusively to the administration of the State governments."

Conversely, as John Marshall phrased it, whatever commercial activity affects more States than one is a matter for the National Government.

Our trouble has been that we have reversed these principles. We have allowed the States to create the interstate corporations that do affect all the States and all the people, but then, trying to cure the resulting evils we have attempted to regulate the natural person as well as the corporation.

By recognizing the difference between the flesh-and-blood man on the one hand and the artificial being we call the corporations on the other, we can restore the proper balance between the Government and the citizen.

By applying the Federal rule to interstate corporations, rather than to natural persons, we shall free the individual from the danger of regimentation. By making Federal regulation of corporations effective through Federal charters instead of through supervision by boards and commissions, clothed with discretionary authority, we shall free business from bureaucratic control.

This is the way to establish economic justice. Let no one forget that without economic freedom political liberty cannot endure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the disclosures made by the President of the United States in his message, and through the letter written to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, must bring the blush of shame to the face of every patriotic American citizen. That such a condition could exist seems impossible in a country composed of patriotic men and women.

I am going to say only a word or two on this subject. I do not want to be in the attitude of one who says "I told you so"; yet I desire to say to the Congress and to the country that had the voices of a few men in the Senate and in the House been heeded, and had tax laws been passed in accordance with those suggestions, the terrible, disgraceful, dishonest, conditions exposed by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury would not now confront us. Had such legislation been passed, we should not now have such a condition presented to us.

Mr. President, from the very time the income-tax law was passed until now a few Senators and Representatives have contended that there should be provision in the law for publicity with respect to tax returns. We have said over and over again, year after year, when we have advocated that kind of an amendment to the tax laws, that if we did not give publicity to tax returns the very condition which has now been disclosed would always exist. All that has been disclosed would have been avoided, as I see it, had there been publicity of tax returns.

Instead of keeping the tax returns secret and undisclosed, if every tax return made in the United States could have been examined by the public, we should have received, as we have often said, hundreds of millions of dollars really belonging to the Government of the United States, which these disclosures show we have not received. That money has been fraudulently and dishonestly kept out of the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) creating a joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offer several amendments to the joint resolution. I send them to the desk and ask that they be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 2, after the date "June 1, 1937", it is proposed to add "and other methods of tax evasion and avoidance."

In the same section it is proposed to strike out "January 5" and insert in lieu thereof "February 1."

In section 6, it is proposed to change the date from "January 5" to "February 1."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator if he wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask—because it has not been made clear to me as yet, though I may not have heard all that was said—whether it is proposed to proceed with legislation in regard to this matter within a reasonable time.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, I imagine that the first thing the joint committee would do would be to have the Secretary of the Treasury come before it and lay before it the cases which have already been disclosed, and other cases on which the Treasury authorities are now working, and as soon as the joint committee could recommend to the Congress some legislation which might plug the loopholes, the committee would propose legislation which would do so.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me, from reading the message of the President and the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which the President quotes, that a number of the loopholes are now revealed.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The authorities know what they are. There is no occasion for waiting for some tax-evasion committee to find out what they are.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say that the proposed joint committee will not wait one day longer than is necessary to propose the legislation that will stop any part of these tax evasions and avoidances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED-TO BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first business in order on the calendar.

DEBATE ON APPROPRIATION BILLS—DISPOSITION OF MEASURES OBJECTED TO

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish to make the request or motion now but as soon as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] returns to the floor I shall move that the first order of business on the calendar be indefinitely postponed, unless it can be done by consent. I think that order of business ought not to remain on the calendar, in view of the opposition to it. Some disposition should be made of it, and I think it should be indefinitely postponed. However, I hesitate to make the motion in the absence of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there are a number of bills on the calendar which have been repeatedly called, objections have been made to them, and the bills have gone over. It seems to me some way ought to be devised of taking action on them.

I now give notice that as to the bills which have been repeatedly called, it is my intention the next time the calendar is called to move to recommit them to the respective committees which reported them, so as to save the necessity of going over and over again matters that have not been acted upon. Of course any Senator has the right, when the order of business in the Senate permits it, to move the consideration of a bill that has been objected to; but manifestly at least a number of these bills will never be taken up on that order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may suggest that bills repeatedly objected to could be referred to the table calendar, and then would not be called when the Senate has a call of the unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will let the matter go over now, and suggest that the call of the calendar be proceeded with.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 532) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by providing for the inspection and investigation of conditions prevailing in train-dispatching offices and train-dispatching service and for the promulgation of necessary rules and regulations governing the working conditions of train dispatchers was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOLT. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 847) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 100) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies", approved July 2, 1890, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 47) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1261) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The bill (H. R. 2901) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government to include all other employees in the legislative branch, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill was before the Senate the last time the calendar was called. It was agreed that the proposed amendments should be included in a reprint of the bill so as to be available to Senators. I hope the bill may be considered today. It has to do with the retirement of employees of the legislative branch who have been 15 years in the service and have made up the amount of money to the Government which should have been paid in had they started 15 years ago to make the payments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after "46 Stat.", to strike out "349" and insert "468", so as to make the section read:

That the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 468), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government, is hereby amended to include all other employees in the legislative branch.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there are other amendments which have been suggested and which appear in the reprint of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments heretofore proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "branch", it is proposed to insert "and all officers and employees of any of the courts of the United States who are not entitled to the benefits of any other retirement act."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there are two slight amendments the Civil Service Commission suggests. The first one is on page 2, at the end of line 2 following the amendment just stated, to add the words "whose tenure of employment is not intermittent nor of uncertain duration."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from New York and appearing in the reprint of the bill will be stated.

The next amendment heretofore proposed by Mr. COPELAND was, in section 2, at the beginning of line 8, after the word "be", to insert "and shall not be applicable to any officer or employee of any court of the United States who is brought within its scope by section 1 of this act until such officer or employee gives notice in writing to the disbursing officer by whom the salary of such officer or employee is paid", so as to read:

SEC. 2. The provisions of such act of May 29, 1930, shall not be applicable to any employee in the legislative branch who is brought within its scope by section 1 of this act until such employee gives notice in writing to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatices, as the case may be, and shall not be applicable to any officer or employee of any court of the United States who is brought within its scope by section 1 of this act until such officer or employee gives notice in writing to the disbursing officer by whom the salary of such officer or employee is paid, that he or she desires to come under the provisions of such act of May 29, 1930. Such notice must be given, in the case of any such employee in the service on the effective date of this act, within 6 months from such effective date, and in the case of any such employee entering the service after the effective date of this act, within 6 months from the date of such entrance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment heretofore proposed by Mr. COPELAND was, in section 2, after line 19, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in the case of any such employee whose salary or any part thereof is paid by the disbursing officer of the Senate such notice may be given at any time, and such employee shall come under the provisions of such act of May 29, 1930, at the beginning of the sixth month after the giving of such notice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by Mr. COPELAND was, at the top of page 3, to insert the following:

No such employee whose salary or any part thereof is paid by the disbursing officer of the Senate shall make any deposit required by section 9, or any redeposit required by subsection (b) of section 12, of such act of May 29, 1930, and there shall not be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of any such employee the sum required to be deducted and withheld by section 10 of such act of May 29, 1930, unless and until such employee shall have completed 15 years of service: Provided, That before any such employee may derive any of the benefits provided by such act of May 29, 1930, he shall be required to deposit an amount equal to the following sums: (1) The sum which would have been deducted and withheld from his basic salary, pay, or compensation but for the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, together with interest on such sum computed at the rate of 4 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each fiscal year; (2) any sum required to be deposited under the provisions of section 9 of such act of May 29, 1930; and (3) any sum required to be redeposited under the provisions of subsection (b) of section 12 of such act of May 29, 1930: Provided further, That should any such employee who shall have served for a total period of not less than 5 years become totally disabled for useful and efficient service, within the meaning of section 6 of such act of May 29, 1930, before completing 15 years of service, he shall be entitled to the benefits provided by such section 6, upon deposit of the amount required to be deposited under the preceding proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment heretofore proposed by Mr. COPELAND was, in section 3, line 8, after the word "any", to strike out "employee in the legislative branch" and insert "officer or employee", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The provisions of section 2 of such act of May 29, 1930, and of section 204 of the Economy Act of June 30, 1932, and any Executive orders pursuant thereto, relating to automatic separation, shall not apply to any officer or employee to whom the provisions of such act are extended by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. The second amendment suggested by the Civil Service Commission is in section 3, on page 4, after the word "act", at the end of line 10, to insert a comma and the words "nor hereafter to employees of the office of the Architect of the Capitol." I offer that amendment. The adoption of this amendment and the one suggested previously will make the bill conform to the ideas of the Civil Service Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to extend the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, to certain employees in the legislative and judicial branches of the Government."

DISTRICT JUVENILE COURT

The bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that this bill go over without prejudice. I promised a Senator who is not present today that the bill would not be considered in his absence. So I hope the bill will not be deemed to be among those to be passed over at a future time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

STATUS OF OFFICERS OF WORLD WAR

The bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have indicated several times that a motion might be made to proceed to the consideration of this bill; but I do not think it should be acted on under the present order. I suggest that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL CEMETERY FACILITIES, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Waterton Oil, Land & Power Co., of Butte, Mont., against the United States for damages arising out of the breach of various contracts entered into in the years 1906, 1907, 1908, and 1909 for the cutting of timber by such company from certain lands in the Glacier National Park and the cancelation of certain mining claims of such company covering such land.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

JAMES W. GROSE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1850) to provide for the appointment of James W. Grose as a sergeant, first class (master sergeant), United States Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "master", to strike out "sergeant, and he shall not be entitled to receive pay or allowances for the period during which he was not in the active service" and insert "sergeant: Provided, That the said James W. Grose shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by virtue of the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That James W. Grose, a noncommissioned officer on the retired list of the Regular Army, be placed in the first grade as a master sergeant: Provided, That the said James W. Grose shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF FOREIGN EXHIBITORS AT NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 334) to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at the New York World's Fair, to be held at New York City, N. Y., in 1939, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress and the Commissioner of Patents are hereby authorized and directed to establish branch offices under the direction of the Register of Copyrights and the Commissioner of Patents, respectively, in suitable quarters on the grounds of the New York World's Fair, to be held at New York City, N. Y., under the direction of the New York World's Fair Corporation, Inc., a New York corporation, said quarters to be furnished free of charge by said corporation, said offices to be established at such time as may, upon 60 days' advance notice, in writing, to the Register of Copyrights and the Commissioner of Patents, respectively, be requested by said New York World's Fair Corporation, but not earlier than January 1, 1939, and to be maintained until the close to the general public of said exposition; and the proprietor of any foreign copyright, or any certificate of trade-mark registration, or letters patent of invention, design, or utility model issued by any foreign government protecting any trade mark, apparatus, device, machine, process, method, composition of matter, design, or manufactured article imported for exhibition and exhibited at said fair may upon presentation of proof of such proprietorship satisfactory to the Register of Copyrights or the Commissioner of Patents, as the case may be, obtain without charge and without prior examination as to novelty, a certificate from such branch office, which shall be prima-facie evidence in the Federal courts of such proprietorship, the novelty of the subject matter covered by any such certificate to be determined by a Federal court in case an action or suit is brought based thereon; and said branch offices shall keep registers of all such certificates issued by them, which shall be open to public inspection.

At the close of said New York World's Fair the register of certificates of the copyright registrations aforesaid shall be deposited in the Copyright Office in the Library of Congress at Washington, D. C., and the register of all other certificates of registration aforesaid shall be deposited in the United States Patent Office at Washington, D. C., and there preserved for future reference. Certified copies of any such certificates shall, upon request, be furnished by the Register of Copyrights or the Commissioner of Patents, as the case may be, either during or after said exposition, and at the rates charged by such officials for certified copies of other matter; and any such certified copies shall be admissible in evidence in lieu of the original certificates in any Federal court.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person without authority of the proprietor thereof to copy, republish, imitate, reproduce, or practice at any time during the period specified in section 6 hereof any subject matter protected by registration as aforesaid at either of the branch offices at said exposition which shall be imported for exhibition at said exposition, and there exhibited and which is substantially different in a copyright, trade mark, or patent sense, as the case may be, from anything publicly used, described in a printed publication or otherwise known in the United States of America prior to such registration at either of said branch offices as aforesaid; and any person who shall infringe upon the rights thus protected under this act shall be liable—

(a) To an injunction restraining such infringement issued by any Federal court having jurisdiction of the defendant;

(b) To pay to the proprietor such damages as the proprietor may have suffered due to such infringement, as well as all the profits which the infringer may have made by reason of such infringement, and in proving profits the plaintiff shall be required to prove sales only and the defendant shall be required to prove every element of cost which he claims, or in lieu of actual damages and profits such damages as to the court shall appear to be just;

(c) To deliver upon an oath, to be impounded during the pendency of the act, upon such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe, all articles found by the court after a preliminary hearing to infringe the rights herein protected; and

(d) To deliver upon an oath, for destruction, all articles found by the court at final hearings to infringe the rights herein protected.

SEC. 3. Any person who willfully and for profit shall infringe any right protected under this act, or who shall knowingly and willfully aid or abet such infringement, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding 1 year or by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. All the acts, regulations, and provisions which apply to protecting copyrights, trade marks, designs, and patents for inventions or discoveries not inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall apply to certificates issued pursuant to this act, but no notice of copyright on the work shall be required for protection hereunder.

SEC. 5. Nothing contained in this act shall bar or prevent the proprietor of the subject matter covered by any certificate issued pursuant to this act from obtaining protection for such subject matter under the provisions of the copyright, trade-mark, or patent laws of the United States of America, as the case may be, in force prior hereto, and upon making application and complying with the provisions prescribed by such laws; and nothing contained in this act shall prevent, lessen, impeach, or avoid any remedy at law or inequity under any certificate of copyright registration, certificate of trade-mark registration, or letters patent for inventions or discoveries or designs issued under the copyright, trade-mark, or patent laws of the United States of America, as the case may be, in force prior hereto, and which any owner thereof and of a certificate issued thereon persuant to this act might have had if this act had not been passed, but such owner shall not twice recover the damages he has sustained or the profit made by reason of any infringement thereof.

SEC. 6. The rights protected under the provisions of this act as to any copyright, trade mark, apparatus, device, machine, process, method, composition of matter, design, or manufactured article imported for exhibition at said New York World's Fair shall begin on the date the same is placed on exhibition at said exposition and shall continue for a period of 6 months from the date of the closing to the general public of said exposition.

SEC. 7. All necessary expenses incurred by the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by the New York World's Fair, under regulations to be prescribed by the Librarian of Congress and the Commissioner of Patents, respectively; and receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriations from which such expenses were paid.

CADETS AT MILITARY ACADEMY FROM CANAL ZONE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2295) to amend the act approved June 7, 1935 (Public, No. 116, 74th Cong.; 49 Stat. 332), to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of the act approved June 7, 1935 (Public, No. 116, 74th Cong.; 49 Stat. 332), to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, which reads as follows: "one to be selected by the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, from among the sons of civilians of the Panama Canal Zone and the Panama Railroad, resident on the zone", is amended to read as follows: "one cadet to be selected by the Governor of the Panama Canal from among the sons of civilians residing in the Canal Zone and the sons of civilian personnel of the United States Government and the Panama Railroad Co. residing in the Republic of Panama."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], in charge of the bill, what increase in the number of cadets does the bill contemplate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill does not propose to increase the number of appointments to be made from the Panama Canal Zone but permits the Governor to appoint men residing across the line of the zone in Panama. Some of the civilian employees have moved across the line for various reasons, and under the language of the existing law their sons cannot be appointed.

Mr. ROBINSON. The title of the bill, then, is misleading.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is misleading.

Mr. ROBINSON. The title of the bill reads, "To provide for an additional number of cadets." The Senator, as I understand him, says that the bill merely authorizes the appointment as cadets of young men who do not reside within the Canal Zone.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill is an amendment to the existing law, and it retains the old title. As a matter of fact, the title technically is misleading, but the bill is an amendment to a former act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN E. SANDAGE

The bill (H. R. 1304) for the relief of John E. Sandage, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized to consider and determine, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for the benefits of the Employees' Compensation Act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, the claim of John E. Sandage on account of disability due to loss of an eye alleged to have been proximately caused by his employment in the service of the United States between September 8, 1929, and December 31, 1932: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act: Provided further, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months after the approval of this act.

HATTIE TOLBERT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2154) for the relief of Hattie Tolbert, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Hattie Tolbert, of Pensacola, Fla., the sum of $2,500 as full compensation for the death of her mother, Mary Goode, and her sister, Irma Dean, on March 1, 1921, on account of being struck by United States Navy (N–10) seaplane (A–2548) while piloted by John W. Alcorn, ensign, United States Navy: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLARD COLLINS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1401) for the relief of Willard Collins, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps," and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Willard Collins the sum of $10,000 in full and final settlement of any and all claims against the Government for the death of his wife and minor child, who were killed November 28, 1936, when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a truck belonging to the Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, which was being operated by Joseph Yusba, a member of the Civilian Conservation Corps, Camp Rainbow, Florence County, Wis.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. GUY A. M'CONOHA

McConoha, of Poplar, Mont., the sum of $425.50 in full satisfaction of all claims of such Mrs. Guy A. McConoha against the United States resulting from the loss sustained by her when dispossessed by the Government of a certain Ford automobile purchased with a like sum by the said Mrs. Guy A. McConoha, such automobile, without her knowledge, having been previously forfeited to the United States under the internal-revenue laws and laws relating to the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the Indians: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOSEPH M. CLAGETT, JR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 730) for the relief of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$1,000, and the additional sum of $40 per month during the remainder of his natural life"; on page 2, at the end of line 1, to insert "Provided, That the guardian of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr., shall file an annual report with the Secretary of the Treasury as to the physical condition of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr.: Provided further"; on the same page, line 6, after the word "act", to strike out "in excess of 10 percent thereof"; and in line 9, after the word "claim", to strike out "It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the guardian of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr., the sum of $1,000, and the additional sum of $40 per month during the remainder of his natural life, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries sustained by him on December 27, 1934, caused by a fall down an open elevator shaft in a building in Philadelphia, Pa., owned by the United States Government and under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department, Procurement Division: Provided, That the guardian of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr., shall file an annual report with the Secretary of the Treasury as to the physical condition of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr.: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ANNIE MARY WILMUTH

The bill (S. 546) for the relief of Annie Mary Wilmuth, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to consider and determine, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application for the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act had been made within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof, the claim of Annie Mary Wilmuth, on account of disability alleged to have been contracted while employed as a nurse at the United States Veterans' Administration Hospital, Algiers, La.: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

BONDED INDEBTEDNESS OF ALASKA MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS

The bill (H. R. 1502) to amend Public Law No. 626, Seventy-fourth Congress, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 2 of Public Law No. 626, Seventy-fourth Congress, the same being an act entitled "An act to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes", approved May 28, 1936, is amended to read as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness shall be incurred by any municipal corporation in the Territory of Alaska unless the proposal to incur such indebtedness be first submitted to the qualified electors of such municipal corporation whose names appear on the last tax-assessment roll or record of such municipality for purposes of municipal taxation, at an election called for such purpose, and not less than 65 percent of the votes cast at such election shall be in favor thereof."

AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

The bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of furnishing or replacing auxiliary vessels urgently necessary for the proper maintenance and operation of the Navy, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake the construction of about 36,050 tons (light displacement tonnage) of such auxiliary vessels as follows:

(a) One seaplane tender of about 8,300 tons;
(b) One destroyer tender of about 9,000 tons;
(c) One mine sweeper of about 600 tons;
(d) One submarine tender of about 9,000 tons;
(e) One fleet tug of about 1,150 tons; and
(f) One oiler of about 8,000 tons.

MR. AND MRS. EDWARD J. PRUETT

The bill (H. R. 3736) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Pruett, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Pruett the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for the death of their son, Robert Edward Pruett, who was drowned in a swimming pool at Fort McClellan, Ala., on September 22, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2106) for the allowance of certain claims not heretofore paid, for indemnity for spoliations by the French, prior to July 31, 1801, as reported by the Court of Claims, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HOWARD HEFNER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2673) for the relief of Howard Hefner.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I inquire if this bill has been recommended by the Department?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I may say that this bill has not been recommended by the Department, but very full and complete evidence relating to the bill was presented to the Senate Committee on Claims. At the last session of the Congress a bill passed the Senate providing an allowance of $5,000. The pending bill is a House measure, and only provides an allowance of $2,000. My investigation of this case and the evidence presented convinced me that it is a very meritorious measure, except that I consider that the bill does not provide adequate compensation for the injuries sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Howard Hefner the sum of $2,000 in full settlement of all damages sustained by him as the result of permanent personal injuries inflicted upon him when, on May 26, 1935, the car which he, Howard Hefner, was driving on State Highway No. 11 was struck by a United States Forestry truck driven by one Grady Helton at a point on said highway about 1 mile north of Cleveland, Ga., and near a place known as "Skeet's Place" on a deep curve on said highway, the said Howard Hefner being on his side of the road when the accident occurred: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 885) for the relief of H. G. Harmon was announced as next in order.

Mr. GILLETTE. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SUIT OF JOHN H. OWENS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1274) authorizing John H. Owens to bring suit in the District Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska, Omaha division, against the United States of America for damages sustained by reason of being injured by an automobile operated by an employee of the United States engaged in Government business which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska to hear, determine, and render judgment upon, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any provision of law to the contrary, the claim against the United States of John H. Owens, Omaha, Nebr., for damages on account of personal injuries sustained by the said John H. Owens when he was struck on September 23, 1931, in Omaha, Nebr., by an automobile operated by an employee of the Department of Agriculture while such employee was engaged in Government business: Provided, That the judgment, if any, shall not exceed the sum of $3,000. Such suit shall be brought within 4 months from the date of enactment of this act.

SEC. 2. The United States district attorney for the district of Nebraska is hereby charged with the duty of defending the United States in any suit instituted under the authority of section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. There is authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to pay any judgment rendered by such court in such suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska to determine the claim of John H. Owens."

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC NEEDS OF MIGRATING LABORERS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 85) authorizing an appropriation for an investigation of the social and economic needs of laborers migrating across State lines was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Secretary of Labor to carry out the purposes of S. Res. 298, to investigate the social and economic needs of laborers migrating across State lines, agreed to June 18, 1936, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000.

NATIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF COMMISSION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) providing for the appointment of a National Unemployment and Relief Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will be glad to explain the measure. It merely provides for the appointment of a commission to consist of not less than 5 nor more than 15 members to make a thorough and comprehensive study of unemployment and relief. It provides for no appropriation, but authorizes the expenses to be paid out of the relief appropriation. Are there any other questions?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does this resolution include any provision for the taking of a census of unemployed?

Mr. HATCH. It does not include any such provision. It merely provides for a complete study of the subject of unemployment and relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that, instead of providing an appropriation, it is based on an allotment by the President. Is that the idea?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I observe the bill provides for the creation of a new commission.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator whether it would not serve the purpose just as well if, indeed, not a little better, if this work should be undertaken by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor? Every time we create a new commission it becomes necessary for such commission to establish a new bureaucratic machine.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has done very excellent work. It is accustomed to gathering such statistics. I really feel that the purposes of the joint resolution would be better served and it would be possible to obtain more immediate action if, instead of creating a new commission, the Department of Labor were required to do the work.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator——

Mr. HATCH. Of course, I can answer but one question at a time. Does the Senator from Tennessee desire to speak along the same line as did the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. HATCH. Then, let me say in response to the Senator from Wyoming that I quite agree with all he has said about the establishment of new commissions and especially commissions which tend to create further and additional bureaus. However, this particular commission could not and would not create a new bureau. It is a fact-finding commission that is proposed. Undoubtedly it would and it must employ all the agencies of the Government in the Department of Labor, but that is only one small part of the problem involved. The statistics compiled and which are available in the Department of Labor will be very beneficial in this study, but also it must include a review and a consideration and a study of all the statistics in the Works Progress Administration, the Public Works Administration, and all the other emergency agencies which have had to do in any way with the subject of unemployment or relief. There is at present no single agency which can undertake this study.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is that to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senator. The bill making appropriations for the Department of Labor carried a large sum of money to that department for the purpose of securing this exact information. The two would be paralleling each other, if I am correct about it. I shall let the Senator know in a moment after I have examined the appropriation bill to which I have just referred.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure they would not be paralleling each other's work. Another resolution is pending before a committee of this body which would in a sense provide for paralleling the work of the proposed commission. That is a resolution which I introduced calling for the appointment of a special senatorial committee to study the particular subject of unemployment and relief. I hope that resolution will be reported and that the Senate will make its own study of the subject.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I am familiar with the resolution to which the Senator has just referred. I agree that there may be justification for such an investigation as would be authorized by the Senate resolution submitted by the Senator from New Mexico. I think there is no justification for the investigation provided by the pending joint resolution for the reason that, in my long experience in the House and Senate, I do not recall any investigation made by commissions composed of persons outside of Congress that ever succeeded in bringing about the enactment of legislation by the Congress.

I think any investigation made of the subject should be made by a committee of the House or a committee of the Senate. Then, whatever report is filed, there will be somebody in the Congress to fight for the adoption of the report and for the enactment of legislation recommended by the committee; but when an outside commission is appointed, as proposed in the pending joint resolution, we do not get such results. Looking back through the years, we know, based on our past experience, that such a commission would meet and have experts and hold hearings and eventually file a report, and in due time someone would move that the report be printed as a public document, but no Member of the Senate or the House would ever read it. It would be buried in the document room.

The Senator has pending a resolution which I think contains real merit. I have talked with the Senator about it and believe that at the proper time it should be adopted. It would provide for a comprehensive investigation of the entire subject. By following that plan I believe results would be obtained. I do not believe we will get any such results under the joint resolution now pending.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I quite appreciate what the Senator from South Carolina has said about my resolution, which is now pending before a Senate committee. I hope that resolution will be reported soon and will be considered by the Senate and that under it a committee will be appointed to study the subject for the purpose of recommending legislation. However, I know that things do not always work out the way we want them to. The particular resolution to which the Senator has referred was introduced in the Senate during the last session by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. It is really his thought, and it is a good one. That resolution passed the Senate but died in the House of Representatives.

The other resolution to which the Senator from South Carolina referred was also introduced in the Senate during the last session, but it died on the calendar and was not passed. Neither resolution was passed at the last session.

I should like to have the Senate permit the pending joint resolution to be passed today in order that it may go to the other House.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. May I ask the Senator if he will not say, as to the Senate resolution which he introduced, that he came before the committee of which I happen to be chairman and said that he did not want his resolution considered and reported until the joint resolution which we are now discussing had been disposed of?

Mr. HATCH. That is quite correct. I have been holding back my Senate resolution hoping that the Senator from South Carolina would join with me in reporting it and having it adopted if by any chance the pending joint resolution should be defeated.

Mr. BYRNES. I assure the Senator that I intended to join with him because I believe that is the way the thing should be done. I think we should wait until after we have passed upon the bill which provides funds for relief, because during the consideration of that measure in committee and on the floor of the Senate questions may arise which the Senator would want to have fully covered by his resolution of investigation. I assure him, as I have heretofore, that I agree with him in the objective he is seeking. I am in favor of the adoption of a resolution along the lines of the one he has submitted providing for a Senate investigation, and I hope it will be a thorough one and that as a result of such an investigation much-needed legislation may be enacted.

Mr. HATCH. Then, the Senator from South Carolina agrees with me that the question of unemployment and relief is the most important question before the people of the United States at this time?

Mr. BYRNES. I certainly agree with the Senator, and because I agree with him I sincerely hope that he and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], who is also deeply interested in the matter, will not have the investigation conducted by a commission to be appointed by the President, because in years past we have considered that course to be the graveyard of legislation. Whenever we reached a deadlock and could not move, we would adopt a resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report at some future time.

I think the resolution should be adopted providing a Senate investigation. Then there would be a report under it on the date of the convening of the next session of Congress in January 1938, and action could be had at the next session if action is deemed necessary and wise.

Mr. HATCH. We are not divided at all in our thought about the matter. May I complete the question to the Senator which I intended to propound? If unemployment and relief constitute the most important question confronting us, why should not the Congress conduct its own investigation under the other resolution which we have been discussing, and at the same time have the executive department, which has a heavy responsibility with this problem, conduct its investigation through such commission as that provided in the pending joint resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. The executive department must necessarily rely upon the investigations and the reports made by the officials of the executive department who are daily engrossed with this problem. Being engrossed with it every day, they know a thousand times more about it than some persons who would be appointed to serve temporarily upon such commission as is provided by the pending joint resolution. If such a commission were appointed, it would call in the directors and the officials of the existing bureaus for their recommendations. I think those officials should be required to come before a congressional committee instead of before a commission, when we know, judging from the history of such investigations, that the Members of Congress would never read the report of a commission composed of persons outside of the Congress. That is my fear. I may be wrong but that is my opinion.

Mr. HATCH. I think there is much merit in the commission plan, and much good might come from the study it would make. I hardly think, under the present order of business, that I should continue at length, as I should like to do, to discuss the pending joint resolution. I do not know whether objection has been made to its present consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have not made an objection; but I find that we have already appropriated $784,000 to gather statistics which include reports of unemployment. I have the hearings here; but, while I have not found the place, my recollection is that under that appropriation the Department of Labor prepares and furnishes bulletins on unemployment. I do not think another organization ought to be employed to do the very same thing. I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken in the purpose of the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from New Mexico will let the resolution go over until the next time the calendar is called. Meantime I shall look into it, and shall be glad to take up the matter on its merits.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] is equally interested.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, before introducing a similar joint resolution at the last session I went into the subject very carefully. It was my feeling at that time that it would be impossible for a Senate committee to devote the necessary time to an investigation of this character; that is would take such a long period of time, and require such close attention and study of the subject, that it would be imposing too much upon a Senate committee. Therefore, I have provided for the appointment of a commission. It seems to me that in a matter of this kind the President should appoint an impartial commission of outstanding citizens of the country who would give their time to the subject, and give it thorough study, and not permit it to be slurred over by a careless examination and investigation of the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator knows that the Department of Labor makes a very careful study of unemployment, and submits reports regularly in reference to the number of unemployed in the country.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Montana and all other Senators will readily recall the very great dispute that has existed over the figures of the employment of labor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CLARK. They will also recall the almost weekly conflicts that existed during the last unfortunate Republican administration when Mr. Doak was Secretary of Labor, and the present Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, was Labor Commissioner of New York, or was holding an office of equivalent title. Almost weekly the United States Department of Labor would give out a statement as to the number of unemployed in the United States; and the same day or the next day the New York State Department of Labor, under the direction of Miss Perkins, would give out a statement saying that the United States Department of Labor did not know what it was talking about, or else was deliberately falsifying the facts, and give out an entirely different figure.

I understand that the purpose of the joint resolution of the Senator from Montana and the Senator from New Mexico is to have the President of the United States set up a commission armed with sufficient authority over all agencies concerned, both National and State, to arrive at the facts as correctly as they are humanly ascertainable. Therefore, in view of the constant dispute as to this matter which in the past has gone on between the Department of Labor of the United States and various other agencies, both State and National, it seems to me it is not a valid objection to the joint resolution introduced by the Senators from Montana and New Mexico that statistics on the subject have been gathered by Government agencies.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield——

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that this joint resolution contemplates a study of the types of relief. On the one hand we have advocates of work relief. On the other hand, there are many persons in the United States who contend that work relief should be stopped. Some insist on a long-range public-works program. Others contend for strictly a dole system. Mr. Hopkins says that more than 7,000,000 persons must now be provided for by relief. Other agencies dispute that number. Will the statistics from the Labor Department settle those questions, or any part of them? The purpose of this proposed study is to go into the whole subject and try to find out what is the best and most workable plan of handling the question of unemployment and relief.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have stated my view. I simply desire to reiterate it.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and I have the same views on this subject. We differ as to method. I do not believe any headway would be made by passing a joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint a commission to make an investigation of this kind. I do not believe Congress would read the report of the commission. I think from 6 months to a year would elapse before we would receive a report from them. I want a Senate investigation. I desire to have a resolution adopted by the Senate providing for the consideration of all matters connected with the subject. Before this session of Congress adjourns I intend to have reported from my committee, if I have any influence with the committee, a resolution providing for an investigation in which all the questions involved will be considered.

The Senator from New Mexico says he does not believe the joint resolution would be passed by the House.

Mr. HATCH. I said it might not be.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator could say more than that. Even if it should be, I think the Senator will agree that a committee of the Senate would have greater power than would a commission; and I cannot agree with him that any commission appointed by the President would devote more time to the investigation than would a Senate committee.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. In one second.

Committees of the Senate charged with the duty of investigating questions of this kind have invariably performed that duty in a splendid manner. Whenever the President appoints a commission, he must take the members of the commission from men who are engaged in business. We have no reason to believe they would leave their business. I think they might ask the directors of the various organizations to suggest men who would make the investigation for them. I do not want it made by them. I want the investigation made by the Senate, or by men who are appointed by a Senate committee. The Members of the Senate represent those who hold the views suggested by the Senator as to work relief, and those who hold different views. We represent all views, and we can give an opportunity to persons having all views to come before the committee.

Because of those facts, Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the Senator objects, will he yield to me for just one question?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to ask a question in all good faith, and without any argumentative tendency in the question, because the discussion of the subject this afternoon has been a very interesting one. There is pending before the Commerce Committee a bill introduced by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], approaching this subject from a slightly different angle. I should be very glad to have the opinion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] as to the efficacy of this manner of approach, because it is coming before a subcommittee of which I am the acting chairman.

The Senator from Connecticut proposes to take a census of unemployment in this country in what would seem to be a relatively simple manner, and without very much expense to the Government. He proposes to do it in a manner analogous to the registration for the draft during the World War, by using the agencies already established—the employment and reemployment services—for registration purposes. It may be objected to such a method of approach that a great many persons are not registered; but the Senator from Connecticut attaches to his bill a proviso that no one who is out of employment, and who shall not have registered in the manner provided by the bill, shall be entitled to any relief, or shall be given any Government employment.

Since two or three plans have already been presented here, I should be glad to have the expression of the Senator from South Carolina on the efficacy of such a plan as that.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the bill to which reference has been made. I certainly agree, however, that no one has yet suggested anything which I think is worthy of serious consideration as to why we should not have a census of the unemployed. We have estimates reaching all the way from 4,000,000 to 9,000,000. I cannot conceive of any sound reason for saying that a definition cannot be reached as to who should be classified among the unemployed.

We can reach a definition; and while I am not familiar with the bill referred to, it could be enacted and the investigation could be made without interfering in any way with what the Senator from New Mexico has in mind, as to what should be done with the big question as to direct relief or work relief in the years to come. The director of W. P. A. says relief is to be permanent. I think it is for the Congress to say whether or not it is to be permanent; and in order to say it we should have every opportunity to consider the question of relief in its various phases. I am not willing to say that it must be permanent; and until I am convinced of it I am willing to join any committee of the Senate in making an investigation to determine the facts of the matter.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for just a moment more, I am certain he agrees with me that before Congress can properly and intelligently determine the course which it desires to pursue it must know the number who are out of employment and employable at any time.

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. CLARK. That number does not rest on estimates from any Government official. It should rest on facts. Does not the Senator believe that such a plan as that suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] would certainly at least result in ascertaining the number of persons who are out of employment and who desire to be employed? If it be assumed that some persons would not register, it can also be assumed that they do not desire employment.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say it is the only plan suggested which ever has appealed to me. If any other plan were resorted to, by the time the statistics were assembled the whole situation would have changed. If we resort to the plan suggested by the Senator from Missouri, we shall know within a few weeks exactly the number of unemployed. No department of the Government is now making such an investigation. It is the unofficial advisers of the Government who are telling us the number of the unemployed, and we are acting upon their statements.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before the objection is made may I say one word?

Mr. BYRNES. I withhold the objection.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that I am somewhat familiar with the bill introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and I expect to attend the hearings on the bill and see what develops.

There are several other bills which have been suggested, and, as the Senator from Missouri knows, many plans have been proposed here and there. Everybody has a remedy for this disease, as we may call it, for it is a disease.

The purpose of the investigation, whether by a commission or by a committee of the Senate, is to arrive at the best possible plan, and let Congress lay down the pattern for the executive department to cut its cloth to fit.

The Senator from South Carolina has very graciously said today that he will report the other resolution, and I am confident that we will have some sort of an investigation ordered before this session of the Congress shall be adjourned. That is what I want. I should like to have the resolution the Senator from Montana and I have proposed adopted, if it could be done, but I am very grateful for the sentiment that has been expressed here today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the resolution will be passed over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House, having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 5478) to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period, returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

RENEWAL OF GOVERNMENT TERM POLICIES—VETO MESSAGE

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, at this time I call up the veto message of the President on House bill 5478, an act to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period. The veto message was acted upon by the House of Representatives today.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum, before the message is read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	King	Radcliffe
Andrews	Connally	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Lee	Robinson
Austin	Davis	Lewis	Russell
Bailey	Dieterich	Logan	Schwartz
Bankhead	Donahey	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Duffy	Lundeen	Sheppard
Berry	Ellender	McAdoo	Steiwer
Bilbo	Frazier	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Black	George	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Gillette	McKellar	Townsend
Borah	Green	McNary	Truman
Bridges	Guffey	Minton	Tydings
Brown, Mich.	Harrison	Moore	Vandenberg
Brown, N. H.	Hatch	Murray	Van Nuys

Burke	Hitchcock	Nye	Wheeler
Byrd	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Byrnes	Hughes	Pepper
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Caraway	Johnson, Colo.	Pope

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I desire to reannounce the absence of Senators as announced earlier in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair lays before the Senate a veto message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 5478, an act to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period.

The War Risk Insurance Act, which authorized the writing of life insurance by the Government for the members of the military and naval forces, stated that "not later than 5 years after the termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, the term insurance shall be converted", thus clearly manifesting the intent that term insurance was to be temporary in character and of limited duration. This pronouncement put all applicants on notice that within 5 years after the declared ending of the World War it was expected that, so far as Government life insurance was concerned, they were to have properly planned their permanent insurance program. By amendment to the law the 5-year period was extended for 1 year, so that on July 2, 1927, yearly renewable term insurance ceased except for a few types of cases.

The kind of insurance to which term insurance was to be converted was founded upon a mutual basis, the Government simply administering the system for the benefit of the policyholders. Premiums received on account of such insurance were for deposit in the Treasury in a trust account separated from and not commingled with the general funds of the United States.

When the last date fixed for converting term policies approached, it was argued that many veterans were not then able to do so, and the law was further amended authorizing for issuance a special 5-year term policy providing for automatic change to a converted form at the end of the 5-year period. Subsequently, in 1932, when many of these policies expired as term insurance, it was contended that the personal affairs of some veterans were still so unsettled as not to permit them to convert the term insurance they continued to carry, and again the law was amended granting another 5 years' grace. The bill before me would provide for a fourth postponement.

It is not believed that any further delay in the adoption of an insurance program is warranted or ultimately will prove profitable to the individuals concerned. The lower initial premium rates on term-insurance policies are beguiling, and the holders thereof should realize that the time must ultimately come when such charges, which keep ever increasing, will become so great as to compel numbers of veterans to drop their insurance when it will probably be most needed.

Furthermore, enactment of this proposed legislation would constitute a breach of faith on the part of the Federal Government toward the large body of converted policyholders contributing to the Government life-insurance fund, and on two counts: (1) the small group of term-insurance policyholders would continue to carry their life insurance at considerably lower premium rates than the great majority of converted policyholders are allowed; and (2) the reserves which have been built up almost entirely by the converted policyholders would continue to be drawn off to meet undue losses sustained in carrying the low-premium term policies.

It should be kept firmly in mind that the veterans of the World War expected that the Federal Government, in setting a limiting date for the conversion of term insurance into some permanent form of life insurance, would stand by its declaration. Consequently at the close of the 5-year period allowed to veterans within which to convert their term insurance, 423,557 had converted to some permanent form of insurance in a total sum of $1,773,075,664. In many cases, veterans made considerable sacrifices, either reducing the amount of insurance carried or paying the increased premiums required to maintain the original temporary war insurance on a permanent lifetime basis. When legislation was subsequently enacted and reenacted, permitting a relatively small preferred group who had not seen fit to make the same sacrifices as the converted policyholders have made, to extend their temporary insurance at the wartime low premium rates, an unwarranted disservice was rendered to the several hundred thousand who had placed their insurance on a permanent basis.

Of the present policyholders over 85 percent have converted their insurance to whole life or endowment forms, while the reserve which the converted policyholders have been chiefly instrumental in creating is being used to supplement the inadequate premiums paid by term-insurance policyholders in order to pay the extra losses on the policies of the latter group. It is pertinent here to observe that at no time has the loss ratio on term policies been down to the level of the American Experience Table of Mortality according to which the premiums are computed, the most favorable year showing a loss ratio of 3.89 percent above that table, and in one year it went as high as 32.44 percent above the table. In other words, had the accounts of the term policyholders been kept separate from those of the converted policyholders their fund for the payment of losses would now be hopelessly insolvent. In contrast to the above loss experience on term policies, the highest loss ratio on converted policies in any year was only 84.03 percent of the expected loss under the American Experience Table of Mortality, and in one year it got down to as low as 53.52 percent. In other words, the loss ratios on term policies range from 45 to over 100 percent higher than those on the converted forms.

There appears to be no justification whatever for continuing to burden the converted policyholders with the excess losses of the term-insurance policyholders who, under the present law, without physical examination are privileged to convert their policies to whole life or endowment forms. It, therefore, should be obvious that the remaining less than 15 percent of the policyholders who continue to carry term insurance should now make provisions for the future by determining the amount which they can afford to pay as insurance premiums and plan accordingly.

For these reasons I am withholding my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 28, 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement concerning the President's veto of this bill.

The legislation, of course, is not new, as the President points out, and this particular bill, which was introduced both in the House and in the Senate, passing in the House bill form, simply extends for a second or third period of 5 years the 5-year term insurance carried by certain veterans of the World War.

There are about 23,000 of these veterans. Perhaps not quite 23,000 veterans now hold unconverted term insurance which they have carried during the successive periods of one or two 5-year extensions. A great part of that insurance expires today, June 1, or at least a considerable number of the policies will expire with the end of this day. More than 85 percent of the veterans of the World War who had life insurance have converted their 5-year term policies into regular or other forms of Government insurance. None of the insurance is payable out of the Treasury. No form of Government life insurance is a charge on the Treasury. There is set up in the Treasury a United States Government life-insurance fund. The holders of the 5-year term-insurance policies constitute simply a group or subdivision of the holders of policies who are entitled to share in this fund.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Can the Senator state what part of the fund represents the term-insurance policies now in force?

Mr. GEORGE. In the hearings there is a statement from the Veterans' Administration tending to show what part represents the amounts paid in by the holders of 5-year term insurance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield; yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Whatever that amount may be, whether it be great or small, if permission is not given to extend these term-insurance policies, all of that which has been paid in under the term-insurance policies will be forfeited to the Government of the United States, will it not?

Mr. GEORGE. It will be, unless it shall go to the other policyholders, and I am coming to that now.

The President, of course, raises certain questions in his veto message with respect to the desirability of a term-insurance policy or contract. So far as that is concerned, it is not a practical matter. The fact is that less than 15 percent of the veterans of the World War who had the 5-year term-insurance contracts have converted their policies into other forms of contracts. But less than 15 percent of them still have the 5-year term policy. Many of those policies, as I have already said, will expire today unless this bill be passed.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] correctly points out what ought to be a conclusive answer to the President's argument in his veto message, which I think the President himself would recognize if it were brought to his attention. If these veterans, now advanced in age for the most part, many of them seriously disabled, were to be deprived of the benefit of this legislation by virtue of the President's veto, every dollar which they paid into the fund would go to the veterans who hold another form of contract or to the Treasury. Yet the principal argument advanced by the President is that to allow the renewal of these 5-year term policies will give a certain advantage to these disabled veterans, 23,000 of them in number, because, forsooth, the benefits coming to holders of other forms of Government insurance may be slightly reduced.

Beyond that, Mr. President, every veterans' organization, the holders of the 5-year term policies, and the holders of every form of insurance into which policies have been converted have appeared before the committees of the Senate and the House, and, without a dissent, have asked us to pass this legislation. So the veterans are not complaining. But the President points out the possible injustice which may result from the payments provided by the bill to these remaining 5-year term policyholders, now greatly reduced in number; he points out the possible injustice that may result, in that they will receive slightly more than they have paid into the insurance fund, which thereby will reduce the amount that holders of other forms of insurance policies may receive.

In any case the amount involved would be negligible, but to strike down this bill passed by the House and Senate is to take every penny that those veterans, who hold the 5-year term insurance policies, have paid into the fund, and that money will go either to the Government of the United States or to other policyholders.

Mr. President, the proposed legislation makes no charge on the Treasury. There is no complaint against this bill by any of the veterans who hold the converted insurance. As I have said, their representatives have appeared before the committees of Congress and have asked for such a law. The bill provides for a mere extension, it is true. It cannot be said that it will be greatly beneficial to those veterans now included within the 23,000 who are robust and who perhaps will live a great number of years. But everyone who has studied the facts knows that those 23,000 represent in large number seriously disabled veterans, and that their number is fast vanishing. To deny them the privilege of renewing their insurance is to do one of two things: Take away the only protection which they and their families have, or else force them greatly to reduce the amount of their insurance, because the evidence is unmistakable that they are not able to take the same amount of insurance in the converted form, which carries, of course, a higher rate.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Do not these policies carry a disability provision? That is to say, if a veteran becomes disabled he no longer has to pay his premium, and he becomes entitled to the benefits under the disability provision?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly; if he is totally and permanently disabled, and some of them are.

Mr. MINTON. He does not necessarily have to be totally and permanently disabled.

Mr. GEORGE. Some of them are totally and permanently disabled and they no longer have to pay their premiums. In other words, their policies have matured.

Mr. MINTON. If the veterans the Senator is referring to are totally and permanently disabled, as he represents, then they are no longer liable to pay even the premiums, but they draw benefits under their policies.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I did not represent that they were totally and permanently disabled, but I said that many of them are seriously disabled, and many of them, of course, are not insurable.

Mr. President, I now call attention to another fact. This bill provides for the renewal of the insurance for a period of 5 years, not, however, at the old rate, but at the rate applicable to the advanced age of the veteran.

There would seem to be no valid reason why this bill should not pass, notwithstanding the President's veto, which, of course, we respectfully recognize.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, time after time, extend the period in which the veterans may convert their insurance? If, as a matter of right and propriety, they should have the privilege of converting it at any time, why not repeal any limitation whatever? The message states that four times there have been extensions made.

Mr. GEORGE. I presume the Senator has probably voted for all the other extensions?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I presume I did.

Mr. GEORGE. And I presume the Senator ought to be able to answer his own argument.

Mr. ROBINSON. I presume I voted for this bill when it passed; but I am asking the Senator now about the consistency of the proposal to override a veto that is based apparently on sound reasons.

Mr. GEORGE. I think I will be able to explain it. After it was found advisable to convert the 5-year term-insurance policies, provision was made for their conversion. The United States life-insurance fund was created, into which all premiums were paid, and, under the plan pursued by the Government, more than 85 percent of the term-insurance policyholders have converted. So the problem has been constantly solving itself, to some extent, of course, by death and to some extent by veterans becoming permanently and totally disabled, and by that process maturing the policies.

When the first period during which the veterans were allowed to convert their policies expired it was deemed wise by the Congress to grant another extension, and so on down until now, when the number has reached the comparatively small figure of less than 23,000 veterans. Necessarily, they are the veterans who are the least able to make any conversion and who if they make any conversion at all must take a very greatly reduced policy; otherwise, they will not be able to carry it; and they thereby diminish the security which they have and the protection which their families have.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Georgia, as chairman of the subcommittee on Veterans Affairs of the Finance Committee, has given very great study and attention to all veterans' questions. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he recalls in any of the hearings or at any time during the consideration of this bill or similar bills any protests which have been made by the veterans who have converted their insurance or by any representatives of the veterans who have converted their policies along the lines of the President's veto message?

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that not only has no protest been made to the committee of the Senate, but during all the years when these term policies have been extended no protest has reached the committee or any member of the committee, so far as I have ever been advised, from any veteran who has converted his insurance from the term form to the other form of insurance.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, of course, is familiar, if he will permit me a moment further, with the fact that, so far as the great veterans' organizations of the United States are concerned, they are certainly not within the control or influence of the veterans who still have term insurance and who are affected by this bill and any benefits it may confer, because such veterans represent a very small group who have held on from year to year by the skin of their teeth, so to speak, and who for the most part are unable to avail themselves of the privileges of the great veterans' organizations because they have not the money with which to pay the dues. So in that regard at least the veterans' organizations of the United States are not speaking for any special interest, but they are speaking for those whom they feel bound by their own constitutions to attempt to protect, namely, the veterans who are unable to protect themselves.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Missouri is entirely correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it correct to assume that those who carry term insurance pay a smaller premium than those who convert their policies into regular life insurance?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the reason, it may be assumed, that the right to convert has not been availed of, because the term insurance is cheaper?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I think the Senator is wrong there. The right has been availed of in more than 85 percent of the cases.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that, but there are 15 percent——

Mr. GEORGE. Less than 15 percent who have not been able to take advantage of the opportunity afforded.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are 15 percent who, while the right has been existing and has been extended from time to time, have not availed themselves of the privilege of converting their insurance.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. The reason for it, I assume, is that it has been less expensive to carry term insurance.

Mr. GEORGE. That is entirely correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to follow that with another question as determining my own attitude on the passage of this bill over the President's veto. Is the fund sufficient to meet the obligations that are imposed upon it by all classes of insurance?

Mr. GEORGE. According to my information, the fund is sufficient, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas, but the benefits, over and beyond the principal, which may be payable to the other type of insurance policyholders may be slightly diminished.

Mr. ROBINSON. To the extent that the premiums paid by those holding term insurance are less than the premiums paid by those who own converted policies, there may be a reduction of the dividends to be paid to the policyholders of the converted insurance.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true; that is the contention, at least.

Mr. ROBINSON. But in no event is any portion of the premiums or dividends to be taken from the Treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. In no event.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the Senator has stated, as I understand him, that the organizations representing the converted policyholders, representing all the veterans, have not only made no protest but have advocated the legislation.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. While, of course, the rate on the ordinary term policy, whether carried by an old-line insurance company or by the Government, as in this case, is less than the rate on ordinary life insurance, the benefits under the latter are correspondingly greater. The term policyholder receives nothing except the naked protection during the 5 years the policy exists.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just one other statement. During the course of the discussion remarks have been made that indicate there is something unfair in receiving term-insurance permiums and then permitting the policies to expire at the end of the term. The object, of course, of the term insurance is to limit the premiums, and those who take that form of insurance understand from the beginning that their policies will expire at the end of the term.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true; but the point is that if the bill be not passed the holders of the term insurance, to the extent that they have added something to the insurance fund, will lose entirely.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not quite correct, for, under the same theory, one who takes term insurance for 10 years and pays a premium based on the proper tables cannot complain if he happens to live beyond the 10 years that his beneficiaries are unable to collect the insurance and he has not secured anything by it. He has merely had the insurance during that time.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly; he has had naked insurance.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the Government could not provide term insurance, take the premiums for the term, pay those who died in the meantime on the basis of their term insurance, and then reimburse those who happen to be fortunate enough to live beyond the term. No insurance plan based on such a policy could ever survive anywhere at any time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Georgia. The veteran who converted his original term policy received a contract, did he not, from the Government to the effect that there would go into the reserve for his policy all of the earnings of the insurance organization. What we are doing, if we pass this bill over the President's veto, is to take money out of the fund to which the man with a converted policy has a right under his contract to look, and to give it to someone who had a definite term insurance expiring at a certain time. So, while we are not taking anything from the Government, we are taking it from men who have converted their insurance in accordance with the rules of the Government and who had a right to look to the fund thereby created.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Colorado has not an entirely correct understanding of it. All Government insurance is now supported by the insurance fund and every policy represented or having any interest in it is in effect a mutual insurance policy. It has not the rigidity the Senator presupposes which ordinarily obtains in the case of the old line life insurance fund.

Mr. President, if I may be permitted to conclude——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. There is no question of mutual insurance features entering into a term policy, because there is nothing to give there except insurance.

Mr. GEORGE. The term "policyholders" simply constitute a subdivision in this general insurance fund, and the whole scheme partakes largely of mutual insurance.

Mr. MINTON. But they pay a premium based only upon naked insurance.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I understand that. I suppose the Senator is opposed to the bill.

Mr. MINTON. I do not know whether I am or not. I am one of the veterans who converted his insurance in the beginning, and instead of paying $50 a year, as I would have been called upon to pay under a term policy, I pay $180 a year. I understood when I was converting my insurance that I was getting that kind of a contract; and I understood if I did not convert it I would keep a term insurance contract and when the term expired my insurance would expire, and I was allowed a short time in order to convert that kind of insurance.

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly true.

Mr. President, I want to make clear to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] the situation as I understand it. The President has advanced two reasons for the veto: First, that the insurance is carried by the term policyholders at a lower cost, which is true, and that they have only naked insurance unless Congress should renew it for 5 years and perhaps again for 5 years; secondly, that the amount paid in by the holders of the 5-year term insurance will not take care of the losses under the 5-year policies. Granting that to be true, it would work some reduction in the benefits which would ultimately be received by holders of the converted insurance.

It is quite true, as the Senator from Arkansas has pointed out, that when one takes a 5-year policy and lives out the 5-year period, and at the end thereof has not passed away, he has no further interest in the premiums paid. Exactly; and every dime of the premium paid by holders of the 5-year term insurance will inure to the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] and others who have taken the converted form of insurance. I say as a matter of argument that one stands almost on a parity with the other.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. What has the Senator to say about the question raised by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], namely, that the Government entered into a contract with the holders of the insurance policies? What has the Senator to say about the right of the contractors to ignore the contracts?

Mr. GEORGE. I have stated to the Senator that Government insurance is a type of mutual insurance, and these policyholders are simply one division in that mutual scheme, as I understand it.

I might answer the Senator in another way. Let us suppose these 23,000 helpless veterans obtain an extension of their insurance, and let us suppose that at the end of the 5-year extension it would require $100,000 to make whole those who hold their converted insurance, to put them in the same position they would have been otherwise, is there a Senator who would not gladly say, "We will stand for that appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States"?

Those who hold converted insurance—

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that is an answer. I have been listening with great interest to the Senator's argument. He is making very clear his position. But what he says now in effect is that, admitting the legislation breaches the contract which the Government entered into, at some future time the Congress will undo the breach which is now made, by making an appropriation to reimburse those who lose. Why not do that now? Why does not this bill do it?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator misapprehends my position. I said I would do it and I apprehend that any future Congress would do the same thing. I simply repeat that I would do it. I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas again that there is no breach of contract in any moral sense, in in any actual sense. Here is an insurance fund, and every policy or contract standing against it is in its nature a mutual policy. Here is one group represented in the fund whose technical legal rights are expiring. They are expiring today. But it is within the power of Congress to say, "We recognize the moral right that these disabled men, who, if they take any insurance whatsoever, must take a greatly reduced amount of insurance, and, so believing and so concluding, we will enact a law to extend the insurance for 5 years."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Am I to understand the Senator to say that representatives of the other groups had appeared before the committee asking that such a law be enacted?

Mr. GEORGE. Representatives of all veterans' organizations.

Mr. WHEELER. So that representatives of all the groups which have an interest in this fund appeared asking that the legislation be enacted?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator correctly understood me; and, so far as I know, there has been no protest by any veterans' organization.

Mr. WHEELER. Then, there could be no violation of the contract if the representatives of those holding the contract have come in and asked that it be changed in this respect and the other groups who are a part of the contract insurance system want it done.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MINTON. But half the veterans of the country do not belong to a veterans' organization; so they could not have been represented.

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose the organizations are representative of the veterans.

Mr. President, I have just one further statement to make. The House, by the significant vote of 368 to 13, overrode the veto. I respectfully submit that the veto message should be overridden, because the justice and fairness of the situation are in behalf of the veterans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Constitution requires a yea-and-nay vote. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. If present, he would vote "yea." Since I myself wish to vote that way, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that on this question the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] are paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present, the Senators from Maine and Vermont would vote "yea", and the Senator from Utah would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is necessarily absent. I am not advised how he would vote on this question, if present.

Mr. WHITE. I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HALE]. If present, he would vote as indicated by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] are paired on this question with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. If present, the Senators from South Carolina and Massachusetts would vote "yea", and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is detained because of illness. If present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is detained on important public business, and, if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are detained from the Senate on official business. If present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is detained because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 69, nays 12, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 69, the nays are 12. More than two-thirds of the Senators present having voted therefor, the bill is passed, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar.

JOHN ZARNICK

The bill (H. R. 3963) for the relief of John Zarnick was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAOMI LEE YOUNG

The bill (H. R. 4457) for the relief of Naomi Lee Young was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MINTON subsequently said: Mr. President, may we revert to House bill 4457, Calendar No. 638? That bill was passed before I could interpose an objection. I ask unanimous consent to revert to it and reconsider the action of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 638, House bill 4457, and asks unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. MINTON. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

NOAH SPOONER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3634) for the relief of Noah Spooner, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$250" and insert "$150", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Noah Spooner, of Quincy, Fla., the sum of $150 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages on account of personal injuries suffered by him when the car in which he was riding was struck by a Forest Service truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps near Wilma, Fla., on May 27, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2262) for the relief of Park B. Brandon and Robert G. Teer was announced as next in order.

Mr. MINTON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FIRST LT. R. G. CUNO

The bill (H. R. 856) for the relief of First Lt. R. G. Cuno was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. L. M'LACHLAN

The bill (S. 2399) for the relief of R. L. McLachlan was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. L. McLachlan, of Estill, Mo., the sum of $75 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages to him caused by the death of one purebred cow and one grade cow, known as abortion reactors, in connection with the Government's efforts to eradicate this disease from the dairy herds of Howard County, Mo.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2223) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Johnson and Joy Johnson, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MINTON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JACOB G. ACKERMAN

The bill (H. R. 5206) for the relief of Jacob G. Ackerman was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK CUBERO

The bill (H. R. 2554) for the relief of Frank Cubero was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. A. GROSS AND OTHERS

MINNIE D. HINES

The bill (H. R. 1759) for the relief of Minnie D. Hines was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUE F. MELTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2152) for the relief of Sue F. Melton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "act", to strike out the period, insert a colon and the words "Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and consider, when filed, the claim of Sue F. Melton on account of the death of her daughter, Mattie Ruth Melton, on March 10, 1934, as a result of personal injuries sustained while in the performance of her official duties as district home-demonstration agent of the United States Department of Agriculture, and to determine said claim upon its merits under the provisions of the said act: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN KELLEY

The bill (H. R. 1792) for the relief of John Kelley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM SULEM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2332) for the relief of William Sulem, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,482" and to insert "$232", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Sulem, of the township of Franklin, county of Somerset, and State of New Jersey, the sum of $232, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injuries received by and damages to property of the said William Sulem while operating his automobile on the public highway in New Brunswick, N. J., by the negligent operation of a United States Government mail truck, no. 9920, on said highway in said city while said truck was in the care and custody of and being driven by an operative of the United States Post Office Department under the orders of the postmaster in the United States Postal Service at New Brunswick, N. J.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS

The bill (S. 2334) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the following disbursing officers of the Army of the United States the amounts set opposite their names: Maj. E. T. Comegys, Finance Department, $80.54; Capt. J. H. Dickie, Finance Department, $13.30; Maj. E. F. Ely, Finance Department, $51.40; Maj. H. G. Foster, Finance Department, $36.86; and Lt. Col. F. M. Holmes, Finance Department, $39, said amounts being public funds for which they are accountable and which comprise minor errors in computation of pay and allowances due former members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and the Regular Army who are no longer in the service of the United States, and which amounts have been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amounts so credited shall be later charged against any individual other than the various payees.

SEC. 2. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Maj. H. G. Foster, Finance Department, $38, representing overpayment to a Civilian Conservation Corps enrollee for the months of August and September 1934: Provided, That there be refunded to Capt. William C. Carne, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, $9.50 on account of payment made by him on this account: Provided further, That no charge shall be raised against any individual other than the payee.

SEC. 3. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the disbursing officer of the Army making payment therefor the cost of shipment by rail of household goods and personal property belonging to Lt. Col. (then Maj.) Clarence M. McMurray, Infantry, on permanent change of station from Fort Lewis, Wash., to Newport, Ky., in December 1933 in a sum not exceeding $188.29.

SEC. 4. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of First Lt. W. J. Matteson, Corps of Engineers, $27,044, representing the amount paid by him for the construction of two additions to the Munitions Building under contracts with Birchett & Atkins, Inc., and the Charles H. Tompkins Co., and approved by the Secretary of War, which amount has been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States on the grounds that the appropriation expended was not available for construction in the District of Columbia: Provided, That any amounts collected from either of the contractors on account of these payments prior to the passage of this act shall be refunded to them.

SEC. 5. That in all cases where suit has been instituted in the courts against any disbursing officer covering items subsequently cleared by the action of the Congress or otherwise, such clearance of the principal amount shall be considered and construed as precluding the recovery of any interest charges from the disbursing officer arising from any items so cleared.

G. L. TARLTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1143) for the relief of G. L. Tarlton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$24,068.90" and to insert "$22,007.34", and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to G. L. Tarlton the sum of $22,007.34 in full settlement of his claim for increased cost of labor and material incurred in complying on and after August 10, 1933, with the President's Reemployment Agreement and/or the applicable approved code in the performance of his contract with the War Department dated February 15, 1933, for the construction of a lock at lock and dam no. 1, Barren River, Ky., and other work connected therewith: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to Senate bill 1143 and Senate bill 1144. It seems that the figures which were authorized and approved by the War Department in each case were accepted by the committee. Is that correct?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amounts represent what the War Department says these claimants are entitled to?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is quite true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRAZIER-DAVIS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1144) for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out

"$34,814" and to insert "$25,144.76", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Frazier-Davis Construction Co. the sum of $25,144.76 in full settlement of the claim of said company for increased cost of labor and material incurred in complying on and after August 10, 1933, with the President's Reemployment Agreement and/or the applicable approved code in the performance of its contract with the War Department dated January 19, 1933, for the construction of lock and dam no. 5, Green River, Ky.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. ARMSTRONG

The bill (S. 703) for the relief of John T. Armstrong was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of sections 15 and 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and consider, when filed, the claim of John T. Armstrong, of Havre de Grace, Md., for disability alleged to have been incurred by him during June 1930 while in the employment of the Chemical Warfare Service, Edgewood Arsenal, and to determine said claim upon its merits under the provisions of said act: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act.

JAMES A. LYONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1965) for the relief of James A. Lyons, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James A. Lyons the sum of $2,000, said sum representing the unpaid amount of a judgment for $6,000 ($4,000 of which has been paid by Safety Motor Transit Corporation), entered on January 25, 1936, in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia, at Roanoke, Va., in the case of "James A. Lyons against Thomas Bailey and Safety Motor Transit Corporation", against Thomas Bailey and Safety Motor Transit Corporation, for and on account of injuries alleged to have been sustained by him on the 21st day of June 1934 while a passenger on a public passenger-transportation vehicle, to wit, a bus of the said Safety Motor Transit Corporation when the said bus collided with an automobile driven by Thomas Bailey, investigator, Alcohol Tax Unit, Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, the said Thomas Bailey at the time of the collision being then and there engaged in the performance of his official duties as an internal-revenue officer, to wit, engaged in the pursuit of Leo C. Mays, otherwise known as Gummy Coleman, a known violator of the internal-revenue laws, who was then and there operating an automobile containing 120 gallons of un-tax-paid distilled spirits then and there being removed with intent to defraud the United States of the tax due thereon, which said removal was in violation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CONTRACTORS FOR DAMS AND LOCKS ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2565) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgments against the United States upon the claims of the several contractors for alleged excess costs incurred in the execution of their respective contracts, entered into since June 16, 1933, for the construction of locks and dams for the improvement of navigation on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, by reason of the Government having promulgated and enforced, as alleged, due, as alleged, to the national emergency and subsequent to the dates of the several contracts, rules, and regulations referred to in the several contracts and misinterpreted and wrongfully enforced or disregarded, as alleged, and rules and regulations not referred to in and inconsistent with the respective contracts, as alleged, which rules and regulations, the enforcement or disregard thereof, deprived the contractors of normal control of their personnel, as alleged, and further by reason of the Government having failed, as alleged, to supply qualified labor under the labor clauses of the respective contracts, resulting in excess costs, including general overhead and depreciation, to the said several contractors on their respective contracts, as alleged; the said judgment or decrees, if any, to be allowed notwithstanding the bars or defenses of any alleged settlement or adjustment heretofore made, res adjudicata, laches, or any provision of law to the contrary.

This act shall not be interpreted as raising any presumption or conclusion of fact or law but shall be held solely to provide for trial upon facts as may be alleged.

Review of such judgment may be had by either party in the same manner as is provided by law in other cases in such court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF BEEKEEPERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2147) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That section 2 of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(k) Section 8c (2) is amended by inserting after the words 'except the products of naval stores' the words 'and the products of honeybees' and after 'soybeans' the following: ', honeybees'."

"(l) Section 8c (6) is amended by inserting after 'soybeans and their products', the following: 'honeybees'."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, this bill is merely an amendment of the law to enable bee raisers to enter into a marketing agreement and thus enjoy the same privilege accorded others. The provision was inadvertently omitted from the bill passed a few days ago amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, when the Senate was considering the bill to which the Senator from New Jersey has referred, there were two amendments which had been reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

One of the amendments had to do with permitting beekeepers to enter into marketing agreements, the other had reference to the canning of fruits and vegetables.

The amendments were objected to on the ground that they would result in delaying the enactment of the bill then pending, and would probably cause unnecessary delay in relieving the milk producers of the Nation. I stated at that time that I would introduce a bill to amend the law so as to incorporate a clause providing that beekeepers should have the right to enter into agreements if they saw fit to do so. I called up before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the bill of the Senator from New Jersey and had it amended so as to take care of the beekeepers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

OMAHA-COUNCIL BLUFFS MISSOURI RIVER BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2156, to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes. The bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce earlier in the day. It is a local bill, an amendment to a bridge bill reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce for a bridge between Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa. The Senators from both Iowa and Nebraska are unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill is not on the calendar, having been reported since the calendar was printed?

Mr. BURKE. It was reported today, unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the War Department has approved the bill?

Mr. BURKE. The War Department approves the bill, and it is approved also by the Bureau of Public Roards of the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "bridge", to insert "at or near Farnum Street, authorized"; on page 1, line 4, to strike out "which is hereby recognized as having been already commenced"; on page 1, line 10, after "1938", to insert: "It is hereby recognized that construction has been heretofore commenced under the provisions of section 3 of said act as extended, and said bridge may be constructed at any point at or near Farnum Street, irrespective of the site of the commencement hereby recognized, subject to the approval of the War Department and the approval of either of the highway departments of the States of Iowa or Nebraska, all in accordance with and subject to the provisions of said act approved June 10, 1930, as extended, and as amended by this act", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge at or near Farnam Street, authorized under the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States", approved June 10, 1930, as extended, is hereby further extended 1 year from June 10, 1938.

It is hereby recognized that construction has been heretofore commenced under the provisions of section 3 of said act as extended, and said bridge may be constructed at any point at or near Farnam Street, irrespective of the site of the commencement hereby recognized, subject to the approval of the War Department and the approval of either of the highway departments of the States of Iowa or Nebraska, all in accordance with and subject to the provisions of said act approved June 10, 1930, as extended, and as amended by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, page 2, on line 1, to strike out "the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, created by section 3 of said act of 1930, and any", and insert the word "Any"; on line 4, after the words "operated by" to strike out "said board" and insert "The Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees", so as to make the secton read:

SEC. 2. Any bridge constructed or to be constructed or owned and operated by The Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees under said act of 1930, as herein amended, shall be deemed a Federal instrumentality for facilitating interstate commerce, improving the postal service, and providing for military and other governmental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, page 2, line 25, after the word "indebtedness", to strike out the words "and the" and insert a period and the word "The"; on page 3, line 16, after the word "bridge", to strike out the comma and the word "and", and insert a colon and "Provided further, That the power granted in this section with respect to acquisition and purchase of any such bridge shall have been approved by the highway departments of the States of Iowa Bridge Board of Trustees until the amount to be paid for the acquisition and purchase of any such bridge shall have been approved by the highway departments of the States of Iowa and Nebraska"; and on line 20, after the word "thereof", to strike out the period and insert a colon and "Provided further, That the rates of toll to be charged for transit over bridges operated by said board shall at all times be subject to regulation by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That in addition to the powers granted by said act of 1930, said The Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees may acquire and purchase and thereafter operate any other bridge or bridges (including approaches) over the Missouri River within 1 mile of the site of the bridge to be constructed by said board at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., as referred to in said act of 1930, all in the manner provided by this act and said act of 1930, it being contemplated that all bridges owned and operated by said board will be so financed that the obligations incurred will be amortized and the travel over such bridge or bridges will be made free of tolls at the same time. It shall be obligatory upon said board that all toll revenues after paying the reasonable and proper charges of operation and maintenance and the accruing interest on the outstanding indebtedness be applied to the retirement of such indebtedness. The rate or rates of toll for crossing any bridge now or hereafter constructed which abuts upon or enters into the corporate limits of both the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, shall not be reduced below the rate or rates now in effect on existing bridges so long as any indebtedness of said board for the account of any bridge or bridges shall be outstanding and unpaid. To pay the cost of any such bridge or bridges so purchased the board may either separately, or in conjunction with the financing of any other bridge, issue bonds as provided in said act of 1930 as herein amended: Provided, That said board shall operate each of the bridges under its control and charge and collect such rates of toll for transit over same as will not reflect upon or impair the earnings of any other bridge to such extent as to adversely affect any outstanding bonds which said board may have issued for account of such other bridge: Provided further, That the power granted in this section with respect to acquisition and purchase of any other bridge shall not be exercised by said The Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees until the amount to be paid for the acquisition and purchase of any such bridge shall have been approved by the highway departments of the States of Iowa and Nebraska. The construction of no competing bridge shall hereafter be authorized, the operation of which will adversely affect such outstanding bonds, unless provision is otherwise made for the payment thereof: Provided further, That the rates of toll to be charged for transit over bridges operated by said board shall at all times be subject to regulation by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 15, insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That in addition to the powers granted by said act of 1930, as extended, the said Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge board of trustees, its legal representatives and assigns, are hereby granted power and authority to acquire, condemn, occupy, and possess and use real estate and other property acquired for or devoted to a public use for park or other purposes for the State of Nebraska, for the State of Iowa, or any governmental or political subdivision thereof, or any person or corporation which real estate or other property may be acquired for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and highways leading thereto, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, to renumber the section, so as to read:

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AID FOR SCHOOLS IN HAZARDOUS CONDITION

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Concurrent

Resolution 11, a measure whose purpose is to ameliorate or eliminate conditions hazardous to the lives of students.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11), submitted by Mr. SCHWELLENBACH on May 3, 1937, which was read, as follows:

Whereas, in response to Senate Resolution 97, the Administrator of Public Works has filed with the Senate the list of pending non-Federal projects for the construction of schools to ameliorate or eliminate conditions which are hazardous to the lives of the students; and

Whereas there remains in the Public Works Administration revolving fund an ample sum, without further appropriation, to make the necessary loans and grants involved in such application: Be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States and the Administrator of Public Works be requested to grant such of the applications above described as may meet the engineering and financial requirements of the Public Works Administration, without requiring that the applicant have on hand prior to the granting of the application all of the funds necessary for the completion of the project, and without requiring that the sum or sums granted to the applicant be expended exclusively for relief labor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will yield for that purpose, it is my intention to ask the Senate to transact some further business, and then to move to take a recess until Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

PROOF OF PERMANENT ECONOMIC PROGRESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is gratifying to note from numerous press reports, editorials, and other information that there is steady progress toward prosperity in the economic affairs of the country. I have before me a number of editorials and news reports which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The recovery in the prices of agricultural products has been phenomenal. One of the headlines of the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, May 23, 1937, reads:

Corn reaches 12-year peak.

The New York Herald Tribune of May 28, 1937, quotes cash prices for corn (no. 2, yellow) in the primary markets at $1.57⅞ per bushel. We can easily recall that the price of corn during the depression, when it could be sold instead of being burned for fuel, was approximately 18 cents per bushel.

In the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, May 23, we find, under Minneapolis prices of wheat, May wheat quoted at $1.41 a bushel, as compared with a price of 31 cents a bushel in 1932. Wheat in recent months has sold as high as $1.60 a bushel.

I ask that a number of press clippings and editorials be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the clippings and editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Times of May 17, 1937]

BUSINESS BOOMS IN IOWA

An impressive record of business recovery in Iowa is contained in the annual report on sales-tax receipts as made public by Chairman Louis Roddewig, of the State tax commission. Collections through the 2-percent transactions levy for the 12-month period ending April 1 indicated gross business of $730,000,000, an increase of $58,000,000 over the previous year.

State income from this source increased from $11,480,121 in 1935 to $14,606,929 for the year ending April 1, 1937. The largest sum came from the group handling food, which includes restaurants and groceries, the revenue being $2,573,998; while general merchandise yielded $2,495,000.

While the greatly enlarged receipts record higher prices for many commodities, they reveal also an impressive gain in the volume of trade arising from increased farm income, expanded pay rolls, and a higher level of wages and salaries.

While comparative figures for the boom years of 1928 and 1929 are lacking, a business turn-over of $730,000,000 indicates that recovery has been general in Iowa. It primarily reflects the greatly improved status of agriculture, since this is the basic source of wealth in a large part of Iowa.

With farm surpluses removed and crop curtailment sharply modified, a continuation of prosperity is promised "the State where the tall corn grows", with bumper crops at high prices in prospect.

[From the Winston-Salem (N. C.) Journal of May 13, 1937]

BACK TO TOP

Orchids to Winston-Salem! According to Forbes Magazine this city is listed as "tops" in the United States for concentrating sales activities, for collections, and other promotion operations of business. It is cited as the center of the "very best" high-spot territory in the United States.

This district is reported further ahead of last year in business than in any other territory containing 1,000,000 or more population. The median gain for this territory, which includes Winston-Salem, over last year recently stood at 34.5 percent.

It is good to know that actual figures bear us out in our feeling of optimism about local conditions. There is nothing deceptive about the appearances of progress which are seen on every hand. They are not a mirage as the result of wishful thinking, but are substantial evidences of recovery.

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat of May 13, 1937]

THE BANKERS ARE CHEERFUL

Missouri bankers, arriving here for their annual convention, bring unusually optimistic reports on business and crops over the State. Barring accidents of nature, such as drought and flood and perhaps a few grasshoppers, the year of 1937 should be recorded as one of our best. All signs point in that direction and the men who handle our money are downright cheerful.

Winter wheat, because of a moist spring, is the best in years. Corn planting is late due to rain but there is still ample time to get it in the ground and raise a bumper crop before frost comes. From the Ozarks we receive the happy news that the strawberry crop promises to be a record breaker and southeast Missouri reports that, despite much replanting of cotton because of wet weather, a prosperous year is predicted because of a 15-percent increase in acreage and a market that now stands at 13 cents a pound with prospects of 16 cents when the crop is harvested. So much for agriculture.

Business is humming in the Lead Belt, reports a banker from Bonne Terre. Eighty percent of the mines are operating and wages have passed the peak of 1929. The miners are making money and are spending it with the merchants. Mine owners are happy, too, because with lead selling for $5.85 per 100 pounds they, too, can make money. From Joplin, center of the zinc industry, a similar optimistic report is heard. Most of the old zinc and lead mines have been reopened and are working full shifts.

All in all the bankers paint a bright picture in which their own fortunes are naturally better because of improved business generally. As the bearers of glad tidings they have made themselves unusually welcome.

1937 BUSINESS SHOWS STEADY ADVANCE TO DATE

Optimism continues to feature the business situation as a whole, according to reports compiled from all areas of the country.

A review in the current issue of Business Week shows that first-quarter earnings of 270 industrial corporations indicate a net profit of $352,375,000, a gain of 53 percent over the first quarter of 1936. This means an annual rate of return on net worth of nearly 12 percent against 7.9 percent the first 3 months last year. The biggest gains were recorded in steel, paper, merchandising, building materials, and railway equipment.

Railroads by a spurt in March ended the first quarter with a substantial profit, compared with a loss for the same period in 1936. Carloadings are expected to expand more or less steadily until the fall peak.

When the final April records are available home building probably will be found to have led construction activities. Reports for the first 3 weeks from 37 States east of the Rockies indicate residential construction out in front of all type of building in volume, eclipsing last year.

Residential construction is showing equipment and furnishings industrial divisions, for it is the rule when new homes are going up so do furnishings sales.

Steel mills continue to forge ahead at the best pace in 8 years.

FINDS WESTERN OUTLOOK BRIGHT—T. M. SCHUMACHER COMMENTS ON RAIL PROSPECTS

Conditions in Colorado, Utah, Nevada, and California look exceedingly favorable, T. M. Schumacher, chairman of the board of the Denver, Rio Grande & Western Railroad and chairman of the executive committee of the Western Pacific Railroad, stated yesterday after returning from an extensive trip over both roads. "The beet crop in Utah is one of the heaviest in recent years and the wool crop promises to be exceptionally good. Ore and coal movement is picking up and despite the unseasonal frosts in California, fresh-fruit loadings have held up well, with shippers getting better prices for goods", Mr. Schumacher said.

The railroad executive, who made daylight inspections of the road through to San Francisco and covering all branches over a period of 5 days, said that both roads are a little ahead of schedule on the $16,000,000 rehabilitation program that is to extend over 3 years. This maintenance expenditure will be made on improvements to track and roadbed and existing equipment, but will not include expenditures for new equipment and motive power. It is estimated that about $6,000,000 will be spent by the two roads for new equipment, including 26 locomotives and about 500 cars. Deferred maintenance of both roads has been practically brought up to date.

FORD SURPLUS IN 1936 CLIMBS TO $602,666,000—BAY STATE REPORTS ASSETS THIRTY-FIVE MILLIONS AHEAD OF 1935

BOSTON, May 26.—The Ford Motor Co. in 1936 increased its surplus account by $19,689,000, bringing the total surplus to $602,666,000, according to the annual report filed at the Massachusetts statehouse today.

Assets of the company were listed at $717,359,000, an increase of approximately $35,000,000 over the 1935 figure of $681,549,000.

The statement was filed with the Massachusetts commissioner of corporations and taxation. Massachusetts is one of the few States to require an annual statement of condition from the company.

The reserve account was increased from $10,961,000 in 1935 to $17,699,000 in 1936.

The capital stock of the company was carried both years at $17,264,500.

The company had an indicated net profit in 1936 of $26,426,698, equal to $7.65 a share on the company's capital stock, the statement revealed.

The profit was estimated on the basis of reported increase in profit and loss account and reserves. For 1935 indicated profit was $3,565,617, equal to $1.03 a share.

The company, privately owned by Henry Ford and members of his family, files annually a balance sheet in Massachusetts, in compliance with a State law, but these have never disclosed earnings in detail.

In 1934 indicated profit was $6,860,462, or $1.98 a share, while in 1933 there was an indicated loss of $3,480,331.

Prior to 1934 the stock had a $100 par value. It now consists of 3,452,900 shares of $5 par, having been readjusted by issuance of 20 shares for each $100 par share.

GOOD TIMES, GOOD REPORTS

It is to be learned from the News and Farmer that for the first time in its history Louisville (Georgia, not Kentucky) is beginning to have its parking problems. For years we have felt secure in the knowledge that our main street was so wide, with ample room for double parking, that never on any "just ordinary" day would car owners have to drive around and around the whole length of the street in a vain attempt to find a parking place. Yet that very thing is happening.

"Were all our money going into automobiles", the editor continues, "we would feel that our prosperity is a bubble, and a sort of undesirable bubble at that. But ride down any road in Jefferson County and see the dozens of country as well as town homes that have been improved. New barns, new roofs, new fences, are everywhere in evidence. * * * There is not a dilapidated, antiquated schoolhouse in the length and breadth of Jefferson County. Even during the depression our citizens bent every energy toward having good school buildings to the end that the 'little red schoolhouses' all over the country are fine brick buildings with every modern convenience. When fine schoolhouses were built, Jefferson County people were putting 'first things first.' "

It is to be learned from the Tifton Gazette that "Tifton continues building new homes, but the demand for places in which to live continues as insistent as ever."

It is to be learned from the Quitman Free Press that "it is difficult to drive a block in any direction in Quitman without seeing either a new house or a newly painted house. The carpenter and painter now know that prosperity is at hand."

GENERAL ELECTRIC NEW ORDERS SEEN AT QUARTER PEAK—RATE OF INCOMING BUSINESS INDICATES AROUND $131,000,000 FOR CURRENT 3 MONTHS—RUNNING ABOUT 70 PERCENT ABOVE 1936

Unless an unexpectedly sharp setback occurs during the remainder of the second quarter, General Electric Co. for the 3 months ended June 30, 1937, will show the greatest volume of new orders it has ever booked in any 3 months' period. Incoming business thus far in the second quarter has run about 70 percent ahead of the new orders taken in the quarter ended June 30, 1936.

Should the 70-percent rate of gain be maintained for the entire second quarter, it would mean an increase of, roughly, $54,000,000 over last year's second quarter bookings of $77,398,718, and would bring the total for the second quarter to approximately $131,000,000.

NEW INSURANCE UP 12 PERCENT IN APRIL—LIFE COMPANIES WRITE TOTAL OF $832,373,000 DURING LATEST MONTH

New life insurance in April was up 12.3 percent, and for the first 4 months of 1937 up 9.7 percent over last year, the Association of Life Insurance Presidents reported today.

The report pertains to new paid-for business of 40 companies having 83 percent of the total life insurance outstanding in all United States legal reserve companies.

Total new business written in April amounted to $832,373,000. New ordinary insurance aggregated $528,762,000, an increase of 15 percent over a year ago. Group insurance was $57,022,000 against $37,213,000, a jump of 53 percent.

For the first 4 months of 1937 the total new business was $3,132,254,000, while new ordinary insurance aggregated 11.5 percent higher at $2,002,666,000. Industrial insurance was $912,312,000, up 1.8 percent. Group insurance gained 32 percent above its 1936 comparative to a new total of $164,905,000.

RECOVERY AND RELIEF

Striking proof of the steady and even rapid advance of the Nation toward recovery is shown in a survey by the National Industrial Conference Board. In brief, it was found that employment in March in manufacturing, agriculture, the service industries, trade, distribution, and finance combined was higher than in 1929.

These industries, the Conference Board points out, normally afford employment to from 80 percent to 85 percent of the total number of the country's workers. The number of workers employed in these activities in March totaled 38,984,000, which compared with a 1929 average of 38,116,000. The increase over 1929 was 868,000 workers, or nearly 2.3 percent.

The greatest gain, as compared with 1929, has taken place in manufacturing. In this field the number of workers increased from 11,073,000 in 1929 to 11,678,000 in March 1937, an advance of almost 5.5 percent. In agriculture the number of workers rose from 10,650,000 in 1929 to 10,766,000 in March, or a little over 1 percent; in the service industries employment advanced from 9,070,000 workers in 1929 to 9,131,000 in March, or 1 percent; and in trade, distribution, and finance the number of workers increased from 7,323,000 to 7,409,000, or a little over 1 percent.

BOOMING RIVALS

All the shiny new cars are not on the highways. Thousands of them are on the railroad tracks. One of the most eye-arresting signs of recovery is the splash of color in the freight trains—the bright new paint of new rolling stock which now is busily rolling.

While 1937 has been setting new records in auto production and sales, it has also seen more freight-car buying than any year since 1929. From the matter-of-fact records of the American Iron & Steel Institute comes the news that material for some 40,705 freight cars was ordered in the first 4 months of this year, compared with 14,009 in the same period last year. So there will be even more bright spots in the freight trains as the year grows older and more of these new cars go to work.

It is interesting that freight-car building is booming at the same time that a record output of auto trucks has helped to push automotive registration to a new high. The truck is looked upon as the freight car's rival. But in these busy times there is plenty for both to do.

MAKING PROGRESS

Apparently the General Motors Corporation is looking forward to a big year next year. William S. Knudsen, new president of that organization, has announced that a $40,000,000 expansion program has been worked out and approved for 1938. It will be directed toward increasing the production of subsidiaries, improvements in factories, and facilitating manufacture of new models. Throughout the depression the automobile industry did everything possible to improve its product, and led the country out of the despond of the depression. That same spirit is to be continued by automobile manufacturers, and this expansion program is an illustration of it.

THE BANKERS SEE PROSPERITY

Missouri bankers in convention in St. Louis are optimistic over the prospects for the year in this State. Lead and zinc prices are up, and the mines are running at a good profit, with wages above the 1929 level. Dairying and fruit appear to be headed for a comfortable margin in the black; and, while the wet spring has somewhat retarded the planting of corn, there is an exceptionally favorable outlook for winter wheat. Livestock is staging a comeback, too, and the mules for which Missouri is justly celebrated are bringing higher prices than in years.

The fact that bankers, traditionally conservative in their outlook, should be making these roseate reports lends added color to the prospect. And the varied industries in which they cite improvement are also noteworthy. Fortunate is a State whose crops, natural resources, and business are so diversified that they form a measure of insurance against complete prostration when any one of them fails. Missouri has a number of industrial centers, but she still depends largely, and probably always will so depend, upon her agriculture and her mining for the backbone of her prosperity.

When all these factors pull together up the road toward good times, as they seem to be doing this year, there is reason for an unusual tinge of satisfaction in Missouri's view of the future.

ENGINEERING AWARDS ROSE 53 PERCENT FOR WEEK—343 PERCENT INCREASE IN PRIVATE WORK AS COMPARED WITH NATION'S REPORT FOR 1936 PERIOD

The past week's total of engineering awards, according to the Engineering News-Record, reached $55,244,000, representing a gain of 53 percent over the figures for the corresponding week of 1936, when the total amounted to $36,173,000.

Of the 1937 figure, $38,617,000 represented contracts for private work, making an increase in this category of 343 percent over last year's figure of $8,715,000. A large part of the gain was accounted for by the award of a $20,000,000 contract for a wide-strip mill for the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co., in Clairton, Pa. Public awards, totaling $16,627,000, showed a loss of 40 percent from the corresponding week of 1936, when the figure was $27,458,000.

LOEW'S ORDERS EXTRA DIVIDEND—MOTORS PRODUCTS CORPORATION ALSO VOTES SPECIAL—OTHER PAYMENTS NOTED

Two leaders in their respective fields today voted extra disbursements to stockholders in addition to the regular due payments.

Loew's Inc., declared an extra dividend of $1.50 a share on the common along with the usual quarterly of 50 cents a share, both payable June 30 to holders of record June 12.

An extra of 25 cents and the usual quarterly of 50 cents was voted by Texas Gulf Sulphur Co. on the common, both payments being due June 15 to holders of record June 1.

Motor Products Corporation voted a $1 payment on the junior issue—twice the amount paid in the preceding quarter. Payment is due June 30 to holders of record June 19.

Vulcan Detinning Co. declared an interim dividend of $3 a share of common, payable June 21 to holders of record June 10. The company paid a special of $4 each January 20 and December 21 last year.

Adams Express Co. voted a dividend of 30 cents on the common, payable June 25 to holders of record June 15. Company paid 35 cents a share on December 23 last.

United Gas & Electric Corporation voted a dividend of 50 cents a share on the common, payable June 10 to holders of record June 1. Company resumed dividends on common with payment of 60 cents in the third quarter last year and paid 90 cents a share in December.

OUR BUSINESS INDEX HIGH

Unbiased surveys of business conditions in various parts of the country continue to show that in this immediate vicinity business activity has maintained an improvement much better than the average for the country.

The latest of a series of surveys by the national advertising concern of Brooke, Smith, Frence & Dorrance, Inc., of New York and Detroit, shows that Greenville was one of a group of 22 cities in which business showed an improvement of 5 percent or more in April over March. Business in Greenville at the end of April stood at 5 percent above normal, while the national business index remained at normal, a level attained in March for the first time since 1929.

* * * * * * *

Both industrial and agricultural conditions during the last year in this vicinity have shown an unusual recovery, thus providing the foundation for this marked and better-than-average general business improvement here. And present prospects are that the remainder of the year will show further betterment in these two fundamentals of commercial activity.

REYNOLDS METALS UNITS OPERATE AT CAPACITY AS ORDERS SET RECORD

LOUISVILLE.—The two Louisville plants of the Reynolds Metals Co. are operating at capacity, a rate exceeding even that of 1929, and backlog of unfilled orders exceeds 2 months' operations at that level, according to A. P. Cochran, vice president.

Attributing the rush of orders to "general business", Mr. Cochran said that never before in history of the company had it experienced such demand.

The plant, at which the company manufactures aluminum powder for paints, is operating on a 24-hour schedule.

"Our first-quarter business, which is normally the poorest period of the year, ran far ahead of 1936 despite the fact that the two Louisville plants were completely shut down for nearly 2 months during the high water", Mr. Cochran declared. He forecast that second-quarter business and earnings would probably set a new record.

MINING BOOMING IN WHITEHALL DISTRICT—OUTPUT INCREASING

"The mining industry, particularly in the Whitehall district and in the Coeur d'Alene, is up and coming", says H. H. Ellsworth, of Helena, assistant general freight and passenger agent of the N. P., who passed through Butte yesterday, where he was joined by W. B. Elliott, Butte general agent, in a trip to Whitehall to inspect a new loading platform for ores that has just been completed. Mr. Ellsworth is returning from a visit to the Wallace, Idaho, country.

"Whitehall is much elated", he said, "at the showing that is being made by several mines of that district. The mines, which are steadily increasing their output, are shipping to Anaconda and Helena.

"In the Coeur d'Alene", Mr. Ellsworth said, "every mine, every prospect hole, is showing renewed signs of life. Mines already developed, but which have been shut down for years, are getting back into shape for production. Development work is going on in prospect holes. Lots of men are either employed or are employing themselves."

He found conditions equally encouraging over in the Bitter Root, the Frenchtown, and the Flathead districts, he said.

"There is a slight gain in wheat acreage and a splendid gain in forage-crop acreage", he said. "There is a splendid feeling among the ranchers. The weather has helped conditions a lot. What we need to make the picture perfect", they state, "is a good fall of rain and some nice warm weather to stimulate growing."

MARCH AND APRIL RETAILING IN UNITED STATES $892,900,000—GENERAL MERCHANDISING IN 1936 PERIOD $787,900,000

The American public spent $892,900,000 for general merchandise in department stores, mail-order organizations, variety stores, and dry-goods stores in March and April this year, as compared with $787,900,000 in the corresponding period a year ago, or an increase of 13.3 percent, according to a report yesterday by A. W. Zelomek, economist of the International Statistical Bureau, Inc.

The amount spent during the 2 months, representing the peak of spring business, was the highest for any corresponding period since 1931. The marked increase above a year ago was recorded despite the earlier Easter this year, the widespread strikes, and the somewhat restricted buying in New York in particular, Mr. Zelomek said. Despite the fact that April last year represented the Easter business, total sales this year, based on the bureau's index, were still 5.5 percent above a year ago.

THE RAILWAY REVIVAL

Railway purchases from the manufacturing industry for the first quarter of 1937 were larger than at any time since 1930. Railway Age computes them at $253,000,000, almost twice the expenditure during the same quarter last year. It is an increase of 200 percent over that spent during the first 3 months of 1935.

Over $80,000,000 went into new equipment. The railroads are preparing to handle the heaviest volume of freight in years during the coming fall. The expenditures entailed in bringing rolling stock back to predepression standards has boomed many industries. Davenport is hopeful that eventually the Bettendorf Co. will share in these orders.

[From the Minneapolis (Minn.) Tribune of May 17, 1937]

MINNESOTA INCOMES RISE

Individual incomes in Minnesota, according to a study made by the National Industrial Conference Board, are rising rapidly toward the levels established in 1929. The total of individual incomes in Minnesota in 1935 was $1,092,000,000, which amounted to 77.1 percent of the 1929 figure. This represented a gain over 1933 of almost $300,000,000. Minnesota ranked thirteenth in the volume of income and eighteenth in population in 1935, and received 2 percent of the total national income in that year.

The fact that Minnesota has risen toward the 1929 level more quickly than the Nation as a whole undoubtedly owes a great deal to the progress toward recovery in agriculture in this State, which has run ahead of the percentage gain for the rest of the country. Minnesota's production income in 1935 was $973,000,000 and 17.5 percent, or $171,000,000 of this total, was agricultural income. Farm income was larger than that furnished by either trade or manufacturing in Minnesota, while wages and salaries, by contributing $625,000,000 to production income, accounted for the largest share. Not only is this break-down in the sources of Minnesota income further evidence of the significance of agriculture in the economic life of Minnesota but it suggests the important part that it plays in the State's progress toward a normal recovery.

AHEAD TOGETHER

Memphis and 16 other smaller cities make up what is known in trade circles as the Memphis territory.

Forbes Magazine finds that business in this area, which contains approximately 1,000,000 persons, is 38 percent ahead of last year, and that its prosperity is exceeded by only one such area in the United States.

Memphis is the capital of a rich and growing territory, and a major influence in their prosperity is the fact that Memphis and the various cities and communities constituting the territory realize their dependence upon one another.

Cooperatively we can go a long way—but we must make progress together.

CHEERFUL FACTS

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce tells us, through its reliable research department, that—

We have 1,800,441 people in the bay area.

Their purchasing power is equal to that of 3,081,145 average Americans.

San Francisco's one-tax city and county tax assessment is the lowest of any large city in the Nation.

San Francisco ranks second in water-borne commerce of all ports in the United States.

And, finally, 400,000 families living tributary to the bay area will, in effect, soon be placed some 30 to 50 miles closer to San Francisco by reason of bridge construction and highway improvements.

These, combined with the sunshine and the wild flowers and the fruit now setting on a million trees, are cheerful facts.

RIVALS FORGE AHEAD

To a casual observer it would seem that the tremendous output of trucks by the automotive industry this year would mean dismal times for the manufacturers of railroad equipment. On the contrary, the Railway Age points out that the railways' purchases from the manufacturing industry during the first quarter of 1937 were the largest for the first quarter of any year since 1930.

"Total purchases of equipment and materials from manufacturers", says the magazine, "amounted to $253,117,000. The comparable figure for the first quarter of 1936 was $125,725,000, and for the first quarter of 1935 was $85,657,000. Therefore, the increase over 1936 exceeded 100 percent, and over 1935 was 200 percent." Such statements are in line with an announcement from the American Iron & Steel Institute that material for 40,705 freight cars was ordered during the first quarter of the current year, compared with material for 14,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

This unusual revival in the heavy-goods industries is explainable largely on the grounds that railway equipment was badly neglected during the depression. Not only did the railroads have an economic crisis to deal with but also the problems resulting from the advance of their new competitors—the trucks and the privately owned automobiles. Now, reviving industry is demanding service from lines that find themselves inadequately equipped. Although the roads have effected economies and increased efficiency to a considerable degree during the last few years, they still need freight cars and locomotives to meet the demands of the shippers. But perhaps the most unusual phase of the current situation lies in the fact that both the railroads and their competitors—the highway trucks—are buying new equipment. No doubt they believe that there will be plenty of work for both of them.

KOKOMO'S INDUSTRIAL GAIN

Announcement that the Chrysler Corporation will engage in the production of automotive parts at Kokomo marks another forward step by the city that has set a flattering record of industrial growth in recent years. A sentimental interest exists in the corporation's purchase of a unit of the old Haynes Co., pioneer in the automotive field.

The plant will produce transmissions and axle shafts and will employ from eight hundred to a thousand skilled workers. The building will be reconditioned and machinery installed as rapidly as possible. Production is expected to begin by September 1, according to announcement of Chrysler officials and the Kokomo Chamber of Commerce.

Full operation of the plant, it is believed, will raise employment in the city above the peak of 1929. Achievement of this enviable condition has been due to a rare degree of courage, initiative, and cooperation among the businessmen and citizens of the community. During the worst days of the depression the residents of Kokomo had sufficient faith to plunge into the task of rehabilitation. The city had suffered a series of industrial reverses which made the almost phenomenal recovery all the more creditable.

The people dug down into their savings to produce funds for the attraction of new industrial enterprises. The success of the campaign must have surprised even its most enthusiastic sponsors. One by one companies moved into reconditioned units of factory structures. The rest of the State marveled at the initiative displayed at a time when widespread pessimism had chilled some business leaders elsewhere. Kokomo now approaches the point where work is available for labor that wants a job. The city's record entitles it to the warmest congratulations of Hoosierdom.

POSTAL RECEIPTS GAIN 32 PERCENT

Phoenix trade is soaring.

Cash registers ring a ragtime beat.

Year by year sales-volume statistics show the unmistakable gains the city is making.

Go down to the office of George H. Todd, postmaster, and look at the postal-receipts records, these receipts being regarded as one of the best of business barometers.

Here's what they show:

Nineteen thirty-three receipts totaled only $452,676. The next year the figure was up to $487,521. In 1935 receipts totaled $542,251.

Last year receipts totaled $597,255, a 32-percent gain over 1933.

Every indication, say post-office officials, points to a 1937 revenue much greater than that even of 1936.

Various indexes are in agreement from the standpoint that Phoenix is making rapid progress; they differ only in degree.

CONTROLS IN A GROWING CITY

All signs indicate that Shreveport is entering a period in which construction of all kinds will be active. In the downtown district many buildings will be renovated or replaced. Streets will be torn up to install essential services.

FREIGHT-CAR ORDERS ON MAY 1 HIGHEST FOR DATE SINCE 1926—86 NEW STEAM LOCOMOTIVES PUT IN SERVICE FIRST 4 MONTHS THIS YEAR—UNION PACIFIC PURCHASE DETAILS

Class I railroads on May 1, this year, had more new freight cars on order than on any corresponding date since 1926, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday.

The number on order on May 1, this year, was 47,290. On May 1, 1926, there were 48,762. On May 1, last year, 18,467 cars were on order, and on the same day 2 years ago there were 1,449.

New freight cars on order on May 1, this year, included the following: 23,236 coal cars; 19,412 boxcars, including both plain and automobile; 2,093 refrigerator cars; 1,374 flatcars; 800 stock cars; and 375 miscellaneous cars.

Class I railroads had 345 new steam locomotives on order on May 1, this year, the largest number for any corresponding date since 1930, at which time there were 362 on order. On the same day last year 52 new steam locomotives were on order, while 2 years ago there was only 1.

New freight cars installed in service in the first 4 months of 1937 totaled 20,946, the greatest number of installations in any corresponding period since 1930, when there were 35,037. Class I railroads in the first 4 months last year installed 5,916 new freight cars, and in the corresponding period in 1935, 755 were installed.

UNION PACIFIC FREIGHT-CAR ORDERS

Details of the construction and purchase of 4,088 freight cars, involving the expenditure of approximately $14,000,000, were announced by Union Pacific Railroad. Two thousand and eighty-eight new boxcars will be built in the Omaha and Portland shops of the Union Pacific and 700 automobile cars at the Grand Island shops, the work providing employment for several hundred additional men. The 1,000 ballast and coal cars will be built by the American Car & Foundry Co., as previously announced, and the 200 tank cars by the General American Transportation Corporation. The remaining 100 special boxcars either will be contracted or built at company shops.

CLEVELAND TRACTOR SALES PACE POINTS TO EARNINGS GAIN—NET FOR YEAR TO SEPTEMBER 30 MAY BE BEST SINCE 1930—DELIVERIES UP 50 PERCENT—DIVIDEND CONSIDERATION LIKELY

CLEVELAND.—With agricultural, industrial, and export sales all showing substantial increases over last year, present indications are that the Cleveland Tractor Co. will report better earnings in the fiscal year ending September 30 than for any other year since 1930.

Last year earnings dropped to $30,292, or 13 cents a share on 220,000 shares of common stock, from $289,445, or $1.31 a share, in 1935, which was the company's best year since the recovery movement started.

In line with other firms in the industry the company is experiencing the largest volume of business in many years, sales to date being somewhat better than 50 percent above the corresponding period last year. This rising activity began in earnest with announcement of new streamlined models early last fall and with more aggressive sales work in the farm field.

NEW ALL-TIME HIGH REACHED IN 1936 LIABILITY BUSINESS—FIRE-INSURANCE FIRM ALSO SHOWS LARGE INCREASES

KEENE, May 17.—The National Grange Mutual Liability Co. of this city set up a new all-time high in 1936 in business done, number of policyholders, and in surplus assets, officers of the company reported at the fourteenth annual meeting, held here today and attended by Grange leaders from many States in the Union, headed by the national master of the order, Louis J. Taber, of Columbus, Ohio.

James C. Farmer, executive vice president and agency director of the company, reported a jump in premium volume from $854,695 in 1935 to $1,148,225 in 1936 on insurance carried by more than 40,000 policyholders. The goal set for 1937 is 50,000 policyholders and $1,500,000 premium volume.

Richard C. Carrick, company secretary, reported the company showed increases over the previous year of $293,302 in net premiums written, $286,927 in assets, and a surplus gain of $157,797, not including a contingency reserve of $50,000.

FIRE-INSURANCE GAINS

Today also featured the second annual meeting of the newly formed National Grange Fire Insurance Co. The company is already doing business in nine States, Mr. Farmer, executive vice president and agency director, reported, with the first 4 months of 1937 showing volume of business totaling $16,859, over a 75-percent gain over the first few months the previous year in fire coverages. Fire and theft policies for 1936 totaled 4,935, with 2,782 policies written the first 4 months of this year, he added.

SALES OF LIFE INSURANCE IN APRIL BEST SINCE 1931—ALL SECTIONS OF COUNTRY REPORT UPTURN FOR MONTH

New life-insurance sales in the United States last month were the largest for that month since April 1931, according to the Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau, Hartford, Conn. April sales were 16 percent ahead of those for the same month a year ago and totaled $692,062,000.

Every section of the country was represented in the increase in life-insurance business in April, with the East South Central States leading the Nation in a gain of 21 percent over April 1936. Forty-five States and the District of Columbia reported increased life-insurance sales in April, gains ranging from 1 to 33 percent over April 1936. Nebraska sales were unchanged, while West Virginia reported a decline of 2 percent.

GIGANTIC PAPER INDUSTRY IN THE SOUTH FORESEEN—ALREADY UNDER WAY, PUBLISHERS HEAR

HOT SPRINGS, May 17.—Predictions of a new industrial era for the South through use of southern pine in newsprint and allied products were made by James G. Stahlman, publisher of the Nashville Banner, and Dr. Charles H. Herty, of Savannah, Ga., scientist, before the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association here today.

Mr. Stahlman is chairman of the association's newsprint committee and recently was elected president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. Dr. Herty's research work laid the foundation for the proposed new southern industry.

Mr. Stahlman predicted that a billion-dollar industrial development would be built around southern pine within the next 15 years. He said that a mill will be in operation in east Texas in 1938 and will be in full production in 1939.

He said that newsprint markets of South and Central America are open for the southern product. He said that not only has the entire newsprint industry taken cognizance of the fight to establish in the South a newsprint mill, "but it has stimulated the investment of capital in many kraft mills in the South within the past few months. Since January 1936 more than $60,000,000 has been invested in kraft units to utilize southern pine."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of L. Elizabeth Dunn to be postmaster at Conchas Dam, N. Mex., which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

ARMY NOMINATIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably several hundred routine Army nominations. To print these in the calendar would require the expenditure of about $90, and they would cover about 20 or 21 pages, a useless expense, since these names have to be published in the RECORD a little later. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that these nominations be confirmed without being printed in the calendar, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Cullen Ganey to be United States attorney, eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination of J. Cullen Ganey to be district attorney in Philadelphia be confirmed, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, June 3, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 1, 1937

PROMOTION IN THE PHILIPPINE SCOUTS

TO BE CAPTAIN

Bienvenido Mobo Alba, Philippine Scouts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 1, 1937

The House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WARREN, at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we pray Thee to verify Thy promise unto us: They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. Give us renewed minds and hearts; create within us a right spirit; lead us beside still waters. Let Thy peace flood the depths of our thoughts where no fear can come. Almighty God, every corner of the earth is feeling the throb of the world's strife. Its treasure is being poured into the tragic hands of war and into the ragged laps of poverty. Lord God of Hosts, allow not the lights of heaven to be extinguished until there shall be none to rekindle them; the ritual of hate and magnified national selfishness mean inevitable doom. Teach men, O God, that the world is not to be saved by institutions but by the compelling desire of men whose souls have been quickened by the spirit of the Savior of the world; may they have an overflow of light, justice, and brotherhood. Gracious Lord, be with our President, his official family, our Speaker, and every Member of the Congress. Especially be with our most distinguished Secretary of State. Hear our humble prayer for the dear Redeemer's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 28, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On May 27, 1936:

H. R. 1092. An act for the relief of May Howard Bloedorn;

H. R. 1254. An act for the relief of William A. McMahan;

H. R. 5171. An act to reimpose a trust on certain lands allotted on the Yakima Indian Reservation; and

H. J. Res. 359. Joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim the tercentenary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette.

On May 28, 1937:

H. J. Res. 251. Joint resolution to extend the lending authority of the Disaster Loan Corporation to apply to flood disasters in the year 1936;

H. R. 6252. An act to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Koosharem Band of Paiute Indians; and

H. R. 6730. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1937, and June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

On May 29, 1937:

H. R. 4794. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, immediately after the conclusion of the address by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the majority leader what is the program for the next few days?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, today we are going to endeavor to dispose of the relief bill which we have had up for some time.

Mr. SNELL. Is the gentleman really going to do that, or are we going to wait for some more propaganda? I have received over 70 telegrams this morning, and I think it is about time that Congress took it upon itself to act.

Mr. RAYBURN. I hope the gentleman from New York will cooperate with me in getting rid of the bill today. I shall cooperate 100 percent, as far as I am concerned, in an effort to dispose of the bill finally. Tomorrow is Calendar Wednesday. Thursday we will take up the "hot oil" bill, probably, and perhaps a conference report.

Mr. SNELL. What about tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the call rests with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] could answer better than I can. I have not yet been informed what bill he intends to call up.

Mr. SNELL. And today we are going to consider the Private Calendar?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Before the relief bill or after?

Mr. RAYBURN. Before. I don't think it will take more than 20 or 25 minutes to run through the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. That is all. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I had been granted 1 hour, allotted to me for this morning. I have talked with the floor leader, and it seems better not to take up the time this morning. I therefore ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposal of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Federal Theater, and also on patent law, and include a statement of Judge Galston, of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a memorial address which I delivered on Sunday last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address I delivered on the policy of national flood control before the American Forest Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor of the House be permitted to meet during the sessions of the House with the Senate Committee on Labor during the next 3 days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to continue hearings on the bankruptcy bill while the House is in session tomorrow, Wednesday, and Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF EXPIRING 5-YEAR LEVEL-PREMIUM TERM POLICIES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the veto message of the President of the bill H. R. 5478.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The unfinished business is the further consideration by the House of the veto message of the President of the bill (H. R. 5478) to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-eight Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 71]

Andresen, Minn.	Gildea	McGranery	Secrest
Ashbrook	Gingery	Maas	Shafer, Mich.
Bradley	Goodwin	Miller, Ark.	Smith, W. Va.
Buck	Green	Mosier, Ohio	Taylor, Colo.
Buckley, N. Y.	Gwynne	Peyser	Taylor, Tenn.
Byrne	Hancock, N. C.	Phillips	Terry
Clark, Idaho	Hill, Wash.	Pierce	Thom
Clark, N. C.	Hobbs	Plumley	Vincent, B. M.
Collins	Hook	Poage, Tex.	Wearin
Dempsey	Kloeb	Ramsay	West
Fernandez	Kvale	Reilly	Whelchel
Ford, Miss.	Lanham, Tex.	Robsion, Ky.	Wood
Fulmer	Lanzetta	Sadowski
Gavagan	Lord	Schneider, Wis.
Gilchrist	McGehee	Schuetz

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and seventy-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion by Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I am unable to vote to sustain the President's veto of this bill. I believe the measure has been vetoed under a misapprehension. I believe if the President had called in the members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and consulted with them, the bill would have been signed.

As chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation I have a rather difficult position. I have endeavored for the last 7 years to do justice to the veterans and, at the same time, to save the Congress and the administration as much embarrassment as possible. I owe a duty, as every Member of Congress owes a duty, to the World War veterans of this country. In this instance I feel it my duty to those men who have tried to carry on and to carry this insurance and try to help themselves, to vote to override this veto.

During the World War veterans were induced to take out this insurance. Many of them dropped it. Out of probably 4,000,000 or more, all but about 600,000 dropped their insurance as the years went by. The old-line insurance companies began to bring pressure to force conversion of those policies, and pressure also began to come from the Veterans' Administration to that effect. Large numbers were induced to convert their policies, but many of them have not converted.

Five years ago, when I first became chairman of this committee, these term-insurance policies expired. I appointed a subcommittee headed by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] to consider another extension. That committee held hearings and reported a bill to extend those policies for 5 years. That bill was passed and became a law.

That 5 years expires today. A bill was introduced to extend this period for 5 more years. I again appointed a subcommittee, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD]. That committee held hearings on the bill and representatives of every one of the three leading veterans' organizations came before them and urged this extension. It was reported by the unanimous vote of the subcommittee. It was reported out of the full committee unanimously, and it passed the House without a dissenting vote. It went to the Senate and passed the Senate unanimously.

Now, let us see what are the facts. There are only 23,000 of these men. If they are forced to convert their policies they cannot take out old-line insurance, because many of them are not physically able to stand an examination. If they are forced to convert their policies it means they pay three or four times as much as they are paying now, and they write me that they are not financially able to do that. So it simply means that if this veto is sustained about 20,000 of those men go off the insurance rolls entirely.

The argument is made that the passage of this bill will be to the detriment of the men who have converted. I deny that. A man who has converted is building up a reserve, and in a few years he can quit paying altogether. These men must pay as long as they live if we extend this time, which I am in favor of doing. [Applause.]

Another thing, all this money that these 4,000,000 men paid in went into this fund, and those men who have converted and the ones who have not converted have received the benefit of it and are receiving the benefit of it now. But somebody says the Government may have to make up the deficit. Suppose the Government does have to pay something. We are appropriating for the relief of millions who are in this country unlawfully, who never have become American citizens and who never will become American citizens. So why should we worry if in the course of years it should become necessary for the Congress to put up a small amount to make up such deficit as may occur in this insurance fund?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. I just want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the administration of relief in the past veterans have been discriminated against, regardless of their disability.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not sure of that; I am not arguing that point. The veterans of this country know my attitude. I am not worried about them, and I am not trying to make my position as chairman of this committee a sounding board for my own aggrandizement, nor have I permitted any other Congressman to use it for that purpose. This committee has tried to work for the benefit of the veterans and the protection of the Government, and we had that in view when we went through this hearing and reported this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Could the gentleman give the House any definite idea as to what it would cost the Government of the United States if this veto is overridden?

Mr. RANKIN. It will not cost the Government anything. I thought I had explained that. This fund will be sufficient. I just said that in case it did not, in case we had made a mistake and ultimately the Government would have to put up a small amount, I would be willing to help do so. But, as it is, it will not cost the Government anything.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I talked with officials of the Veterans' Administration over the telephone today, and they said, off the record, that they felt very sure that the fund would not be much affected by the passage of this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. A question was asked during the hearings before the committee regarding these men who have been paying this term insurance, whether their premiums increased from year to year. Listen to this colloquy between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and Mr. Breining, of the Veterans' Administration. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] asked him this question:

> Now, then, let me ask this further question: possibly you can answer it: What would be the comparative figure on the premiums, per thousand, between the 5-year term, if it should be renewable, and regular insurance?
> Mr. BREINING. That would be dependent, based on the premiums that they would have to pay on the type of policy which they chose to take out; that is, whether it be the ordinary life, 20-payment, 30-payment life, and so on.
>
> Mr. HALLECK. Suppose it was ordinary life?
> Mr. BREINING. I have an example here that I think very graphically picturizes that situation: Take the man at the age of 45; that is the average age of the veterans at the present time; and the premium that he would have to pay on a $10,000 5-year term contract would be $116.90. For the ordinary life contract it would be $287.10. But that premium of $116.90 would, with each 5-year period, increase, so that at the age of 65, for instance, he would be paying $467.80 a year, and at the age of 75, $1,111.60 a year—

In other words, these premiums that these men are paying on term insurance increase from year to year. They are now asking that they be given this additional 5 years, at which time it will just about reach the premiums of these men who are building up the reserve, so how can they be hurt by the passage of this bill? Then he goes on to say—> whereas, if he took $10,000 ordinary life policy on a level premium, $287.10 would remain static over the whole period.

> Mr. HALLECK. What succeeding term of 5 years would he reach in his premium of $287, what age?
> Mr. BREINING. Well, that would be about the age of 57 or 58. Of course, at the age of 45 he would never reach that. At 55 his premium would be $207.90, and at the age of 60 it would jump to $306. So he would never have any premium approximating that for a man that is 45.

All they are asking is that they be permitted to carry on as they are carrying on now for the next 5 years for the reason that many of them are literally on the brink of the grave. I have my pocket full of letters and telegrams from these men asking that they be not shut off at this time because it means a loss of their insurance to them entirely. For this reason I shall vote to override the veto.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman said there were 22,000——

Mr. RANKIN. Twenty-three thousand.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understood there were 72,000 outstanding.

Mr. RANKIN. No; the number has been decreasing all the time.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. EDMISTON. Is it not also a fact that these men have had this insurance in vogue ever since the World War?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; they have been making these payments ever since they entered the service.

They have paid them for about 20 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not also true, in case this bill does not become a law, a great many or a majority of these veterans will lose their insurance?

Mr. RANKIN. Absolutely! They will lose their insurance altogether.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. In case this is extended for 5 years and Congress should then refuse to continue the extension, what would happen to these veterans?

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that many of them will die and collect the insurance. That is one thing. They will have protection during those 5 years, and probably their condition will improve so that they can then convert. If the gentleman wants to know my attitude, at the end of 5 years, if they want it extended at the end of 5 years, I am for extending it if I am a Member of Congress.

Mr. DIES. If they have not been able up to this time to convert, will they be any more able after 5 years than they have been in the past?

Mr. RANKIN. Some of them will be, I may say to the gentleman from Texas. We hope the depression is now over, and that their economic conditions may improve to where they can convert.

Mr. DIES. And some of them will be in worse condition?

Mr. RANKIN. They may be. I am sure some of them will be in better condition.

Mr. DIES. If we do not intend to extend this indefinitely in the future, there is no necesisty to extend it for 5 years?

Mr. RANKIN. There certainly is. We will at least give them protection for the next 5 years and give them an opportunity to convert if they want to do so. It will protect the veterans and their families. They are dying by the hundreds. Of the 23,000 involved here, probably thousands of them will die in the next 5 years.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I talked with many ill veterans on Sunday and Monday and their plea was: "We pray that Congress will extend our time. We do not expect to live very long. If we die without the insurance, our families will be put on relief. We cannot possibly pay the added amount." Other veterans said they could not pay the increased premiums and they would have to lose their insurance.

Mr. EDMISTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. EDMISTON. During the past 20 years the veterans have paid premiums. It has not been the same premium, though?

Mr. RANKIN. It has increased from year to year, and will continue to increase.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand if this bill is passed it will not cost the Government or the taxpayers a penny?

Mr. RANKIN. No; it will not.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, may I say the veterans have gone through the worst of the depression. In the next 5 years the chances are 9 out of 10 they will be in a much better position. We will protect the policies of these 23,000 veterans during the next 5 years?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. In the event we extend the term for 5 years, in that time if any veteran wants to convert his policy of Government insurance, he can do it without the necessity of undergoing an examination?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. If he were compelled to convert it to an old-line company, he would be required to take an examination and probably would be barred from insurance?

Mr. RANKIN. He would be barred, because he could not stand the physical examination.

Mr. NICHOLS. Not only that, but if the President's veto in this instance is not overridden, it means that all of the money these veterans have invested during the past 15 or 20 years will be lost to them, and they will derive no benefit in the future?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. This also has to be taken into consideration: If the President's veto is not overridden, these men cannot convert from now on. The time has passed. We have stalled this thing along until they are through. The term level insurance has expired.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. If this bill does not become law, these men will lose their insurance, as I understand the matter?

Mr. RANKIN. Unless they convert today, more than 2,000 of them will go off the insurance roll tonight.

Mr. KELLER. As a result, would it not cost the Government a great deal of money to keep those families on relief, which would go on relief on the death of the veteran?

Mr. RANKIN. They would not only go on relief, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois, but a pension bill would sweep this House if the pending measure is killed. That is, a compensation measure.

Mr. KELLER. Did the gentleman's committee find any reason why this should not become law?

Mr. RANKIN. We did not find any reason at all why this bill should not become a law.

Mr. VOORHIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS. In further answer to the gentleman from Texas, is it not true the average age of the children of veterans now is about 19 or 20. Five years from now those children will be in a very much different position from what some of them are now. In other words a lot of them will be grown and the difficulty which the veteran faces right now will be much less at the end of 5 years than it is at the present time?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true if this bill is not passed a great many of the 23,000 mentioned by the gentleman will necessarily lose their insurance?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is correct; some of them will go off the roll tonight.

Mr. DOWELL. And the responsibility will be upon the Government to take care of those who may be dependent upon this insurance?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Iowa is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I think the gentleman from Mississippi has already stated in a general way the reasons motivating the President in vetoing this bill.

I would like to have the gentleman from Mississippi restate in boiled-down language just why the President vetoed this bill, as briefly as the gentleman can.

Mr. RANKIN. The President was under the impression, as I understood his message—and I heard it and read it very carefully—he seems to be under the impression that it would impair this insurance reserve to the detriment of the men who have converted. We think, and the veterans' organizations think, that is a mistake; that it will not injure them.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. IZAC. Has there been any complaint on the part of those of us who have converted that we are bearing a little bit more on our shoulders?

Mr. RANKIN. No. I may say to the gentleman from California that the veterans throughout the country of all classes that I know anything about are supporting this measure.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Did I understand the gentleman from Mississippi to say that all these 5-year term policies would expire today?

Mr. RANKIN. It is my understanding that about 2,000 will expire today.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Has any veterans' organization appeared before the gentleman's committee in opposition to this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. No. All three appeared for it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from Indiana made a point which I think the House ought to understand thoroughly—that unless this veto is overridden these 23,000 veterans cannot even convert, because the time has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. The time expires today on 2,000 of them. The rest of them expire shortly.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then they lose the investment of 20 years.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Here is something for which veterans are paying.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. We have a lot of people coming here for things, and they are not paying in return for what they get. Was there anything in the hearings from the Veterans' Administration to indicate that in paying for this term insurance these veterans were not paying every penny of the cost entailed to the Government?

Mr. RANKIN. I did not attend the hearings. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD], chairman of the subcommittee, can answer the question. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] asks whether or not there was anything said by the Veterans' Administration in the hearings before the committee to indicate that these men who are carrying this term insurance are not paying for everything they are getting.

Mr. GRISWOLD. They are paying for everything they are getting except the administrative cost.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That is true of the other policies also, is it not?

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is true.

Mr. RANKIN. I have here a letter from a man of whom I never heard before in my life, who writes me from Yonkers, N. Y. He outlines their position as clearly as I have found it stated. He says:

As a holder of an $8,000 policy under the terms of this act, I am amazed and much disappointed to read of its veto.

I, probably in common with other holders of this term insurance, appreciate that rates continue to increase with each 5-year renewal. Still, for a man of modest or moderate income who desires maximum protection for his wife and children until latter are grown, can best obtain this protection through term insurance. I have carefully weighed the relative advantages of buying maximum protection under a term policy or taking a smaller protection at a considerably higher rate under ordinary life policy. It is true that you do build a cash reserve and surrender value with the ordinary life policy. In my case felt it better to buy protection now and build reserve in other form of savings. In another 5 to 10 years my children will be grown and will not need protection I can now only obtain in term insurance.

I disagree seriously with the statement to the effect that continuance of this term insurance is a breach of faith on part of Federal Government toward large body of converted-policy holders. When rates were originally established for all forms of coverage under the War Risk Insurance Act, including term insurance, they were held to be actuarially sound and taken from recognized mortality tables. We holders of term insurance are paying for what we get in way of protection. The additional payments being made by holders of ordinary life and other forms of coverage go to build up their cash reserve and surrender values.

After all, were I a man of sufficiently large income to buy ordinary life in amount of $8,000, which I consider minimum protection I should provide for my family, I would gladly do so. If this veto stands, I will be forced to take substantially less protection in an ordinary life policy. When President and Congress have made so many moves in an effort to better the condition of persons of small incomes I fail to understand reason for denying to us the privilege of continuing to provide against emergency so far as we are able.

I cannot feel that any preferential treatment has been or would be accorded me through term insurance. We holders of same get what we pay for, nothing more or less.

This man in a crude way explains just what this proposition means. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is another angle to this legislation which has not been adequately presented this morning. It seems to be this legislation is due very largely to the depression. Most of us Members of Congress had trouble ourselves during the depression. I know I had to give up some of my insurance with the regular life-insurance companies, due to the fact I could not carry the amount of insurance which I carried before the economic collapse of 1929.

The purpose of this legislation was to make it possible for the veterans who did not have sufficient money to pay for regular life policies during the period of depression to carry term policies. The term policies are the ones for which you pay the least and have no dividend payments. This was the purpose of the original legislation. We may be divided on the question of whether we have come out of the depression or not, or whether we have emerged from the emergency. Actually, we have not. We still have 10,000,000 people unemployed and 20,000,000 on relief. Therefore, I say, in behalf of these 23,000 veterans who do not have sufficient money to convert their term insurance into ordinary life-insurance policies in view of the fact that the emergency and the depression is still with us, we ought to continue these term policies for 5 years to enable 23,000 veterans to continue to get the cheapest possible protection for themselves and for their families until we emerge to better and more prosperous times. It is not a question in my mind whether these veterans are going to die or not in the next 5 years. Nobody knows that or can make any reliable predictions. As an emergency proposition, growing out of the depression, there is still need for this legislation, and I hope the House will pass it over the veto regardless of partisanship. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, the main argument advanced by the Veterans' Bureau against this bill before the committee was that it was unfair to the man who was carrying the term-level insurance, because if we continued this term-level insurance the rates on the holder of the term-level policy would constantly mount until they would reach the place where the man carrying a term-level policy could not afford to carry the insurance.

This may be true because the rates on these term-level policies will continuously mount. Each year the amount of the premium will increase until in a few years it will reach staggering proportions. It will cost much more than the premiums on the converted policy. We were told all over the country yesterday and the day before by Memorial Day orators that wars are old now and the memories of men grow dim with the mist of the years. Our memory grows dim about this insurance. You forget that when this term insurance was put out these men were not told about its being term insurance. They were not told any of the details. When they walked you down to the desk when you enlisted they insisted that you must take out $10,000 worth of insurance if you were a married man, whether you wanted it or not. If you were single you could take a less amount, but you were forced to take some. They never told you it was an insurance that was going to become obsolete or be abolished in 5 years. All the salesmanship or all the pressure put on that soldier was put on to make him take the insurance. They did not tell him these details they are telling you now. They told the soldier to sign on the dotted line, and a dazed soldier, new to war and fearsome of officers with shining boots, obeyed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And is it not true that some of them did not get their notices telling them they should convert?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Some of them did not, I believe.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman speaks about the pressure that was brought to bear. They practically lined up the companies and if you did not take your insurance you were put on kitchen police or something else.

Mr. GRISWOLD. If you did not take your insurance, you were ostracized in your outfit. The administration wanted a hundred percent record, and the generals rode the colonels and they in turn rode the company commanders and the private signed.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] and all the others will recall that the boys had a saying that they got $30 a month "deducting $29", and out of that $29 was taken the money to pay this insurance It was a greater burden on them than it would have been on the man on the outside who was getting $5 or $10 a day.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I simply want to make this observation: I had charge of the insurance department at Fort Scriven, Ga., for several months during the war. We sold 300 policies of $10,000 each in a couple of days' time before there was a break in the maximum chain, and the veterans never knew the type of insurance they were getting. They were practically told they had to take a policy and were more or less indifferent as to the type or kind.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I thank my colleague for his statement. That is an instance of what happened. Our colleague in charge of insurance at Fort Scriven states that in 2 days' time they sold three hundred $10,000 policies, and not a man knew what kind of insurance he was getting.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. What position did the Veterans' Administration take before your subcommittee on this bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Well, I will be real honest with the gentleman. If you can read the hearings and tell whether they were fish or fowl, I would like to know. They were positively against the bill but agreed that it would work a hardship on the term-level policyholder if the bill did not pass. However, the President's message states that 15 percent of the veterans are now carrying this term-level insurance. Compare your 15 percent with those on relief. You are passing or considering a relief bill of one thousand five hundred million this afternoon to take care of people. What percentage are on relief in this Nation? We have not been told. We can presume it is close to 15 percent. These veterans are on relief and you are going to take their relief money and ask them, if the time has not already expired, to pay these increased rates now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. GRISWOLD. There is one more thing I want to bring to the attention of the House with respect to the testimony of Mr. Breining, that if these men could convert or if they had the money to convert now, the man who is carrying a $10,000 policy at the the new rates would be able to carry a $4,000 policy only.

The President's message says it would create a hardship on those carrying converted insurance. I think the President has been misinformed. It does not affect them except that it does not increase the reserve. If these men are now denied insurance after paying the premium for 20 years, then the reserve will be increased to that extent. Those who carry converted policies will profit by many millions of dollars that these men have paid and for which they have received no return because they did not die before today. The veterans' organizations do not represent the great majority of these term-level policyholders. The veterans' organizations represent the majority of those with converted policies and yet all the veterans' organizations ask that this bill be passed. It is just a proposition of common justice. The veto should be overridden. "The memories of men should not grow dim with the mists of the years."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

WOULD OVERRIDE PRESIDENT'S VETO

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, certainly it is unnecessary to prolong this discussion on the pending motion to override the President's veto on the bill to extend the time for a period of 5 years for term insurance of veterans of the World War. This House approved this legislation a few days ago without a single objection. It was brought to this body after extensive hearings by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and with a unanimous report from that committee.

The only real objection made by the President in his veto message is that this bill, if it become a law, will be unfair to other veterans who have Government insurance. The President says we must keep faith with such veterans. The fact is that the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and every other veterans' organization in the country is enthusiastically supporting this legislation, and no veteran, or veterans' organization, appeared before the committee and protested against the further extension of time for these 23,000 veterans who have been unable financially to convert their Government insurance into life policies. Many of them lie in hospitals today and no doubt will pass to their rewards before another 5 years have expired.

When they entered the service they were practically forced to take this Government insurance, and the premiums were deducted from their monthly pay of $30 a month. If this bill fails, many will lose all they have paid during all these years. It occurs to me that this Congress should be more interested in keeping faith with these unfortunate veterans, many of whom could not secure old-line insurance, than in worrying about those of us who have been able to convert our policies. The former service men are not so selfish that they would deny this consideration to their buddies in arms.

I yield to no one in my loyalty to the President of the United States. I have not hesitated to vote with him and for him when I believed him to be right, nor have I hesitated to vote against the wishes of the President when I felt that he was wrong. Frankly, I think the House will demonstrate by an overwhelming vote within a few minutes that in its judgment, the President, in this instance, acting upon the poor advice of General Hines, is wrong. [Applause.]

If I remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, it was upon the same advice of the same gentlemen that the President asked Congress to pass the so-called Economy Act and many Members in good faith followed the President's wishes at that time on the assurance that no worthy veteran would suffer. I shall not discuss that at this time further than to say that I have been surprised, chagrined, and humiliated to know that many worthy veterans did suffer because of that law and the unsympathetic and inhuman manner in which that law was administered. I am glad that Congress has finally repealed many objectionable features of the Economy Act [applause], notwithstanding the fact that it was sponsored and rushed through Congress with the enthusiastic endorsement of the head of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote again in a few moments for this bill to extend term insurance for another 5 years to these 23,000 World War veterans, notwithstanding the objections of the President, and thus keep faith with the men who kept faith with us in the dark hour of our country's peril. They did not forsake their duty to their country then and I shall not forsake my solemn duty to them now. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this bill, because at the request of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, I introduced the original bill which is the subject of debate today. I have read the hearings before the committee presided over with such ability by our distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and I am convinced that it is my duty to vote to pass this bill. Not only is such action merited upon the evidence, but it is also merited from the angle of humanity and just consideration. We are now in a very peculiar position. If this veto is sustained, none of the men who are affected will be able to change their form of insurance. It is too late now. Furthermore, this condition has existed for about 20 years and it seems to me that this Congress in its wisdom can and should extend the present conditions for another 5 years. As the Member who introduced the original bill, who subscribed to the action of the committee, the chairman of the subcommittee conferring with me before the bill was reported and as one who concurred in the action of the committee, and in the exercise of my individual judgment, I am satisfied, weighing the veto message, that the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of the bill, and I personally, as I urge my colleagues also to do, am going to vote for the passage of this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to state that I expect to vote to override the veto of the President. Also, I call attention of the House to this profound fact, that nobody has risen on this floor today to defend the President in his action. This is another illustration of the fact that finally the Congress has shaken itself loose from the spell of fear that the Members have been showing toward the orders of the Executive. Last week this Congress showed a spirit of independence that promised well for the future. The country complimented Congress on its independence. The country wants the President to stay in his place, and it wants Congress to demand its rights. The people want Congress to legislate and it wants the President to execute. I repeat that it is passing strange that not a single individual has risen to defend him in his veto action today. Where are those hundreds who were elected upon the President's coattail? Where are those who have stood here day after day and proclaimed the infallibility of the President? Where are they who have received so many favors at the hands of this the most extravagant administration in the history of the country? It is a most significant fact that not one single person will rise to support the President when he needs them. What will Jim Farley say? I hope you will show this same spirit of independence when the leaders crack their whips to compel you to change the vote that you cast last week earmarking $500,000,000 of the relief bill. The people will support you in your show of independence. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I think enough has been said and probably not much more should be said, for I believe the House is ready to vote. I call attention to the letter that I believe all of you received from the Veterans of Foreign Wars. If there were time, I should like to read a very forceful letter received this morning by me from Mr. Millard W. Rice, the legislative representative of the V. F. W., urging that this bill be passed. I point out to the House this further fact. It stands to reason, because of the kind of insurance this is, because it is insurance expiring in 5 years, and because in the course of time it will become very expensive, that the kind of men who are asking us to pass this bill are men who, in many instances, are disabled, who are veterans whose expectation of life is short, and who desire to maintain the maximum possible protection for their families in the last few years they may have to live. It seems to me it is but a matter of simple justice to permit these 22,000 veterans to renew their term insurance for another 5 years; and I believe in the great majority of cases those who do renew will be veterans who are mighty hard pressed, most of them disabled, and who would suffer seriously if we did not extend this privilege to them.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote in the affirmative on the measure which is now being considered by the House, because, according to information I have received, if this legislation is not enacted into law it will work a hardship on many thousands of our ex-service men.

It will always be my intention to support legislation which will benefit the World War veterans, Spanish-American War veterans, and veterans of other wars, because they are entitled to a great deal more consideration than they have received and are receiving at the present time.

I have received a number of communications from veterans' organizations protesting against the President's proposal pertaining to the Supreme Court. I want the veterans' organizations of the country to know that it is my intention to vote for the President's court measures, and every other legislative measure which, in my opinion, is constructive, progressive, and humane.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? As many as are in favor of passing the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, will, as their names are called, vote "aye", those opposed "no". The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 372, nays 13, answered "present" 1, not voting 46, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the measure just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks to include a memorial address delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TAX EVASION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

A condition has been developing during the past few months so serious to the Nation that the Congress and the people are entitled to information about it.

The Secretary of the Treasury has given me a report of a preliminary study of income-tax returns for the calendar year 1936. This report reveals efforts at avoidance and evasion of tax liability, so widespread and so amazing both in their boldness and their ingenuity that further action without delay seems imperative.

We face a challenge to the power of the Government to collect uniformly, fairly, and without discrimination taxes based on statutes adopted by the Congress.

Mr. Justice Holmes said: "Taxes are what we pay for civilized society." Too many individuals, however, want the civilization at a discount.

Methods of escape or intended escape from tax liability are many. Some are instances of avoidance which appear to have the color of legality; others are on the borderline of legality; others are plainly contrary even to the letter of the law.

All are alike in that they are definitely contrary to the spirit of the law. All are alike in that they represent a determined effort on the part of those who use them to dodge the payment of taxes which Congress based on ability to pay. All are alike in that failure to pay results in shifting the tax load to the shoulders of others less able to pay, and in mulcting the Treasury of the Government's just due.

I commend to your attention the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 29, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: As you know, the Treasury was surprised and disturbed by the failure of the receipts from the income tax on March 15 to measure up to the Budget estimates. Therefore we undertook an immediate investigation. Only a preliminary report can be made at this time because the complete investigation covering all the income-tax returns filed will require the balance of this year. Furthermore, since many of the returns of large manufacturing corporations have not yet been filed, the present report is confined almost wholly to data disclosed by the individual tax returns.

But even this preliminary report discloses conditions so serious that immediate action is called for. More than the usual examination and audit by the Treasury is needed. It seems clear that if tax evasion and tax avoidance can be promptly stopped through legislation and regulations resulting from a special investigation a very large portion of the deficiency in revenues will be restored to the Treasury.

I herewith enumerate some of the principal devices now being employed by taxpayers with large incomes for the purpose of defeating the income taxes which would normally be payable by them. As we continue our preliminary examination, other devices are being disclosed.

1. THE DEVICE OF EVADING TAXES BY SETTING UP FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING CORPORATIONS IN THE BAHAMAS, PANAMA, NEWFOUNDLAND, AND OTHER PLACES WHERE TAXES ARE LOW AND CORPORATION LAWS LAX

Americans have formed 64 such companies in the Bahamas alone in 1935 and 1936, and 22 more were organized by Americans in the Bahamas during the past 2 months. Panama and Newfoundland seem to be even more fertile territory, since their corporation laws make it more difficult to ascertain who the actual stockholders are. Moreover, the stockholders have resorted to all manner of devices to prevent the acquisition of information regarding their companies. The companies are frequently organized through foreign lawyers, with dummy incorporators and dummy directors, so that the names of the real parties in interest do not appear.

One American citizen with a $3,000,000 Bahamas corporation has apparently attempted to prevent the Bureau of Internal Revenue from catching up with him by filing his individual tax returns in successive years from towns in New Brunswick, British Columbia, and Jamaica.

Another individual believes that he has been so successful in removing his assets from the United States to the Bahamas that he is defying the Treasury to collect a tax upon a $250,000 fee he has received; and, by way of insult, he has offered to compromise his admitted tax liability of $33,000 for past years by a payment of $1,700.

Still another individual showed a large net loss on his personal return for 1936. In considerable part the loss was due to the large deduction he claims for interest on a loan made to him by his personal holding company. But the man in question is no object of charity, for his personal holding company, organized in Canada, had an income of over $1,500,000 from American dividends in 1936, though it has not yet filed a return.

Perhaps the most flagrant case of this character is that of a retired American Army officer with a large income from valuable American securities which he desires to sell at a very large profit. To escape our income and inheritance tax laws, he used the device of becoming a naturalized Canadian citizen, and 6 days later organized four Bahamas corporations to hold his securities. He and his lawyers apparently think that he can now sell his securities free from any taxes on his profits, since there are no income taxes in the Bahamas and that he has adroitly escaped American taxes.

2. THE DEVICE OF FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES

Two New York insurance agents have caused the organization of insurance companies in the Bahamas with a view to enabling taxpayers to secure spurious deductions for interest through an ingenious scheme for the issuance of life-insurance policies. Americans who went into the scheme purported to pay a large single premium for their policies, but immediately borrowed back practically the entire sum. Under the plan the so-called policyholders sought to obtain a large deduction for interest on this loan, although the fact was that no interest was really paid. By this means five prominent Americans sought to evade nearly $550,000 in income taxes in the years 1932 to 1936. This fraud was discovered by the Treasury's investigators and all of the taxpayers have now submitted offers to pay the full amount of taxes evaded, plus interest. Until our investigation is completed we do not know how many similar companies may have been organized in other countries and utilized by our citizens; nor do we yet know whether this newly invented type of fraud has other ramifications.

3. THE DEVICE OF DOMESTIC PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

The rates of tax applicable to personal holding companies were reduced in 1936 at the time of the enactment of the undistributed-profits tax. It was believed at that time that the combined rates of the two taxes would be sufficient to insure the distribution of the entire incomes of these companies and the consequent imposition of surtaxes upon their owners. This expectation has not been realized.

Thus the single stockholder of one large personal holding company saved himself $322,000 by causing his company to distribute none of its income to him.

In another case a man and his wife saved $791,000 through the use of personal holding companies in 1936.

In a third case the personal holding company reported over $500,000 of net income, but the total taxes paid by the two stockholders, husband and wife, were less than $60,000, due principally to credits for payments on indebtedness the holding company prudently incurred in accumulating properties for its owners. If the personal holding company had not been in existence, the stockholders would have paid over $200,000 additional income taxes.

Another favorite device is to organize a considerable number of personal holding companies not only for the sake of reducing the tax but of increasing the Treasury's difficulties in auditing transactions between companies. At last accounts one man had caused to be set up some 96 companies scattered all over the country. Two other individuals were utilizing 23 personal holding companies.

4. THE DEVICE OF INCORPORATING YACHTS AND COUNTRY ESTATES

Many wealthy taxpayers today are dodging the express provisions of the law denying deductions for personal expenses by incorporating their yachts or their country estates, turning over to the yacht or to the estate securities yielding an income just sufficient to pay the entire expenses of operation. Hundreds of thousands of dollars in income taxes are annually avoided in this way.

Thus one man's yacht is owned by his personal holding company, along with $3,000,000 in securities. He rents the yacht from his company for a sum far less than the cost of upkeep, and the company uses its income from the securities to pay the wages of the captain and crew, the expenses of operating the yacht, and an annual depreciation allowance. None of these items would be deductible if this individual owned the yacht personally.

A great many wealthy taxpayers are utilizing a similar arrangement for the operation of their country places and town houses.

One man has placed his $5,000,000 city residence in such a corporation; another his racing stable, whose losses last year were nearly $200,000. The tax savings he thus sought to obtain through the use of the holding company were $140,000.

One wealthy woman has improved on the general plan of evasion by causing her personal holding company, which owns her country place, to employ her husband at a salary to manage it. She can thereby supply him with pocket money, and in effect claims a tax deduction for the expense of maintaining him.

5. THE DEVICE OF ARTIFICIAL DEDUCTIONS FOR INTEREST LOSSES, ETC.

Taxpayers are seeking greatly to reduce their personal income taxes by claiming deductions for interest on loans to them by their personal holding companies, or on loans to them by their family trusts. These transactions normally have no business purpose, but are merely an artificial means of shifting income from one member of the family subject to high surtax rates to another member of the family subject to lower rates.

Thus, one woman claims a large annual deduction for interest on a loan made to her by her husband as trustee of a trust which she created for their children. The mother thereby seeks to secure a deduction for her contribution to the children's support, and since the trust is revocable by her husband, the parents still have the desired control over the property and its income.

In the same category are losses deducted by taxpayers who claim that their racing stables or hobby farms were operated for profit, even though a profit is never realized. Thus, a prominent manufacturer seeks a deduction of over $125,000 against his income from his business, on account of his losses in operating a chicken farm.

6. THE DEVICE OF THE CREATION OF MULTIPLE TRUSTS FOR RELATIVES AND DEPENDENTS

Splitting income two ways, between husband and wife, reduces income taxes and leaves the family income intact. Splitting the family income many ways by means of many trusts, all for the same beneficiaries, may effect a much greater saving, while leaving the money actually in the same hands. For the creator of the trust often constitutes himself or his wife as trustee, and thus retains full control over the investment and disposition of the fund itself and of is income.

One thrifty taxpayer has formed 64 trusts for the benefit of four members of his immediate family, and thereby claims to have saved them over $485,000 in 1 year in taxes.

Another thrifty pair have constituted 40 trusts for their relatives, and a prominent lawyer and his wife utilize 16 trusts for the same purpose. The first pair maintains numbered brokerage accounts, and only at the end of the year are the beneficial owners identified. In this way innumerable transactions are carried on, often between accounts, which do not actually affect the beneficial interests of their owners, but which are designed solely to reduce tax liability.

7. THE DEVICE OF HUSBAND AND WIFE OR FATHER AND CHILDREN PARTNERSHIPS

The purpose of these partnerships, like the multiple trusts, is to split the family income artificially into two parts; or, if the children are taken in, into still smaller fractions.

There are many instances of this kind, but to illustrate the point it is sufficient to cite the case of a New York brokerage firm which late in 1935 admitted into partnership the four minor children, two boys and two girls, of one of the partners. The tax saving he sought thereby in 1936 amounted to over $50,000.

8. THE DEVICE OF PENSION TRUSTS

For 10 years the revenue acts have sought to encourage pension trusts for aged employees by providing corporations with a special deduction on account of contributions thereto, and exempting the trust itself from tax. Recently this exemption has been twisted into a means of tax avoidance by the creation of pension trusts which include as beneficiaries only small groups of officers and directors who are in the high-income brackets. In this fashion high-salaried officers seek to provide themselves with generous retiring allowances, while at the same time the corporation claims a deduction therefor, in the hope that the fund may accumulate income free from tax.

Thus in one case $43,000 is annually appropriated by the corporation to a pension trust for the benefit of its two chief owners. One of the co-owners will retire at the age of 65 with a monthly pension of $1,725 and the other will retire at 60 with a monthly pension of $1,425.

These eight types of tax avoidance are sufficient to show that there is a well-defined purpose and practice on the part of some taxpayers to defeat the intent of Congress to tax incomes in accordance with ability to pay. In some cases, the Bureau of Internal Revenue under existing law can establish a liability or, indeed, proceed on the ground of fraud; but many of these cases fall in the category of a legal though highly immoral avoidance of the intent of the law. It seems, therefore, that legislation should be passed at this session of the Congress in order to eliminate these loopholes which our preliminary investigation has proved; and that as a result of the further investigation this summer and autumn the next session of the Congress should finally close any further loopholes which may be discovered.

In addition to these cases of moral fraud, there are three other major instances in which the law itself permits individuals and corporations to avoid their equitable share of the tax burden.

I. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION

This is perhaps the most glaring loophole in our present revenue law. Since 1928 large oil and mining corporations have been entitled to deduct from 5 to 27½ percent of their gross income as an allowance for the depletion of their mines or wells, and the deduction may be taken even though the cost of the property has been completely recovered. Thus, in 1936, one mining company deducted nearly $3,000,000 under this provision, although it had already completely recovered the cost of its property. The amount of the deduction was a sheer gift from the United States to this taxpayer and its stockholders, and the revenue that we lost thereby was $818,000. Similar annual losses of revenue in the cases of a few other typical companies are $584,000, $557,000, $512,000, $272,000, $267,000, $202,000, and $152,000. The estimated annual loss of revenue due to this source alone is about $75,000,000. I recommended in 1933 that this provision be eliminated but nothing was done at that time, and it has since remained unchanged.

II. THE DIVISION OF INCOME BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE IN THE EIGHT COMMUNITY PROPERTY STATES

This is another major cause of revenue loss, which is unjustifiable because obtained at the expense of taxpayers in the 40 States which do not have community property laws. A New York resident with a salary of $100,000 pays about $32,525 Federal income tax; a Californian with the same salary may cause one-half to be reported by his wife and the Federal income taxes payable by the two will be only $18,626. The total loss of revenue due to this unjustifiable discrimination against the residents of 40 States runs into the millions.

III. TAXATION OF NONRESIDENT ALIENS

The 1936 act eliminated the requirement that a nonresident alien (without United States office or business) should file a return; fixed the withholding rate for individuals at 10 percent; and freed the nonresident alien from taxation on American capital gains. Since the total Federal tax upon a citizen or resident amounts to 10 percent of his total net income at about $25,000 (in the case of a married individual with no dependents), the withholding rate has proved in practice to be too low as applied to wealthy nonresident alien individuals. There are a number of cases of nonresident aliens with large incomes from American trusts or with large American investments whose taxes have been cut to one-third or one-fifth of what they paid under the prior act.

Thus one American woman who married an Englishman had an income from this country in 1935 of nearly $300,000. Her tax for 1936 will, therefore, be approximately $30,000 as against over $160,000 under the prior law.

Another American woman who married a Frenchman has an income of over $150,000 from American trusts, on which she paid a tax of about $55,000 in 1935. Her tax is reduced to about $15,000 by the 1936 law. Although the tightening of the withholding provisions in 1936 will tend to insure more revenue from nonresident aliens in the lower income brackets, the present taxing provisions are not satisfactory as applied to nonresident aliens with incomes in the higher brackets.

The problem of tax avoidance is not new. The Congress devoted particular attention to it in 1933 and 1934, and by legislation effectively put a stop to many evasive devices discovered then as having been in use. The practices outlined above can and should be stopped in the same way.

In conclusion, I have two observations to make from the evidence before me. In the first place, the instances I have given above are disclosed by a quick check of comparatively few individual returns. As I have said before, most of the large corporation returns have not yet been filed. The general audit of 1936 returns is just beginning. Nevertheless, it is likely that the cases I have digested above are symptomatic of a large number of others, which will be disclosed by the usual careful audit.

In the second place, the ordinary salaried man and the small merchant do not resort to these or similar devices. The great bulk of our 5,500,000 returns are honestly made. Legalized avoidance or evasion by the so-called leaders of the business community is not only demoralizing to the revenues, it is demoralizing to those who practice it as well. It throws an additional burden of taxation upon the other members of the community who are less able to bear it, and who are already cheerfully bearing their fair share. The success of our revenue system depends equally upon fair administration by the Treasury and upon completely honest returns by the taxpayer.

The disclosures are so serious that I recommend that authority be given to the Treasury Department with, an adequate appropriation, in order that a complete and immediate investigation may be conducted. The cost of such an investigation will be returned many times over to the Treasury of the United States.

Faithfully,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

A feeling of indignation on reading this letter will, I am confident, be yours, as it was mine.

What the facts set forth mean to me is that we have reached another major difficulty in the maintenance of the normal processes of our Government. We are trying harder than ever before to relieve suffering and want, to protect the weak, to curb avarice, to prevent booms and depressions—and to balance the Budget. Taxation necessary to these ends is the foundation of sound governmental finance. When our legitimate revenues are attacked, the whole structure of our Government is attacked. "Clever little schemes" are not admirable when they undermine the foundations of society.

The three great branches of the Government have a joint concern in this situation. First, it is the duty of the Congress to remove new loopholes devised by attorneys for clients willing to take an unethical advantage of society and their own Government. Second, it is the duty of the executive branch of the Government to collect taxes, to investigate fully all questionable cases, to prosecute where wrong has been done, and to make recommendations for closing loopholes. Third, it is the duty of the courts to give full consideration to the intent of the Congress in passing tax laws and to give full consideration to all evidence which points to an objective of evasion on the part of the taxpayer.

Very definitely, the issue immediately before us is the single one relating to the evasion or unethical avoidance of existing laws. That should be kept clearly in mind by the Congress and the public. Already efforts to befog this issue appear. Already certain newspaper publishers are seeking to make it appear—first, that if an individual can devise unanticipated methods to avoid taxes which the Congress intended him to pay, he is doing nothing unpatriotic or unethical; and, second, that because certain individuals do not approve of high income-tax brackets, or the undistributed earnings tax, or the capital gains tax, the first duty of the Congress should be the repeal or reduction of those taxes. In other words, not one but many red herrings are in preparation.

But it seems to me that the first duty of the Congress is to empower the Government to stop these evil practices, and that legislation to this end should not be confused with legislation to revise tax schedules. That is a wholly different subject.

In regard to that subject, I have already suggested to the Congress that at this session there should be no new taxes and no changes of rates. And I have indicated to the Congress that the Treasury will be prepared by next November to present to the appropriate committees information on the basis of which the Congress may, if it chooses, undertake revisions of the tax structure.

The long-term problem of tax policy is wholly separate from the immediate problem of glaring evasion and avoidance of existing law.

In this immediate problem the decency of American morals is involved.

The example of successful tax dodging by a minority of very rich individuals breeds efforts by other people to dodge other laws as well as tax laws.

It is also a matter of deep regret to know that lawyers of high standing at the bar not only have advised and are advising their clients to utilize tax-avoidance devices but are actively using these devices in their own personal affairs. We hear too often from lawyers, as well as from their clients, the sentiment, "It is all right to do it if you can get away with it."

I am confident that the Congress will wish to enact legislation at this session specifically and exclusively aimed at making the present tax structure evasion proof.

I am confident also that the Congress will give to the Treasury all authority necessary to expand and complete the present preliminary investigation, including, of course, full authority to summon witnesses and compel their testimony. The ramifications and the geographical scope of a complete investigation make it necessary to utilize every power of Government which can contribute to the end desired.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1937.

MR. WARREN, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the demonstration just accorded you clearly indicates how much we love you and how happy we are to see you return to us, much refreshed by your brief vacation.

I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure every Member of the House joins me, in personally thanking the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] for the fair and efficient manner in which he has presided over the House and discharged your duties during your absence. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be allowed to sit in hearings during the session of the House tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM A. DEVINE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the bill S. 1548, for the relief of William A. Devine, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. BATES, Mr. MERRITT, Mr. QUINN, and Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania, were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] was granted permission to address the House for 1 hour. The Chair has been informed that the gentleman from Maryland does not care to exercise that privilege at this time.

Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

COMMITTEE FOR INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION

ANOTHER CRISIS—NOT A SHAM ONE, BUT A REAL ONE—CONFRONTS US

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the President's message it is gathered that he is again of the opinion that either another emergency or a crisis has come upon us, requiring his intervention.

The most amazing thing is that so many have been able to escape the dragnet put out by his legal experts to soak the rich. The query comes: Would he be so solicitous, were the income he desired to reach the property of an organization with millions of members—great potential voting power?

In this connection occurs the thought that his message makes no reference to the income of the C. I. O., which, if its present claim of membership be accurate, has 3,000,000 members. With dues of $1 a month, to say nothing of special assessments, that means $36,000,000 a year, all taken from the pocket of the worker.

This message seems to be another—to use the President's words—"red herring", drawn across the trail to distract public attention from the administration's attack upon the integrity of the Supreme Court and from its failure to enforce the laws for the protection of the citizen.

There is no doubt but that we are confronted by a crisis, but it exists not because of tax dodging, the evils of which can and will be eliminated by the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice, and additional legislation by Congress, if that be needed.

The real danger which confronts us—and it is a serious one—is the danger of civil strife, of revolution, because of the failure of the administration to protect the worker in his job, to protect the owner of home and factory in his right to peaceably occupy his own property; because of the failure of the Federal Government to protect either "property rights" or "human rights."

It is not intervention on the part of the President that is so much needed. It is the performance of his duty to enforce the provisions of the Constitution which guarantee the rights of the citizen; the performance of his duty to enforce the laws we already have.

Let a description of the existing situation be given by disclosing the facts.

REVOLUTION IS HERE—LOSS OF OUR LIBERTIES WILL FOLLOW UNLESS WE AWAKEN AND ACT

Rebellion is organized resistance to lawful authority. It may bring confusion, disorder, lawlessness, riot, insurrection, anarchy, and finally disintegration.

All of these were brought to Michigan, and now to the country, by C. I. O. and as a result of the sit-down strike.

Rebellion successful is revolution. Revolution can exist only when it has destroyed the previous form of government—in our case, democracy. It is always followed, when brought about from above, by that form of government which the successful leaders choose to give.

Proof is found in the governments of Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini. There, free assembly, free speech, political freedom—the foundation upon which rests liberty of the citizen—are all denied, and any who seek a change in government are promptly shot or beheaded.

Today, if ability to draw followers to their banners, to bend people to their will, to command obedience to their wishes, be the measures of greatness, our country has two great leaders—Franklin Delano Roosevelt, now President of the United States, and John L. Lewis, self-appointed guiding power of the Committee for Industrial Organization. Their purposes, their objectives, appear to be much the same.

THE C. I. O.

Reports as late as today show that the Committee for Industrial Organization, the C. I. O., is neither a corporation, a partnership, nor a legal entity of any kind, although it now assumes to issue charters.

John L. Lewis was its father and its mother, and it is his child, and to date, although it has grown to a claimed membership of more than 3,000,000, exercises the power of life and death over many industrial plants, can and does determine who shall and who shall not work, seeks to declare that no industry shall operate until it deducts from the pay roll of its employees and pays the C. I. O. fees assessed by Lewis and his associates, it is still the child, subject in every way to the will and control of Lewis.

During the days when we were considering the authorization to spend $1,500,000,000 of the taxpayers' money for relief and to give work; while men were endangering their health by swimming the river at Warren, Ohio, in an attempt to evade picket lines and get to the jobs they already had; while Lewis' organizer, Hugh Thompson, was announcing that 3,000 men would swell the picket lines at Buffalo; while Chicago police were engaged in an attempt to turn back a thousand marching men who sought to deprive the workers in that district of their jobs; while another thousand C. I. O. members were marching from Indiana Harbor to assist in that effort, Lewis directs another hundred thousand men employed by the independent steel companies to cease work—all this, while the worker's money is being used to create jobs, by Lewis' direction hundreds of thousands of men are ceasing work—and all because three independent steel companies will not sign a written agreement giving Lewis control over the men who work in their plants.

BLOODSHED FOLLOWS THE C. I. O.

A dictator has come to America and, as under all dictators, blood is being shed.

When a day set apart for the worship of the One who gave us life was drawing to a close the C. I. O. brought death to Chicago. On the western shore of Lake Michigan men who wanted to work were toiling at the tasks which enabled them to provide for their families. Nearby, members of the C. I. O. resolved to force these workers from their tasks, to close the plant, compel the employer to submit to a written agreement, to be followed by the closed shop and the check-off.

They armed themselves with knives, pieces of pipe, clubs, bricks, stones, some say with firearms, and more than a thousand set out on their fourth massed attempt to accomplish their purpose, even though blood be shed, lives be taken. Using "red" tactics, they put their women in the forefront and hid behind their skirts.

Finding Chicago police in their way, they refused to halt when commanded, and charged the police. Lawless force and violence met legal force, and in a few moments four lay dead and more than a hundred were seriously wounded.

These men died—they were led to their death—and others were maimed and injured because of the false teachings of John L. Lewis and his "red" agitators.

These men died—they were led to their death—because John L. Lewis gave them reason to believe the sit-down strike was justifiable. These men died—they were led to their death—because John L. Lewis convinced them that if they drove other workers from their jobs and took possession of the plant by force, officers would not interfere.

These men died because they followed the methods and procedure laid down and sanctioned by John L. Lewis, which he must have known would result in the death of someone.

These men died because John L. Lewis, by his action, endorses the policy of Earl Browder, who said:

We industrial unionists are going to take over the industries some day for three very good reasons:
1. Because we need them.
2. Because we want them.
3. Because we have the power to get them.

These men died because John L. Lewis insists upon having his own way. Their blood is upon his hands. His doctrines, his organizers, led them to their death.

Streets and factories will run red with blood unless he changes his tactics or Federal authority asserts itself.

WORKERS SACRIFICED TO AMBITION

These men are among the first to be sacrificed upon the altar of Lewis' personal ambition. Unless protection be given to peaceful citizens, to workers who desire to follow their occupation, they will not be the last, for Lewis it is who employs and uses as his organizers "red" Communists, who follow the advice of Walter and Victor Reuther to "carry on the fight for a soviet America."

C. I. O. is a committee formed in November 1935 by the presidents of eight international labor unions, opposed to the democratic, self-governing features of the American Federation of Labor—

To encourage and promote organization of the workers in the mass production and unorganized industries of the Nation.

Since then, other unions have joined and their presidents have thereupon become members of this committee.

It does not operate under a constitution and bylaws. There are no articles of agreement between C. I. O. and its union members.

It has been its practice, whenever there is a drive for membership in any industry, to enter into an agreement, if there be a union in that industry, with that union for the appointment by the C. I. O. of an organizing committee. This organizing committee is granted full authority to bargain with employers, to administer the affairs of the union, to carry on the work of the organization, to fix the initiation fees and dues, to suspend dues, and to control all funds; and the agreement provides that such committee "shall have complete power and authority" to control the destiny of the newly formed organization.

Lewis and the presidents of these unions, never elected by the membership of the unions to the positions which they hold in the C. I. O., are the only "bosses" of the C. I. O.

MINORITY RULE

There is another group, consisting of the workers in the various industries. These men sign a membership card; they may or they may not originally pay an initiation fee; they are subject to monthly dues, in the determination of the amount of which they have no voice; they have no right to vote on whether a strike shall or shall not be declared; they have no voice in the expenditure of the fees, dues, or special assessments which they may have paid; they have no right to demand an accounting from anyone.

Over them the committee assumes the power to inflict fines, to expel them from membership, and to determine whether they shall or shall not work.

They are taxed, but they are not represented, except by self-chosen leaders.

The principles of democracy, as enunciated and employed by the American Federation of Labor and its organization and activities, are entirely disregarded by the C. I. O., where there is no majority rule, but a rule of militant minorities over the majority.

In the recent series of strikes there are many, many illustrations of this. Just one will be cited and that at Toledo, in a plant which employed 220 workers, 202 of whom were affiliates of the Metal Polishers and Buffers' Union, which was affiliated with the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L. The remaining 18 employees, members of the United Automobile Workers, were hired as common laborers and, immediately upon being given employment, notified the management that unless they were recognized as the exclusive agency for collective bargaining a sit-down would be declared.

The sit-down did not occur, because the 202 of the A. F. of L. had the courage to refuse to permit the 18 to interfere with the operation of the plant.

POLITICAL SUPPORT

At Lewis' bidding, the Civil Liberties Committee, with the power of the Federal Government behind it, springs into activity. So far, it has failed to present other than one side of any picture.

Lewis, in his drive for an industrial dictatorship, meets with no interference from Roosevelt, the President. Through the President's Governor Murphy, C. I. O. received active and invaluable assistance. Unhampered by the exercise of Federal authority, it is permitted to exert unlawful pressure to force workers into the union. Its acts of violence are uncriticized.

When Ford workers, on private property, asserted their right to repel invaders and lawful force and violence met lawless force and violence and conquered, the organization demanded the enforcement of the law which it has consistently violated.

Lewis claims to be acting in behalf of the worker. He, those supporting him, and Madam Perkins prate about "human rights", as distinguished from "property rights", yet Lewis, with the sanction of Madam Perkins, who attempted to justify his sit-down tactics, with his "flying squadrons", who, were they acting in behalf of employers, would be termed "thugs", dispossessed 126,000 workers of their jobs, withheld those jobs for more than 40 days. Hypocrisy more flagrant was never uttered.

Nor does the C. I. O., in its drive for members, hesitate to use the name of the present administration and of the Federal Government.

Workers are told that President Roosevelt wants them to join the union.

On occasions, C. I. O. organizers are accompanied by special investigators from Washington, with banners draped over the hood of their automobiles, carrying the statement:

United States Senate car, La Follette Civil Liberties Committee, Investigators.

C. I. O.'s newspaper boasts of the "heat" put on by the Civil Liberties Committee of the Senate at the turning point of the Flint strike.

The uneducated worker is led to believe that the drive is under Presidential authority; that the Government itself is organizing the workers, and that the Senate of the United States acts as a committee which is supporting this campaign for membership.

ACTIONS, NOT WORDS, ARE THE MEASURE OF A MAN'S SINCERITY

In Senate Document No. 14 of the Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, compiled under the direction of John L. Lewis, then president of the United Mine Workers of America, to lay bare the attempt by Communists to seize the American labor movement and to destroy our Government, we find on page 1 these statements:

Imported revolution is knocking at the door of the United Mine Workers of America and of the American people. The seizure of this union is being attempted as the first step in the realization of a thoroughly organized program of the agencies and forces behind the Communist International at Moscow for the conquest of the American continent.

The overthrow and destruction of this Government, with the establishment of an absolute and arbitrary dictatorship, and the elimination of all forms of popular voice in governmental affairs, is being attempted on a more gigantic scale, with more resolute purpose, and with more crafty design than at any time in the history of this Nation.

These statements were no hasty, ill-considered utterances of a man forced to speak at once and without deliberation. They were the result of a prolonged, painstaking, and thorough investigation made under the direction of John L. Lewis and may be accepted as true.

John L. Lewis, before his viewpoint had been warped by his consuming personal ambition, speaking of a similar movement, accurately described his own present organization and its purpose in these words:

The movement is aimed not only at the labor unions but at the entire industrial, social, and political structure of the country, and with the single aim of eventually establishing a soviet dictatorship in the United States.

If now it can be shown that those who he then said were behind that movement to overthrow and destroy this Government of ours are now behind and in active control of the policies and the activities of the C. I. O., and if their methods be the same as those which he then denounced, it then follows, the laws of cause and effect remaining always constant, that the C. I. O. is today engaged in an attempt to overthrow and destroy both the American Federation of Labor and the Government of the United States.

"RED" COMMUNISTS OF 1924 BECOME LEADERS OF C. I. O., WHICH ADOPTS THEIR METHODS

Let us review the history of that time and call to mind the men who were behind that movement, their political affiliations, their avowed purposes, and the methods which they used, as stated by them, and compare the facts disclosed with the record which has recently been unrolled by the C. I. O. From that comparison, honest, sincere believers in the theory that this Government was formed to render secure life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness should be able to form accurate and guiding convictions and so chart a patriotic course for their own conduct.

Let me call the roll, in part at least, of those who, in 1922 and 1924, according to the report prepared by the United Mine Workers of America, of which Mr. Lewis was president, brought "imported revolution" to and stood "knocking at the door of the United Mine Workers and of the American people", and who sought "the overthrow and destruction of this Government", and give you his description of those men and their activities.

One of the principal organizations named as engaged in the attempt to overthrow and destroy the labor organizations and our Government was the Communist Party of America. Of that organization it was said—I quote:

It is purely a revolutionary organization and makes no pretense at legality. * * * This party has at its head the supreme executive revolutionary committee in America, responsible only to * * * officials of the Communist International.

On the surface and working partly in the open is another revolutionary organization, known as the Workers Party of America. * * *— fundamentally the same as that of the Communist Party of America, i. e., to overthrow the Government of the United States.

With a mission—

Continuing to quote:

Joined with these two revolutionary parties * * * is the Trade Union Educational League, headed by William Z. Foster. * * * This league is * * * the direct instrumentality * * * of the Communist International.

Then was named the "American Civil Liberties Union" at New York as another of the groups engaged in the then effort to overthrow American government.

Other groups were likewise designated as having the same objective, looking toward the same end, and, quoting again:

They are fused into united effort, giving mutual support to each other in their numerous activities.

Through this interlocking arrangement—quoting again:

These Communist groups interlock also with the Communist International and the Red Trade Labor Union International at Moscow, so that the revolutionary movement in America is the direct offspring and agency of the Communist regime in Russia, for the purpose of seizing and possessing themselves of the American continent through the mediumship of revolution inspired and conducted from the stronghold of bolshevism on the other side of the Atlantic.

Today these same groups, with like inspiration, acting together, are behind, and acting with the C. I. O. in its present war on industry and the American Federation of Labor.

Lewis then named Earl Browder as Foster's right-hand man. Browder, one time general secretary of the Communist Party, its candidate for President in 1936, then so roundly condemned by Lewis, today is an ardent supporter of the C. I. O. and its methods.

Powers Hapgood, John Brophy, and Adolph Germer, all in that movement, were later described by Lewis as:

Fakirs, repudiated leaders, traitors to the unions, opportunists, and purveyors of every falsehood, slander, and deception.

Brophy and Hapgood were described as agents of the Communists and one of them at least, Lewis intimated, was paid direct from Moscow.

Lewis' United Mine Workers Journal, on May 1, 1928, made the statement that the leadership of Brophy, Patrick Toohey, and Hapgood and a few others had been—

Doing its dirtiest to capture the United Mine Workers and to transform this splendid union into a Communist organization.

Powers Hapgood is now field representative for the C. I. O.

John Brophy, then characterized as a traitor to the unions, the purveyor of every falsehood, slander, and deception, is now directed to supervise the administration of the C. I. O.

Adolph Germer, as stated, was roundly denounced by Lewis in 1930. For years he was a Socialist agitator. Today he is an organizer for C. I. O., his work second only to that of Hapgood and Brophy.

Patrick Toohey, a leader in the movement which was "doing its dirtiest to capture the United Mine Workers and to transform" it "into a Communist organization", and who is now in charge of Communist activity in Philadelphia, is the man who saved the day for the C. I. O. in the R. C. A. strike in Camden, N. J.

Sidney Hillman, one of the original seven who formed the C. I. O., president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America—which made 1936 campaign contributions of $82,281.89, principally to Labor's Nonpartisan League and the American Labor Party, and including $4,350 to the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party—is one of those who in 1922 organized the Russian-American Industrial Corporation to raise a million dollars among the workers of America to bring about the "rehabilitation of Russia." He was active on the I. W. W. defense committee and an honorary president of the Ultra Red National Religion and Labor Foundation.

David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union—which made campaign contributions in 1936 of $61,385.85 to the American Labor Party, Labor's Nonpartisan League, and the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party—was the man who undertook to raise $100,000 from the American radical unionists for the support of the Communist "red" front in Spain.

Clinton S. Golden was for several years business manager and field director of Brookwood Labor College at Katonah, N. Y., a school for labor students, prospective organizers, and strike leaders. He was a member of the board of counselors of Commonwealth College at Mena, Ark., where, according to a legislative inquiry in 1935, free love practices prevailed and communism and atheism were taught.

While Golden and Hillman were directors of the Garland fund, money was allocated from that fund to the Ferrier group, whose publication then stated:

We are anarchists because we see in the State an enemy of liberty and human progress; and we are Communists because we conceive communism as the most rational and just economic theory yet proposed. * * * As anarchists, we seek the abolition of the State.

This group then said:

The all-important thing is that industry be controlled at the point of production.

Which is what the C. I. O. accomplished at Flint, Detroit, and other places.

Other C. I. O. organizers, and ardent supporters who have been listed as Communists, can be named. Among them are:

Alfredo Abillo, a member of the Communist Party at South Chicago and a paid Steel Workers' Organizing Committee organizer among Mexicans in that section.

John W. Anderson, a C. I. O. organizer, who was the Communist candidate for Governor of Michigan in 1934.

Merlin D. Bishop, graduate and former member of the staff of the Brookwood Labor College, and who is on the pay roll as "educational director" for the C. I. O.

Peter Chapa, who for years was a Communist organizer, is now a full-time organizer for the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee at Gary.

Ruth Chapa, wife of Peter Chapa, who is paid by the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, the S. W. O. C., to do missionary work in the homes of Spanish steel workers.

Joe Cook, a member of the Communist Party, and who is a part-time organizer for the S. W. O. C. in South Chicago.

Margaret Cowl, Communist writer and agitator, who is on the C. I. O. pay roll and was active in promoting the women's activities in the strike at Flint, Mich.

Dave Doran, Pittsburgh district organizer for the Young Communist League, who is on the S. W. O. C. pay roll and who is a close associate of William Z. Foster, and confers frequently with Philip Murray, director of C. I. O.'s steel organization drive.

James W. Ford, colored, Communist candidate for Vice President in 1936. He attended a conference of Negro leaders, called by Philip Murray at Pittsburgh on February 6.

William K. Gebert, associate of William Z. Foster and member of the central committee of the Communist Party, is now a C. I. O. organizer, and confers frequently with Philip Murray.

Paul Glaser, attorney for the section committee of the Communist Party, is a full salaried member of the S. W. O. C. staff.

Doyle Glormer, reporter for the Communist People's Press, is on the pay roll of the S. W. O. C.

Jess Gonzales, Mexican, member of the Communist Party and a full-time salaried man on the S. W. O. C. in Pittsburgh.

Francis J. Gorman, president of the United Textile Workers, just recently became a member of the advisory board of communistic Commonwealth College at Mena, Ark.

Hansen, first name unknown, member of the Communist Party at Chicago Heights and a full-time organizer for the S. W. O. C.

Charles Henry, member of the Communist Party and part-time organizer for the S. W. O. C. in South Chicago.

Mary Hillyer, leader in the left-wing League for Industrial Democracy, who has been assisting Comrade Margaret Cowl, who was active in promoting women's activities in the Flint, Mich., strike.

Clarence Irwin, district organizer for the Communist Party and on the S. W. O. C. pay roll in Pittsburgh.

Genora Johnson, member of the Socialist Party and leader of the women's brigade at Flint.

Leo Krzycki, vice president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, a member of the national executive committee of the Socialist Party, and a member of the advisory board of the C. I. O.

Louis Majors, member of the Communist Party, and on the pay roll of the S. W. O. C. in Pittsburgh.

Homer S. Martin, former Baptist minister, who has been a left-wing orator for years, is president of the United Automobile Workers and Lewis' right-hand man in Michigan.

Leonides McDonald, Negro, Communist leader, on the pay roll of the S. W. O. C. at Indiana Harbor.

Mike Ostroski, member of the Communist Party, and on the pay roll of the S. W. O. C. in Gary.

Blain Owen, alias Boris Israel, and whose real name is Isreal Brestein, and who formerly represented Amtorg, the Soviet trading agency on the Pacific, at present is working with William K. Gebert in the Pittsburgh district.

George A. Patterson, member of the Communist Party, and on the pay roll of the S. W. O. C. in South Chicago.

Rose Pesotta, veteran anarchist leader, who was an intimate of Emma Goldman, is an active C. I. O. organizer in the rubber and automobile industries.

George Powers, alias Morris Powers, former district organizer of the Communist Party in South Carolina, is now a district director of the S. W. O. C. of the C. I. O. in Pittsburgh, at a large salary.

Lee Pressman, radical lawyer, C. I. O.'s general counsel.

Walter Reuther, Victor Reuther, Roy Reuther, long-time agitators for left-wing causes and now C. I. O. organizers. Victor and Walter are graduates of the Communist Brookwood Labor College at Katonah, N. Y., a training school for black and white agitators.

Eleanor Rye, colored, an organizer for the National Negro Congress, a Communist organization, and on the private pay roll of Van A. Bittner, Chicago regional director of the C. I. O.

John Schmies, former assistant to William Z. Foster and one time organizer of the Auto Workers' Union, a Communist organization, which was active until a few years ago. He is the Detroit representative of the fraternal-orders committee, organized by the C. I. O. to line up fraternal organizations.

Tom Shane, member of the Communist Party and a full-time C. I. O. organizer on the steel workers' pay roll in Pittsburgh.

Tucker P. Smith, president-director of Brookwood College, who writes for the auto workers' C. I. O. organ and who assisted the C. I. O. in founding a training school at Saugatuck, Mich., last summer, for the training of agitators for the sit-down strikes.

Jack Stachel, member of the central committee of the Communist Party, who is a director of C. I. O. pay-roll organizers in Pennsylvania and who wrote the foreword to one of Foster's propaganda pamphlets distributed by C. I. O. organizers.

Maurice Sugar, radical lawyer, who was the Communist candidate for the office of recorder's judge in the city of Detroit in 1936, and who is on the pay roll of the C. I. O.

Mary Heaton Vorse, well-known Communist author, who has been directing the organization of C. I. O. women's auxiliaries.

William Weinstone, secretary of the Michigan district of the Communist Party, who has been directing Communist activities in the Flint and Detroit strikes, and who is the author of the pamphlet, The Great Sit-Down Strike.

In addition to the long list of Communists and supporters, whose names I have recited as being moving spirits in the Committee for Industrial Organization, we have numbered, among those giving it active or tacit aid, the National Labor Relations Board; the Secretary of Labor, Madam Perkins; the Governor of the State of Michigan, Frank Murphy; the President of the United States.

Small wonder then that, with the hope of higher wages, with its preaching of class hatred so often and so effectively used by the President himself, and by the use of force, which so far has proven to be irresistible, the C. I. O. is enlisting and drafting into its army the workmen of the Nation.

As Lewis, in 1924, charged many of these men with being Communists, bent upon the destruction of the American Federation of Labor and of the Government, so today he is, by the American Federation of Labor, characterized as a Communist, described as being "in bed with Communists", and charged with an attempt to destroy the American Federation of Labor and our democratic form of government.

Working with these men, through them, using their organizations and their methods, he cannot now escape responsibility for their acts or the result of his own actions.

His present purpose is the same as that which he attributed to the organizers of the industrial union when, in 1924, he said their purpose was:

> The overthrow and destruction of this Government, with the establishment of an absolute and arbitrary dictatorship, and the elimination of all forms of popular voice in governmental affairs.

If the fact that those who, in 1924, were described by Lewis as Communists, having shown no change of thought or of method, are now all united with him in this C. I. O. drive against industry and the American Federation of Labor, and the statement of William Z. Foster that—

> The C. I. O. organizers of today have a great advantage • • • in the fact that today there is in existence a strong Communist Party to lend its active assistance—does not prove that the present move is communistic, let us compare the methods which they recommend and those which the C. I. O. is using.

If the guiding, controlling actors be Communists; if their methods be those of Communists; if their purpose be control and regimentation of labor and of industry; and if those who follow their banner gain, in the end, no material advantage, the movement is wholly dangerous and unworthy of support.

William Z. Foster, America's Communist No. 1, national chairman of the Communist Party in America, outlined the plan and prescribed the methods of procedure for unionizing steel, the methods which have been followed in the C. I. O. drive and strikes.

First. Foster recommended that supporting committees be formed among fraternal organizations. Within a month Philip Murray and three full-fledged Communists spoke at a fraternal orders' conference in Pittsburgh. Lewis sent his blessings, and a fraternal orders' committee was formed, with Bill K. Gebert, recently district organizer for the Communist Party in Chicago, as its national chairman. This organization took an active part in the Detroit strike.

Second. Foster suggested that support should be extended to the building up of the Workers' Alliance. As everyone knows, the Workers' Alliance, as now constituted, is a combination of three "red" organizations, and not long ago, when a State-wide meeting of that organization was held at Harrisburg, Pa., Clinton Golden, the C. I. O. regional director, thanked the alliance for the support it had given and pledged the support of the C. I. O. to the alliance.

Third. Foster suggested that prominent speakers of the National Negro Congress, organized by Communists, should be brought into the steel districts. In February Philip Murray met in conference with James W. Ford, ranking Negro Communist, candidate for Vice President on that ticket; John P. Davis, of the National Negro Congress; and Thyra Edwards, not long returned from Soviet Russia.

Fourth. "The women relatives of the steel workers are a vital factor in the steel industry", said Foster, and directed that they "be organized into ladies' auxiliaries." The C. I. O. immediately adopted the idea.

On the pay roll of the C. I. O., into Flint went Margaret Cowl, leading Communist organizer and writer. There the women's auxiliaries, with their red arm bands and red berets, under Mary Hillyer, leader in the League for Industrial Democracy, and Mary Heaton Vorse, Communist author, marched in the streets assisting the pickets and the sit-downers in the factories.

May 26, at Detroit, these women's auxiliaries marched on the Ford plants in Dearborn.

Fifth. The sit-down strikes no more than began when Foster issued further recommendations dealing with anticipated strike problems. These were distributed through Communist and C. I. O. channels. One of these recommendations was this:

> Prominent liberals and others should be brought into the strike areas. A national citizens' committee, comprising such liberal strike sympathizers, including educators, writers, artists, etc., should be set up.

Within a few days from New York into Flint and Detroit went the American Civil Liberties Union, and a national citizens' committee to support the strikers was formed.

Sixth. Foster advised:

> Not only should all the strikers be mobilized for picketing, but their women and children as well.

We have been accustomed to picketing by women, but in Flint, children were bedecked with the signs and slogans so characteristic of "red" meetings.

Seventh. Foster recommended a legal department and said:

> Here the International Labor Defense can also play an important part.

Onto the stage and representing the strikers came Maurice Sugar, Detroit representative of the Communist International Labor Defense.

ALIENS UNLAWFULLY IN THIS COUNTRY LEAD A SIT-DOWN STRIKE

Eighth. Foster stated:

> Especially vigorous campaigns must be made against all attempts at deportation of foreign-born workers. This emphasizes the need to build up the I. L. D. in the strike centers.

Three of the C. I. O. organizers who assisted in taking possession of the Parke-Davis plant at Detroit—John Dolphin, Solomon Fine, and Anthony Probe—are aliens who are illegally in the United States. Anthony Probe is a candidate for vice president of the U. A. W. A.

C. I. O. DEFIES COURT

Ninth. Foster, the "red" leader, advised:

> When injunctions are issued the strikers should follow the • • • policy of ignoring such court orders.

When Judge Gadola, at Flint, issued injunctions against the continued possession of General Motors plants by the C. I. O. strikers, those injunctions were ignored, and Gov. Frank Murphy, executive officer of the State of Michigan, called in the National Guard and prevented the enforcement of those orders.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE GOVERNMENT

Of late C. I. O. has been proceeding under the Wagner Act, asking for elections in those plants where it was sure it had a majority of the workers. Where it did not have a majority it refused to ask for an election, as, for example, at Flint, where its membership was but a fraction of the total number of workers.

The history of the Flint strike is well told in a pamphlet by William Weinstone, secretary of the Michigan district of the Communist Party. He lists the causes of the victory. Reference is made to but a few.

He gives first place to the sit-down tactics.

Second, he gives credit to workers in Detroit, Cleveland, Toledo, Norwood, and Flint, who—

> Operated as a single unit, as an army which responded to every critical situation and to every danger. Toledo and Norwood workers came to Flint in the first days of the strike and greatly strengthened the fighting lines.

COMMUNIST ACTIVE IN C. I. O. BOASTS OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

He further says:

> Of first-rate importance among the reasons for the victory must be considered the attitude of the Government. By the Government I mean in this case the attitude of the Governor of the State of Michigan and of President Roosevelt.

He states that the C. I. O.—

> Called upon and secured the aid of the La Follette Committee on Civil Rights.

Let us glance for a moment at the "attitude of the Government", to which Weinstone referred.

There has been a long-continued and thorough investigation of the activities of the mine operators in what is termed "bloody Harlan County." If but a fraction of the testimony taken in that investigation be true, the guilty should be brought to justice and measures adopted to prevent a recurrence of any such happenings. If there be truth in the testimony brought out by the Civil Liberties Committee, a reign of terror has existed for many years in Harlan County.

Under the Federal Constitution and a Federal statute, it was the duty of the National Government to protect the citizen. For more than 4 years this administration has had full power to remedy this condition, to prevent this injustice. Yet little was done until assistance to C. I. O.'s organizing efforts was needed.

Unfortunately no investigation of the activities of the C. I. O. in that county has been undertaken. No investigation of the intimidation, of the brutality exercised by the organizers of the C. I. O. has been made.

It is undisputed that in Flint the civil liberties of the citizens of that city were taken from them, but no committee attempted to learn who was responsible.

ARMED INVASION OF STATE

It is undisputed that hundreds of armed men invaded the State of Michigan and the cities of that State during the Flint and the Detroit strikes and, by show of force, intimidated and terrorized peaceful citizens seeking work. No investigation has been made; no steps have been taken to punish those guilty or to prevent a recurrence.

On the contrary, the Governor of the State of Michigan, who was in communication and talked with the Secretary of Labor and with the President, actively prevented protection being given to either property or person. No Communist, no anarchist, no ultra "red" could desire more effective cooperation.

In the motor industry, Ford alone has refused to yield to the demands of the C. I. O. On the 26th of May organizers invaded his plant and were thrown out and beaten by workers.

Immediately a hue and cry went up to the National Labor Relations Board, to the Civil Liberties Committee, to the Governor of Michigan, and to the President for protection.

Protection from what? To protect these organizers in their invasion of private rights; to protect these organizers in their efforts to throw men out of their jobs, to force them to join the C. I. O., to force them to pay dues, to place the C. I. O. in a position where if a man desires to work he must first sign on the dotted line and then pay such assessments as the officers of that organization might demand?

WILL EXECUTIVE OFFICERS PERFORM THEIR DUTIES?

It remains to be seen whether the Governor of the State of Michigan or whether the President of these United States will perform their duties, will abide by the oaths which they took when they assumed office; whether they will permit invaders, armed, to go into a plant, go to the worker's home when he departs from the factory and, by show of force, by intimidation of his wife and children, take from him his liberty, his right to work.

Will those who throughout our land and in these various plants desire to work be protected by State and National Government in that desire?

Let us have an equal and just enforcement of the law—law which will protect not only the organizer, the striker, but law which will protect the man who wishes to remain at his job.

WHAT IS THE C. I. O. AND WHAT IS ITS PURPOSE?

Organization

Briefly let me restate that the Committee for Industrial Organization, commonly referred to as the C. I. O., is not a corporation; it is not an unincorporated association; it is not a partnership. It is a self-selected committee, John L. Lewis being its self-appointed head and the other members being chosen by him and by themselves.

Its letterhead lists Lewis as chairman, Howard as secretary, and Brophy as director. It does not name a treasurer.

The United Mine Workers imposed upon its members assessments which netted, in 1 year, $1,205,617.

C. I. O. claimed a membership of 1,125,000. With dues of $1 a month and with special assessments, some idea of the incalculable amount of money available can be gathered. Minimum dues from the then C. I. O. membership alone amounted to over $16,000,000 per year. With a claimed membership of more than 3,000,000, the income from dues alone would amount to over $36,000,000 a year.

Lewis' United Mine Workers, during the last 6 months of 1936, loaned the C. I. O. $355,000; they contributed $452,418 to Roosevelt's reelection campaign, and they ended the year with $2,754,982 on hand.

With the workers in coal, in steel, in motor production, organized, with workers in the other industries organized, as they are now organized, it is plain to be seen that, at a dollar a month, there are almost unbelievable funds available for the war chest. The Labor World, a Pittsburgh union newspaper, estimates this sum will be in excess of $500,000,000. Half a billion dollars is too much money to have in the hands of unprincipled leaders, such as are found in the C. I. O. organization.

With these millions of dollars at its command, why does not the C. I. O. establish a model plant, with a living wage, proper hours, suitable working conditions, and demonstrate just how manufacturing should be done?

There are no rules or regulations governing the expenditure of this money except those adopted by this committee. There is no accounting of funds available to the public or to the membership. There is no provision of law which prevents the use of these millions for campaign purposes, for lobbying, for the purchase of munitions, for the transportation of armed men, for the feeding and maintenance of that army while engaged in stopping production of industries at the source of production.

When the C. I. O. army moved on Flint it took over that town, and it was financed, fed, and housed by the sums collected from other workers in other industries.

This is one of the activities which exists with the approval of the President of the United States, with the approval of this House and of the Senate. It is the monster which will destroy us all unless we take action.

The purpose of the C. I. O.

The announced purpose of the C. I. O. was—

To encourage and promote organization of the workers in the mass production and unorganized industries of the Nation.

Experience shows that its real, its ultimate, purpose is the control of labor; that it seeks, by depriving industry of the ability to employ labor, to force industry to come to the C. I. O. leadership in order to operate.

It seeks control not only of the employer but of the individual worker. Its purpose is to force all workers into the C. I. O., where they can be charged an initiation fee and monthly dues.

Its first outstanding demand is the right to act as sole bargaining agency for all employed in any particular industry, or, in the case of the larger industries, as motor, in the entire industry.

Its invariable demand, when it once obtains a foothold, is a closed shop and the check-off, which, being interpreted, means that no one other than members of the C. I. O. who pay its initiation fees and its dues can be employed where this system exists and that, where its exists, the employer must deduct from the pay check of the worker all fines, fees, and dues which have been assessed against the individual worker.

It is its ultimate purpose and ambition to control the workers of coal, iron, steel, the motor industry, public utilities, and, incidentally, all industries; to extend its activities among office workers and farm laborers.

When this it has done, it will be in a position where one of its principal supporters, the Communist candidate for President, Earl Browder, will have accomplished his purpose, which, we repeat, he stated to be:

We industrial unionists are going to take over the industries some day for three very good reasons:
1. Because we need them.
2. Because we want them.
3. Because we have the power to get them.

What has the C. I. O. accomplished for its workers

So far it has obtained various increases in the hourly or daily wage rate, and it has, in some instances, obtained shorter hours and no doubt better working conditions.

UNIONS SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED—RACKETEERS OUSTED

Practically everyone realizes there should be unions and collective bargaining. Many believe that a union should be governed by its members; that no one should have arbitrary or absolute authority except by the consent of the members. Many believe that the union should, as it assumes power, assume responsibility for its acts, the acts of its officers, the acts of its members. Unless this course be followed, it can attain no great permanent success.

The cost of the present procedure, not only to the workers but to the public at large, has been so great and the acts of those responsible so unlawful, so arbitrary, that public sentiment quickly crystallized against the C. I. O. strike. Public opinion will, in the end, although perhaps more slowly, be as strong and as effective against the massed picket strike, which deprives the individual of his right to work.

It should not be forgotten that those who strike, prevent men from working, stop production, and inflict harm upon a large body of the citizens are, after all, but a fraction of the total population, and that when aroused, the farmers of this country, who may rightly be termed its bone, muscle, and sinew, have it in their power, because of their control of the production of the necessities of life as distinguished from the luxuries, to decide the fate of the city strikers.

LOSSES DUE TO STRIKES

In the General Motors strike at Flint, which ran for 44 days, there was a loss in wages alone of more than a million dollars per day. The loss to the stockholders of the corporation, to the many dealers, garage owners, and workers in garages throughout the country amounted to other hundreds of millions.

That strike deprived something like a hundred thousand men of their jobs for more than 40 days. That strike inflicted upon businessmen enormous losses which they could ill afford to sustain. It deprived men of the money which they needed to make payment upon their current obligations.

In the Chrysler strike at Detroit the loss was more than $10,000,000 in wages, the loss to retail merchants of Detroit and vicinity $6,000,000, the loss to wholesalers $7,750,000.

In the Packard strike the wage increase was 3 cents per hour, and when an organizer was asked why he did not insist upon the men's demand for a 10-cent increase he replied, "We could not get it," an indication that in the end there will be a limit to the amount of the increases.

Its price to industry for the favor of permitting it to employ the members who join will be as high as the gross income of the business will warrant.

More and more the tendency will be to raise wages, to shorten the hours of employment, to lessen the profits of stockholders and all owners of business, and the only limit to its demands will be the ability of industry to pay.

If those in control of C. I. O. overestimate this ability, as they already have on several occasions, the result will be the closing of the industry, the loss of their jobs to the workers.

To prove this citation need only be made to the strikes on the west coast, which resulted in the loss of a large part of the Chinese market, worth millions of dollars a year, and which we had held for more than a hundred years. Here is a striking illustration of one of the evils of this system.

JOBS PERMANENTLY LOST

Attention might also be called to the Yale-Towne Lock Co. in Detroit and of another concern there which simply closed their plants and went out of business.

Another point which should not be lost to sight is the certainty that if a State or a city, as Michigan, Detroit, or Flint, fails to give protection to employers, they will sooner or later, regardless of their desires, be forced to seek another site for their operations. The knowledge of this result undoubtedly influenced Premier Hepburn in refusing to permit Lewis and his C. I. O. to gain a foothold in Canada.

SIT-DOWN EXTENDED TO RESIDENCES

More recently, the C. I. O. has extended its claim of right to hold possession of private property to include private residences which have been rented to its members, and now, in Pontiac, Mich., it makes the demand that unless rents be reduced to a figure fixed by it, none will be paid, and it defies the authorities to expel the members from the houses they are renting.

If successful in this, there is no reason to suppose that it will not make a like demand upon merchants who sell food and clothing if its leadership deems prices excessive. In fact, in one of the hotel strikes at Detroit, the sit-downers were told by an organizer to occupy any of the rooms in the hotel that they might desire, to help themselves to food, to the liquors in the bar—a true "red" Russian procedure.

The C. I. O. has established the supremacy of Lewis and his lieutenants as dictators of labor. Today, because of their activities, they stand in a position where industrial leaders can no longer deal with the individual worker or with groups of workers. Industry today, if it desires labor, must bargain with Lewis or his lieutenants.

Today, for the first time in our history—thanks to the Wagner labor law and to the National Labor Relations Board and to Lewis—labor, work, the toil of a human being, is a commodity on the market, to be bought and to be sold, not in accord with the demand or the need of the individual worker or with that of a group of workers but by and through Lewis, who now has a monopoly of labor.

Communists speak and write of the "slaves of industry." They stir up envy, passion, and hatred on the part of the worker by calling attention to the smallness of the amount received by the worker when compared with the profits of the "boss."

LEWIS LIVES WELL

Attention of the worker who now receives 75 cents or $1 an hour can now be called to the figure of John L. Lewis, stopping at first-class hotels, riding in his 12-cylinder, chauffeured car, drawing his $12,000 a year, unaccountable to anyone, with an unsupervised expense account of somewhere between ten and twenty million dollars per year taken from the pocket of the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his body and who receives in return therefor the right to work.

The worker has but changed bosses and, for the man who was interested in his welfare to at least the extent of seeing that he was well fed, clothed, and housed and measurably content, he has now substituted one who bargains and sells the toil of workers, to promote his own lust for power.

What of truth there was in the statement of Henry Ford that the worker has put an iron collar around his neck the future will disclose.

LEWIS SANCTIONS COMMUNISTIC UTTERANCES, COMMUNISTIC ACTS

It may be that John L. Lewis is not a Communist, but he is following the methods of those whom he denounced as Communists in 1924.

Not long ago he said:

> As a purely political philosophy, I have no quarrel with communism.

He associates with Communists. Lewis uses Communists as his tools and as his organizers. Lewis follows Communist methods. Lewis preaches Communist doctrine. Lewis practices the Communist doctrine of control of industry "at the point of production."

Lewis permitted without rebuke the statement of his organizer, Thompson, to the Canadian General Motors Corporation that it must recognize his union and "sign an agreement before it builds another motorcar in Canada."

Lewis by his silence sanctioned the statement of Thompson that he had assurances from Detroit that "not a car will be built in any General Motors plant in the United States, if an attempt is made to break this (Oshawa) strike."

He sanctioned the statement by Thompson that—

> The American union has told General Motors there that "as soon as you send one car across the line to Canada to help break the Oshawa strike, you'll never make another car in the United States."

His chief organizer in Detroit, Richard Frankensteen, on April 8, 1937, referring to Ford, said:

> Henry will either recognize the union or he won't build automobiles.

John L. Lewis never has denied this statement of his agent and organizer that such was the policy of the C. I. O.

May 26, when Frankensteen, with Reuther, a "red" with photographers and reporters, went on to the private property of Ford, insulted and called the working men names and were unceremoniously thrown off, Lewis was vehement in his complaints to Federal authorities, forgetting for the moment that thousands of acts of violence were brought about by him; that his own armed raid was made across the Indiana State line toward Anderson, where he was turned back by the orders of a patriotic governor.

It may be that Lewis is not a Communist, but, as American Federation of Labor officials charge, he "is in bed with Communists" and the land of the red flag recognizes him as such, for, on the Communist "honor roll" for 1937, in the following order, appears:

> Stalin—presented new Soviet constitution.
> Earl Browder—fights for Farmer-Labor Party.
> Largo Caballero—head of People's Front in Spain.
> John L. Lewis—heads the C. I. O.

DETROIT RENAMED LEWISTOWN

Proudly displayed in the Moscow Museum of Revolution is a map of the United States, and on that map the city of Detroit is renamed "Lewistown."

PRESIDENT MAKES PROPHECY

The President seems to have been something of a prophet. Governor Murphy, on his return from the Philippines, quoted the President as saying:

> If communism breaks in America, it will be in the Detroit area, where it will first manifest itself.

Did John L. Lewis tell him about the coming sit-down strikes?

Later, discussing the effect of the sit-down strikes, Murphy said:

> Communism is not coming. It is here. The only thing now needed is for them to begin confiscating property.

And do not forget that Governor Murphy did his part to aid in doing that very thing, and it was under the protecting wing of Governor Murphy that the visit was made the other day to the Ford plant.

It may be a coincidence that when the strikes came at Flint, when court orders were issued to oust those who unlawfully held possession, it was Governor Murphy who prevented the sheriff of Genesee County from carrying out those orders. Perhaps it was only a coincidence that the President prophesied that communism, if it broke, would break in the Detroit area, and that the man he brought back from the Philippines to make Governor of Michigan was on hand to give encouragement to those who practiced anarchy and defied the law.

Nor should it be forgotten that it was Governor Murphy who, as mayor of Detroit, furnished the police escort for those who marched to the Dearborn line in their attempt to take the Ford plant in 1932. Death followed—five men died as a result of that Communist riot.

WHERE ARE THE FRIENDS OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR?

Where are those of this body who in years gone by, in hard-fought and vital battles, have received the support of the American Federation of Labor?

Today that organization—for years labor's loyal and ever-faithful spokesman—is being attacked from within. Its betrayal has been planned, its existence threatened; it has been assailed on all fronts; and in this Congress not one single voice has been raised in its defense or support.

On April 22 of this year it described the action of Lewis and his associates. It issued a statement, in which it said:

> By their bold and continuous defiance of every law of the American Federation of Labor, by their constant violation of every obligation entered into with affiliated national and international unions, by their interference with collective agreements entered into with employers by affiliated unions, and by their complete disregard for every rule of honor and decency they have made evident and clear and beyond peradventure of doubt their utter contempt for the American Federation of Labor.

On May 22, 1937, the president of that federation described this organization as being communistic, and called on all true friends of labor to support the A. F. of L.

Has memory been obliterated? When repudiation is the fashion, are all obligations ignored? Does gratitude no longer exist? Is a new king to be crowned before the old has ceased to breathe?

To my knowledge, never have I received political support from the American Federation of Labor, but silence shall never be my part, be political fortune what it may, when the rights of the worker are assailed.

LEWIS' EXIT

Let me make one prediction: When the C. I. O. has continued its brazen course until it has completely organized labor, prostrated industry and disclosed that it is but an instrumentality of the Communists and on the horizon appears the dark cloud of adverse public opinion, then we may find the gentleman in the White House withdrawing favor from Lewis and his cohorts and turning for aid to William Green or whoever may then be the representative of responsible labor.

Then we may find the Secretary of Labor or her successor, not making a trip across the sea, as she did last summer, to act as the go-between for John L. Lewis in London and Myron Taylor in Austria, but consulting here with the head of the responsible American labor organizations.

Then she may attempt to arrange a conference, not between Lewis and the head of the Industrial Relations Council in New York but between the head of the American Federation of Labor and the representatives of such organization.

Uneasy lies the head that wears the crown, and short indeed is the shift of he who basks in Presidential favor. "Cracking-down" Gen. Hugh Johnson, Donald R. Richberg, Rexford Guy Tugwell, Raymond Moley, George N. Peek, Dr. Stanley High, and a long, long list of others who have been charmed by a smile may be followed into the discard by John L. Lewis, when he has served his purpose.

It may be that some fine morning the President will awaken to discover that the worker, having been organized, is being exploited not this time by "economic royalists" but by those who now claim to be working in his interest. Then will the President arise in his righteous wrath, call in the reporters, and in scorching words point out to the public his purpose to exert to the utmost, if need be, his power, even to the calling upon the Army and the Navy to save to the workingman his job, to prevent the closing of factories, the burdening of interstate commerce by armed "flying squadrons."

He may even send a message to the Congress asking it to reenact the present statutes so that he may enforce the provisions of the Constitution, if we then have one, which guarantee to the citizen his "horse and buggy" right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

He may even call upon the Supreme Court, if we have one, or upon his Court, if he has it, to hold that a man has the right to work and may be protected in that work, a matter which, in view of the majority decision in the Senn case last week, may be in some doubt. Thus may he overcome the great emergency or crisis which will then exist.

He may even see a vision that, having then once again saved the people, he will be entitled to wear a crown.

THE DUTY OF THE ADMINISTRATION

The duty to enforce local laws is upon State authorities. When there is an interference with interstate commerce; when citizens are deprived of the equal protection of the laws, of their civil rights; when there is armed insurrection, upon us rests the responsibility of making good the constitutional guaranty for the protection of the citizen.

When a citizen is attacked in a foreign land, when he is denied protection when engaged in business or when visiting beyond the seas, the whole country is aroused and the officials of our State Department rush to his aid.

When thousands of citizens in the State of Michigan are by force driven from their usual places of employment by armed invaders from other cities and other States, it is the duty of Congress to ascertain the cause; to remedy that cause, if possible; to enact, if there be no law, Federal laws which will bring relief which will assure them of their civil rights.

If there be laws and the officials of the State refuse to insure protection, in case of insurrection or domestic violence which obstructs or hinders the execution of the laws thereof or of the United States so as to deprive any portion of the people of such State of any of the rights, privileges, or immunities named in the Constitution, it is the sworn duty of the President—

> To take such measures, by the employment of the militia or the land and naval forces of the United States * * * as he may deem necessary, for the suppression of such insurrection or domestic violence (sec. 5299, Revised Statutes of the United States; sec. 203, ch. 13, title 50, U. S. Code).

If the executive officers of our Nation refuse to perform their duties under the Constitution and the law of the land, to honor the oath which was taken when office was assumed, then it is our duty as a Congress to call their attention to the situation, and if they still willfully refuse, it is our duty to impeach them.

Months ago on this floor the attention of this House was called to the fact that until this issue was settled, and settled right, there could be no permanent settlement. At that time and since this "red" controlled organization has had its way, has worked its will on both capital and on labor.

The prediction was then made that the settlement of the Flint strike would settle nothing; that the policy of the Governor of Michigan of permitting, because he wished to avoid bloodshed, a group of determined, violent men to proceed unlawfully to take and to hold that which did not belong to them, to kidnap and to hold to ransom industrial plants, would in the end breed violence and bloodshed. That prediction has been verified and the end is not yet.

The Governor either did not recognize or willfully ignored the fact that the C. I. O., which controlled the strike situation, had as its fundamental policy the creation of disorder, the incitement to violence, and the bringing on of bloodshed, staging physical combats for the purpose of inciting sympathy. All know that wherever you find "reds" you find either submission to their demands or violence and bloodshed.

That there has been so little violence is doubtless due to the fact that some Government officials and some of those in high places have not only countenanced but lent their active support to this campaign of coercion and intimidation.

C. I. O. IS MOVING ON ALL FRONTS

Once more your attention is called to the danger to your home folks if you sit idly by and permit this movement to continue on its course.

Your industrial plants in Maine have been closed. On down through New England to the Central Atlantic States the tide of intimidation, organization, and violence has flowed. In New York it extends even into the ranks of those who are receiving relief from the Government. Down into Washington it has swept. It is rolling on downward into the southernmost States.

WORKERS APPEAL FOR PROTECTION

From Gadsden, Ala., on May 27, came a petition, representing 3,000 employees of the Republic Gulfsteel plant, asking for protection against this movement and stating:

We have no thoughts or ideas of discontinuing work at this time.

And asking:

The cooperation of the business, professional, and farming people of this community in an effort to keep out of our midst the foreign and out-of-work agitators who are harassing us and our families at every opportunity.

Dated May 29, from a Ford worker at Detroit, comes this plea:

I am writing to ask you to protect us from having the U. A. W. forced upon us by our Government.

Call off the Government backing and we will soon throw the troublemakers out of the Ford plant with our hands.

This is but one of many, many letters which have come from workers in struck factories.

You Representatives of the southland, who soon may see your crops rotting in the fields because of strikes, of picketing, have reason to listen to this appeal.

The Pacific coast has long been the scene of disorder and of violence. Not only was one of the great canning plants in California closed, but, on the waterfront, you have a bitter battle between unions working under A. F. of L. charters and those affiliated with the C. I. O.

Harry Bridges, the alien "red" leader of one faction, boldly announced that it was a class struggle. When we have a class struggle we have civil war, brother against brother, father against son, and no greater horror can come to any land.

The lumbering industry in the far Northwest has experienced its troubles. Sweeping back, down through the central part of our country and the Northwest, this scourge has come, incited and carried on by aliens, by Communists, those who would destroy our form of government; who would do away with those who have property, who provide the jobs, they would enslave, not free, the workingman; they would establish themselves as dictators of labor.

DEMOCRATS BETRAYED

The Democrats of the North, of the South, may have thought themselves secure under the wing of the New Deal, but they have discovered that the thoughts of the New Deal, the ways of the New Deal, are not their thoughts, their ways. At the last election they were betrayed in Minnesota, in Wisconsin, and in other places. They were sacrificed for the friends of the New Deal—no matter how named.

When the businessmen, the farmers, the landowners of the South, finally awaken and discover that a government in Washington is prescribing the wage they shall pay, the hours men shall work, the crops which shall be planted and marketed, the competition that is forced upon them by the products of cheap foreign labor, it may be too late to assert themselves.

When the iron collar of the red Communists has finally been fastened firmly on the neck of southern labor, the real motives and purposes of the dictator will be disclosed.

NEW DEALERS SITTING ON VOLCANO

New Dealers may fancy they are riding the crest of the wave; but soon it will break on the concealed rocks of natural law, and they will discover themselves tossed up on the rock-bound coast of a hard, cruel land which is without law, justice, or charity.

New Dealers may imagine themselves the foundation of a new government; they are but the superstructure. They may consider themselves the vast, powerful, heaving bosom of a great political movement; they are but the spume of its wind-whipped surface; they are but as the whirling leaves before an October gale.

They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth.

They have taken into their heart and their arms the C. I. O., which has adopted the "red" Communists; and in the end, when C. I. O. repays the Communists, who assisted them in establishing, as they are now advised to do, the Farm-Labor Party, the foundation for the people's front in America, all too late they will discover themselves to be the tool rather than the master.

They will find themselves at the mercy of the "red" Communists, with those heads, which devised so many and varied schemes in violation of Nature's laws, ever in danger of parting from those bodies which carried them so long.

OUR DUTY—OUR RESPONSIBILITY

Let us use the common sense which God gave us. Let us use our powers of reasoning. Let us use our eyes to see and our ears to hear. Let us with deliberation and with patriotism pass judgment on this thing which confronts us.

Let us, if necessary, sacrifice our personal political futures for the good of our country and let us meet this thing here and now, not counting the votes, not anticipating the future at the next election, but having in mind only the present and the future of our country.

No one could, if he would, and few would, stop the drive to organize labor. Labor should, and it will, be protected, not only from those who in the past may have exploited it but from those who in the future would use it for their own selfish purposes.

Our task and the task of business is not to attempt to prevent unionization of labor, not to prevent organization, not to prevent collective bargaining—but do our mightiest to assist in seeing that the union, the organization, is a union, an organization, of, by, and for the workers, democratic in its principles, responsible for its actions, cognizant of the rights of others.

Unionization of industry and of consumer may well be the companion of unionization of labor. If those engaged in industry and in commerce and those who furnish the purchasing power have not already, they soon will realize the necessity of a unity of purpose among themselves. Unless they wish to be at the mercy of labor dictators, to be utterly destroyed, they must at once and with no hesitancy proceed to form a union of their own, so that industry throughout the country, when forced to deal with one great labor union, will not find itself fighting on a thousand battlefields, but all will be able to join and meet with representatives of labor, where each, realizing the power of the other, will be willing to meet all reasonable and possible demands of the other. Then may come industrial peace without bloodshed.

Well might we without delay amend the Wagner Act, so as to define unfair labor practices; so as to make unions as responsible as is industry; so as to limit them in the same respect that industry is limited.

If politicians, seeking only votes, think for one moment that they can enact such legislation, and only such legislation, as is demanded and approved by labor, they are due for a rude awakening, for when industry once realizes the drive that is being made to destroy it and organizes, as has labor, the battle will be titanic.

Let us insist upon the enforcement of the present laws; enact and enforce others, if need be, which will protect all men alike; which will put upon labor a responsibility equal to the power permitted it.

If this we do, we have fulfilled our mission here. If we fail so to do, we shall merit the contempt of those who sent us here.

One bold, intelligent stroke, doing justice to all, insisting upon respect for law from all will save the day. Less will but encourage disaster. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, there is legislation pend-in the House and in the Senate—in the House the bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and in the Senate the bill introduced by Senator SHEPPARD—relating to the Federal credit unions.

As a result of a ruling made sometime ago by the Comptroller General, it was ruled that Federal credit unions, which had been allocated quarters in Federal buildings to carry on their fine activities, could not use such quarters in the absence of legislation. The time was extended to June 1, and today is the dead line. However, I understand that in the exercise of a reasonable discretion the quarters at present used can be retained pending legislative action during this session of Congress. I hope the Post Office Department and other Federal departments in whose buildings these credit unions throughout the country now have quarters will not insist upon the unions moving today, or within a few days. I have talked with one of the officials of the Comptroller General's office within the last few days, and have been assured that they would have no objection, there being evidence of an intention on the part of Congress to legislate during this session, to the time being extended without the necessity of any formal action being taken by any department of the Government or by the Comptroller General.

The creation of the Postal Credit Unions began in 1923 when Henry L. Dennison, of the Dennison Manufacturing Co. in Framingham, Mass., interested as he was in the credit-union movement, and at that time Director of the Service Relations Department of the Postmaster General's office, recommended the establishment of credit unions for postal employees. Many of the public-spirited persons, as well as officials of the Federal Government, have rendered valuable assistance in the establishment and successful operation of credit unions for Federal employees.

The first credit union of this type was established in Brockton, Mass., January 17, 1923, with eight members and $18.50 in assets. From this humble beginning postal group credit unions have been established in almost every large post office, serving the employees with a very fine opportunity to save money in small amounts, and to borrow money for provident and productive purposes. This was accomplished largely through the efforts of Mr. Louis Brehm, assistant to Mr. Dennison, in the Service Relations Department of the office of the Postmaster General.

It is interesting to note the progress made during the years of development. The latest available figures from the office of the Assistant Postmaster General show, as of December 31, 1932, that there are 298 of these postal and Federal group credit unions in the United States, with a membership of well over 58,000; total assets well in excess of $6,000,000; and that 248,125 loans for provident purposes were made to members of these credit unions, which involved an amount in excess of $29,000,000. These figures have been considerably increased since the last published statement.

State-chartered credit unions (those organized under a State charter—are supervised by the State banking department, and the books of these credit unions are examined yearly by the State bank examiners, the same as any other bank. All persons handling money are bonded, and these credit unions have enjoyed a very enviable reputation for efficiency and honest management.

Because of the favorable experience with postal and Federal group credit unions, and also because there were 10 States in which there was no enabling credit-union laws making it possible to organize these credit unions, a Federal bill was enacted in 1934 which permits the organization of credit unions of Federal employees anywhere in the United States. The Government thought so well of this fine service that it placed the supervision of these Federal credit unions under the direction of the Farm Credit Administration Department; and there is now established a Credit Union Section of this Department.

The credit union requires but little space for its operation, and as the group which is served by it is composed of those persons already occupied within a Federal building, the operation of the credit union works no hardship and the clerical work is done almost always after hours in the spare time of those who are in charge of it.

Too much cannot be said of the vast amount of good and the untold assistance which these credit unions have been able to render Federal and postal employees. It would seem too bad that after so many years of successful operation and progress anything should be done to break down this fine piece of social service for the employees of the United States Government.

However, through an order from the office of the Comptroller General in Washington the following rulings were made:

[Postal Bulletin, Washington, D. C., Dec. 7, 1936]

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

CREDIT UNIONS

The Comptroller General of the United States in a recent decision has held that Federal Employee Credit Unions are private enterprises and as such the Department is not permitted under the law to provide space in Federal buildings.

Likewise, postmasters may not provide any clerical assistance on Government time to these credit unions or private enterprises of the employees.

The Post Office Department has no discretion in these matters and it will therefore be necessary for postmasters to govern themselves accordingly.

W. W. HOWES,
Acting Postmaster General.

[Postal Bulletin, Washington, D. C., Jan. 8, 1937]

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1937.

CREDIT UNIONS

Reference is made to the order appearing in the Postal Bulletin of December 7, relative to space provided in Federal buildings for Federal Employee Credit Unions.

In view of the exigencies of the situation as created by the order, postmasters are advised that the effective date to comply therewith is extended to June 1, 1937.

W. W HOWES,
Acting Postmaster General.

If such a ruling persists it will mean doing away with a very fine piece of constructive service for the members of the Postal and Federal group credit unions, as they rely on subsidy, so far as office space, light, and rent are concerned, and these associations could not successfully operate outside of Federal buildings. The reason for this is that the credit union serves as a depository for the funds of the members, without subjecting them to any inconvenience, making it possible for them to deposit their money right on the premises, and in turn brings to these same members an opportunity to borrow money for provident purposes, at a moderate rate of interest, in a respectable and dignified manner. One of the primary purposes of the credit union plan is to defeat the so-called loan shark, or high-rate money lender from preying on victims who are forced to seek their aid and then are subjected to exorbitant interest rates, and, in many instances, unbearable humiliation.

The passage of Senate bill 1306 will permit these worthwhile credit unions to continue their splendid work of assisting their fellow men. I hope that immediate action will be taken on pending legislation to meet the ruling of the Office of the Comptroller General.

I rise to make these remarks in the hope that the various departments will not take any action pending the enactment of legislation. I understand the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has ordered a bill reported and that the bill will, undoubtedly, be reported the latter part of this week.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

DAVID J. MAHONEY

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2657, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to advance on the retired list of the Navy David J. Mahoney, retired, to chief boilermaker, retired.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to advance on the retired list of the Navy David J.

Mahoney, boilermaker, retired, to the rating of chief boilermaker (permanent appointment), retired, with pay and allowances of that rating: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "boilermaker" and insert "and David Bolger, Cleve B. Farran, James Johnson, and Hans Terkelsen, boilermakers"; and insert in the title after the word "Mahoney", "David Bolger, Cleve B. Farran, James Johnson, and Hans Terkelsen."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have offered simply includes four other boilermakers of the Navy who are in the same category as the one who is listed in this particular bill, namely, David J. Mahoney. All five of them are in identically the same situation. They have all served in the Navy over a long period of time, and in view of the fact the Navy Department has reported favorably on this bill, and the committee has acted favorably on its report, it was my opinion that all of these people should be treated in the same way. For this reason I have secured the names of these four men and have added them to this bill so that all five of them may have identically the same treatment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Are there private bills pending for the other beneficiaries?

Mr. COSTELLO. I understand there are no private bills pending for the other beneficiaries, and that is the reason I have offered the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

JOHN W. THOMASON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1112, awarding a Navy Cross to John W. Thomason.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John W. Thomason, major, United States Marine Corps, be awarded, and he is hereby authorized to receive, a Navy Cross, to be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for extraordinary heroism in the battle of Soissons on July 18, 1918, in destroying a machine-gun nest and capturing two machine guns.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, line 4, after the word "Corps", insert "and Robert Slover, gunnery sergeant, United States Marine Corps"; line 4, strike out the words "he is" and insert "they are"; and amend the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

GIRL SCOUTS, INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5194, granting a renewal of patent no. 60731, relating to the badge of the Girl Scouts, Inc.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a certain design patent issued by the United States Patent Office of date of March 28, 1922, being patent no. 60731, is hereby renewed and extended for a period of 14 years from and after the date of approval of this act, with all the rights and privileges pertaining to the same, being generally known as the badge of the Girl Scouts, Inc.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TIMOTHY JOSEPH M'CARTHY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3002, for the relief of Timothy Joseph McCarthy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Timothy Joseph McCarthy, late of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 5, strike out the words "honorably discharged from the naval service" and insert in lieu thereof the words "discharged under honorable conditions from the naval service on February 13, 1919."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES PHILIP COYLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2404, for the relief of James Philip Coyle.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors James Philip Coyle, who enlisted in the United States Navy on June 16, 1898, as a fireman, second-class, serving on the U. S. S. Franklin (service no. 122-95-98), shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on September 21, 1922: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VINCENT CHICCO

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3217) for the relief of Vincent Chicco.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Vincent Chicco, Charleston, S. C., is hereby relieved of all liability as surety on the bond in the sum of $5,000, filed in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina, for the appearance of one Morris Grossman for trial on a charge of conspiracy to violate the National Prohibition Act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAX WEINRIB

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3275) for the relief of Max Weinrib.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. HANCOCK of New York objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

THEODORE FIELDBRAVE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4256) conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Northern District of California to hear, determine and render judgment upon the suit in equity of Theodore Fieldbrave against the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California to hear, determine, and render judgment upon any suit in equity brought by Theodore Fieldbrave against the United States for the purpose of setting aside the default decree of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California rendered August 9, 1924, canceling the certificate of naturalization of such Theodore Fieldbrave.

SEC. 2. Such suit in equity may be instituted at any time within 6 months after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of any such suit shall be had and appeals from any judgment or decree entered therein shall be taken in the same manner as in the case of suits in equity over which such court has jurisdiction under paragraph (1) of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

ADELAIDE GUERINI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 991, for the relief of Adelaide Guerini.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, for and on behalf of the United States of America, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to execute to Adelaide Guerini, of Memphis, Tenn., a quitclaim deed conveying any right, title, and interest of the United States of America in the following-described real estate lying and being in the city of Memphis, Shelby County, Tenn.

Lot no. 20, block 5, Horn Brothers Galloway Park subdivision, as shown on plat in plat book 6, page 91, of the register's office, Shelby County, Tenn.: Beginning at a point in the north line of North Parkway 313 feet west of the west line of Ayers Street; thence westwardly with the north line of North Parkway 50 feet; thence northwardly, parallel with Ayers Street, 144 feet to an alley; thence eastwardly with south line of said alley 50 feet; thence southwardly 144 feet to the beginning point. Said property consists of a house and lot located at 872 North Parkway, Memphis, Shelby County, Tenn., and is the same property conveyed to the United States of America by Arthur Rogers, United States marshal, by instrument dated April 29, 1933, and of record in book 738, page 421, in the office of the register of Shelby County, Tenn.

SEC. 2. That the clerk of the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, at Memphis, is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy of record the judgment obtained by the United States of America against Adelaide Guerini, as surety on the forfeited bail bond of W. R. McDade, who was charged with violation of the National Prohibition Act and who failed to appear as required by law but who subsequently was delivered to the United States marshal of said court at the instance of the said Adelaide Guerini and without expenses to the United States Government.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "but", strike out the balance of line 22, all of lines 23 and 24, and the word "Government", in line 25, and insert "against whom such charge was dismissed on May 7, 1925, for want of sufficient evidence."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill, Senate bill 2059, an identical Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Austin H. Clark, of the United States National Museum, be authorized to accept the Cross of Chevalier of the Order of Dannebrog tendered him by the Danish Government in recognition of his scientific work; and that Ellsworth P. Killip, of the United States National Museum, be authorized to accept the Cross of the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor tendered him by the French Government in recognition of his scientific work, and further that the Department of State be authorized to deliver said decorations respectively to the said Austin H. Clark and Ellsworth P. Killip.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to authorize recognition by the Danish and French Governments of the distinguished services of Austin H. Clark and Ellsworth P. Killip, American scientists and members of the staff of the Smithsonian Institution, who have, respectively, made noteworthy contributions to science, Dr. Ellsworth in the field of marine invertebrates and Dr. Killip in studies of the flora of South America.

The recognition carries with it no emolument and is a well-deserved tribute not only to the men themselves but to American scholarship and advancement in scientific knowledge.

The bill S. 2059 has already passed the Senate and is identical with the House bill, and I trust its approval will be unanimous.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a House bill (H. R. 6157) were laid on the table.

JACKSON CASKET & MANUFACTURING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5258, for the relief of the Jackson Casket & Manufacturing Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) notwithstanding the declaration of adjusted declared value in its capital-stock-tax return for the year ending June 30, 1936, the original declared value of the Jackson Casket & Manufacturing Co., of Jackson, Miss., in determining its capital-stock tax under section 105 of the Revenue Act of 1935, as amended, for the year ending June 30, 1937, and subsequent years, shall be a value computed on the basis of $125 per share of its capital stock.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall apply only if the taxpayer within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this act files with the collector of internal revenue for its district a statement under oath, recomputing its original declared value in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION FOR ACCEPTANCE OF FOREIGN DECORATIONS

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 349) authorizing certain retired officers or employees of the United States to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following-named retired officers or employees of the United States are hereby authorized to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered them by foreign governments:

Department of State: Edwin Cunningham, Carl F. Deichman, Stillman W. Eells, P. S. Heintzlemen, David B. Macgowan, Robert P. Skinner, and Merritt Swift.

Department of War: Preston Brown, William H. Brown, Marion L. Elliott, Milton A. Elliott, Richard T. Ellis, LaVergne L. Gregg, Francis J. Heraty, Jefferson Kean, James F. McKinley, Alexander

Department of Commerce: George R. Putnam.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BERTRAM LEE SCHOONMAKER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 418, for the relief of Bertram Lee Schoonmaker.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Bertram Lee Schoonmaker the sum of $10,000. Said sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of the said Bertram Lee Schoonmaker against the United States on account of a disability resulting from freezing his right hand on February 5, 1918, while returning to his residence after reporting to the local draft board at Tarrytown, Westchester County, N. Y., pursuant to an order of the board requiring him to appear for physical examination. Such examination was not made on such date, and upon examination by the board on March 5, 1918, he was rejected as unfit for military service because of the condition of his right hand. On May 3, 1918, the thumb and fingers of the right hand were amputated by reason of their necrotic condition resulting from being frozen.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out the figures "$10,000" in line 6 after the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,000"; and insert on line 6, page 2, after the word "frozen", a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK BURGESS BRUCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2171, for the relief of Frank Burgess Bruce.

ALLIE RANKINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3339, for the relief of Allie Rankins.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Allie Rankins, of Route No. 2, Wheelersburg, Ohio, the same to be in full satisfaction of a claim that she has against the Government of the United States of America for damages from permanent injuries caused to her in Scioto County, Ohio, on January 3, 1936, and for medical and hospital expenses incurred by her as a result of said injuries; which said injuries were caused by the careless and negligent construction and location of a certain sanitary unit by the Works Progress Administration of the said United States which was so carelessly and negligently constructed and located that the cement slab of said unit, which was used as a floor when the said Allie Rankins entered, gave way, with the result that she fell and was thrown through the floor during very cold weather into a cesspool full of icy water and filth beneath said floor, where she was compelled to stay for several hours before rescued. Said fall caused her serious permanent pelvic injuries which required and still require medical and hospital treatment, and said exposure caused her to contract tuberculosis from which she has not recovered and all of which took from her her health and the capacity to render to her family of a husband and five children, including a six-month-old baby, the love, care, and affection which she was wont to render as a wife and mother, and have caused her to become a confirmed invalid and cripple, all without any negligence or carelessness on her part: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Allie", strike out the word "Rankins" and insert "Rankin."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Ohio", strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 8, 9, 10, and 11, and on page 2 down to and including line 20, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for personal injuries and disease contracted by her when she fell through the floor of a sanitary unit, on January 3, 1936, which unit had been negligently constructed in Scioto County, Ohio, by employees of the Works Progress Administration: Provided,"

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Allie Rankin."

H. E. WINGARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3809, for the relief of H. E. Wingard.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That H. E. Wingard, of Augusta, Ga., is hereby relieved of all liability as surety on the bond in the sum of $500 filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia, Augusta division, for the appearance of one Stoy Lamar for trial. The said H. E. Wingard expended the sum of $207 in apprehending the said Stoy Lamar, who has been tried and given a probationary sentence.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the clerk of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy, of record, the judgment obtained by the United States in April 1935 against H. E. Wingard, of Augusta, Ga., who is hereby relieved of all liability to the United States for the payment of said judgment, which was entered against him as surety on the recognizance bond of Stoy Lamar, who failed to appear for trial on a charge of violation of the Harrison Narcotic Act, but who was subsequently apprehended through the efforts and at the expense of said H. E. Wingard in December 1935."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. R. NETTERVILLE, SR.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4575, for the relief of A. R. Netterville, Sr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. R. Netterville, Sr., of McComb, Miss., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $130 in full satisfaction of his claim for work done and money paid out for labor in the part construction of a home at the McComb, Miss., homesteads project in 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "claim", insert "against the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

C. O. EASTMAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4623, for the relief of C. O. Eastman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the money-order account of C. O. Eastman, former postmaster at Wauseon, Ohio, with $4,272.07, or so much thereof as is necessary, to relieve him for the alleged loss of paid money orders in a fire in the post office at Wauseon, Ohio, on June 11, 1934, disallowed in the audit of his accounts due to his failure to record the particulars of the said money orders.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "is", insert the word "hereby."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. R. FUCHS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4682, for the relief of W. R. Fuchs.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of W. R. Fuchs, former disbursing clerk, Department of Agriculture, with any amount which he has disallowed, or may disallow, arising from erroneous payments of salary at $1,620 per annum, to Kathryn M. Tobin, former employee of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, for the period from August 4, 1933, to November 8, 1933, both inclusive.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. D. O. BENSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4830, for the relief of Mrs. D. O. Benson.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. HALLECK objected and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

A. L. MALLERY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4942, for the relief of A. L. Mallery.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred L. Mallery the sum of $364.73. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the burglary of the Lakeville, Minn., post office on January 6, 1933.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred L. Mallery, former postmaster at Lakeville, Minn., the sum of $364.73 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the amount of postal and money-order funds and postage stamps lost by burglary of that post office on January 6, 1933, and paid by the said former postmaster to the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "For the relief of Alfred L. Mallery."

CHARLES W. LANGRIDGE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5113, for the relief of Charles W. Langridge.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles W. Langridge the sum of $281.75 in full settlement against the Government as compensation for injuries sustained by a fall over a cliff from a bench belonging to the Government, placed near the Forest Service lookout station on Mount Elwell, within the Plumas National Forest, Calif.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the name "Langridge" insert "of Berkeley, Calif.,".

Page 1, line 6, also after the word "settlement" insert "of all claims".

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words as compensation".

Page 1, line 7, also, after the word injuries" insert a comma and the words "and expenses incident thereto,".

Page 1, line 10, after the word "California" insert "on August 25, 1928:".

PREMIER CARPET & LINOLEUM CO., LTD.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5200, for the relief of the Premier Carpet & Linoleum Co., Ltd.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Premier Carpet & Linoleum Co., Ltd., Los Angeles, Calif., the sum of $1,050.20. Such sum represents the rental charge made by the said Premier Carpet & Linoleum Co., Ltd., for the use of floor coverings rented to the Los Angeles office of the Federal Civil Works Administration for California during the period November 25, 1933, to March 10, 1934. The Comptroller General of the United States has disallowed the claim of such company for such sum on the ground that the rental of such floor coverings was not in accordance with law, and, therefore, the claim does not represent a legal obligation of the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "sum", strike out the word "represents" and insert "shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "States", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

CHARLES B. MURPHY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5337) for the relief of Charles B. Murphy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles B. Murphy, of Elmira, N. Y., the sum of $27 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for compensation for damages caused by a United States mail truck: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "compensation for damages caused by a United States mail truck" and insert "the cost of repairing a plate glass window at 314 State Street, Elmira, N. Y., which was broken on May 6, 1935, when a United States mail truck hurled a stone against it."

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ANNE E. FELIX

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5495) for the relief of Anne E. Felix.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anne E. Felix, of Pittsburgh, Pa., the sum of $2,000 in reimbursement for expenses incurred as contestant in connection with preparation and prosecution of the election-contest case of Anne E. Felix v. Michael J. Muldowney for the seat from the Thirty-second Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania in the Seventy-third Congress, as authorized by the act of March 3, 1879 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 226), a full and detailed account of such expenses having been properly filed with the clerk of the Committee on Elections No. 2, in accordance with the provisions of the act hereinbefore recited.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "reimbursement" and insert "full satisfaction of her claim against the United States."

Page 2, line 6, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

JOSEPH N. WENGER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 274) for the relief of Joseph N. Wenger, lieutenant, United States Navy, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of Joseph N. Wenger, lieutenant, United States Navy, as provided in section 12 of the act of May 18, 1920 (41 Stat. 604; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 756), for $494.57 as reimbursement of the cost of commercial transportation of his wife from Washington, D. C., to Manila, P. I., pursuant to change-of-station orders dated April 19, 1933, there not being reasonably available Government transportation for his wife between said stations. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not exceeding $494.57 for payment of the claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "as reimbursement of" and insert "in full satisfaction against the United States for."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the figures "1933" and insert "1932."

ELMER E. MILLER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 430) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Elmer E. Miller.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. But one objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Elmer E. Miller, former disbursing clerk in the Bureau of Pensions, against the United States for the recovery of any unpaid part of his salary as such clerk, as fixed by law, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1922, June 30, 1923, and June 30, 1924, respectively.

SEC. 2. Such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceeding for the determination of such claim, and appeals from, and payment of, any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

FARLEY J. HOLLOMAN

The Clerk called the bill (S. 451) for the relief of Farley J. Holloman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to consider the claim of Farley J. Holloman, of Ada, Okla., a former employee of the Civil Works Administration, for injuries received on or about March 3, 1934, while working on a C. W. A. project at the Smith gravel pit located about 8 miles east of Ada, Okla., under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making an additional appropriation to carry out the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, for continuation of the Civil Works program, and for other purposes", approved February 15, 1934, notwithstanding the lapse of more than 1 year in filing such claim: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

J. R. COLLIE AND ELEANOR Y. COLLIE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 455) for the relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie, father and mother of J. R. Collie, Jr., deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in full compensation for the death of said J. R. Collie, Jr., a civilian employee, who was killed while in the employment of the United States Motor Transport Corps by an Army truck, no. 225, at the Army supply base, Norfolk, Va., on August 15, 1919: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Collie", insert "of Raleigh, N. C."

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$5,000 in full compensation" and insert "$1,000 in full compensation of their claims against the United States."

JOSEPH M. CACACE AND OTHERS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 470) for the relief of Joseph M. Cacace, Charles M. Cacace, and Mary E. Clibourne.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, on the 20th day of November 1934, John T. Cacace was convicted of an offense and was thereupon admitted to bail in the penalty of $10,000 pending his motion for a new trial, and executed a recognizance for said sum with Joseph M. Cacace, Charles M. Cacace, and Mary E. Clibourne, his brothers and sister, as sureties; and

Whereas on the 23d of November 1934, said John T. Cacace, without the knowledge, consent, or connivance of said sureties, willfully defaulted by leaving the jurisdiction and failed to appear on November 26, the time appointed for the hearing of his motion for a new trial, whereupon he was declared in default, and on motion of the United States, by its attorney, a scire facias issued on said date returnable on November 30, on which last-named date the court declined to give the sureties on said bond additional time for the purpose of attempting to produce said convict but forfeited said bond and entered judgment against the stipulators for the sum of $10,000 and costs; and

Whereas, on December 6, 1934, the said John T. Cacace voluntarily surrendered himself to the marshal of the district and was thereafter sentenced and is now serving his term in a penitentiary designated by the court; and

Whereas the sureties on said recognizance filed their petition in said court on December 8, 1934, praying that said judgment might be set aside and the forfeiture remitted, which prayer has been refused by the court upon the ground that under the statute in such case made and provided it had no discretion where the default was willful; and

Whereas by the voluntary appearance and the sentencing of said convict the ends of justice have been accomplished without additional expense to the Government so that nothing further is to be gained by the enforcement of said judgment, which enforcement will cause said stipulators to lose their homes by foreclosure under execution: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said Joseph M. Cacace, Charles M. Cacace, and Mary E. Clibourne be, and are hereby, relieved from liability for the payment of said judgment so entered in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Norfolk; that said judgment be, and is hereby, canceled; and that the United States attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to so mark said judgment canceled of record.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Norfolk, is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy, of record, the judgment obtained by the United States on November 30, 1934, against Joseph M. Cacace, Charles M. Cacace, and Mary E. Clibourne, who are hereby relieved of all liability to the United States for the payment of said judgment, which was entered against them as sureties on the criminal bail bond executed in behalf of John T. Cacace, the latter having failed to appear after he had willfully departed from the jurisdiction without the knowledge, consent, or connivance of said sureties. Said John T. Cacace subsequently voluntarily appeared on December 6, 1934, without cost to the Government, and was sentenced to imprisonment for conspiracy to violate the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act in accordance with his previous conviction on November 24, 1934."

The committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

R. R. PURCELL

The Clerk called the bill (S. 522) for the relief of R. R. Purcell.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. R. Purcell, of Helena, Mont., the sum of $86.06 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for expenses incurred in traveling from Breckenridge, Minn., to Fort Harrison, Mont., and return, pursuant to his appointment, on August 8, 1933, as a member of a special board of review of the Veterans' Administration at Fort Harrison, Mont, such R. R. Purcell being ineligible to serve thereon because of his appointment, prior thereto and unknown to him, as director of the National Reemployment Service in Montana: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EVERETT P. SHERIDAN

The Clerk called the bill (S. 665) to credit the account of Everett P. Sheridan.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the final settlement of the accounts of Everett P. Sheridan, deceased, former postmaster at Warren, Mass., credit is hereby authorized in the sum of $37.74, being the difference between the amount of war-savings funds on deposit to his official credit in the First National Bank of Warren, Mass., when said bank closed in 1923, and the aggregate amount thereafter received by the Government as dividends in the liquidation of the bank's affairs.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read: "An act for the relief of the estate of Everett P. Sheridan."

S. T. DICKINSON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 673, for the relief of S. T. Dickinson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to S. T. Dickinson the sum of $312.30, said sum to be in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government for medical care, hospitalization, and incidental expenses incurred as a result of injuries received on June 3, 1931, while in the performance of his official duties as an employee of the Naval Supply Depot, Brooklyn, N. Y.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, and 5, and insert "That the Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to pay, from the employees' compensation fund, to S. T. Dickinson, of Richmond, Va."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT A. WATSON

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 733, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of Robert A. Watson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Robert A. Watson, of New York, N. Y., against the United States for damages arising out of his purchase of 3,500 tons of sugar in the Argentine Republic in June 1920, and his importation of such sugar into the United States subject to the direction of the Department of Justice.

SEC. 2. In the proceedings upon such claim before the Court of Claims the United States shall not avail itself of the defense that the Department of Justice acted without legal authority in issuing directions or fixing restrictions with regard to the importation of such sugar.

SEC. 3. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim and appeals from, and payment of, any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

H. G. CARRIERE, CHARLES E. LIVINGSTON, AND JOHN LATHAM

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1081, for the relief of H. G. Carriere, Charles E. Livingston, and John Latham.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75 to H. G. Carriere, the sum of $40 to Charles E. Livingston, and the sum of $125 to John Latham, all of Camp Crook, S. Dak., in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for damages arising out of the loss by each of them of a horse, which horses were killed in 1934, while being worked, under contract with the owners, by employees of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, in connection with emergency conservation work: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. F. LUEDERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1307, for the relief of W. F. Lueders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

FRANK W. CARPENTER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1699, granting an annuity to Frank W. Carpenter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in recognition of the many years of distinguished and conspicuous service of Frank W. Carpenter to the United States in the Philippine Islands, including the negotiation of a treaty in 1915 with the Sultan of Sulu making it possible for the United States to hold the islands throughout the World War without the utilization of its armed forces, at the same time removing a fundamental obstacle to Philippine independence, and if further recognition of the fact that such years of service resulted in his permanent and total disability, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the said Frank W. Carpenter, former Governor of the Moro Province and of the Department of Mindanao and Sulu, Philippine Islands, an annuity at the rate of $1,800 per annum, in monthly installments, the first installment to be due and payable on the 1st day of the month during which this act is enacted.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "pay", insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "month", strike out the word "during" and insert the word "after."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "enacted", insert a colon and the following: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OLMEDO ALFARO

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 335, authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, Olmedo Alfaro, a citizen of Ecuador.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit Olmedo Alfaro, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and the said Olmedo Alfaro shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction, and that he shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or in conduct and so recommended by the academic board: Provided further, That in the case of said Olmedo Alfaro the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE E. IJAMS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 339, granting permission to George E. Ijams, civilian employee of the Veterans' Administration, to accept and wear the decoration bestowed upon him by the Republic of France.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That George E. Ijams, civilian employee of the Veterans' Administration, be authorized to accept and wear the decoration of the Order of the French Legion of Honor (Chevalier), bestowed by the Republic of France, and the State Department is hereby authorized and permitted to deliver the above-mentioned decoration to the said George E. Ijams.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of the Private Calendar of bills eligible for consideration.

Without objection, the further call of the calendar will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, I was out of the city over the week end and did not get back to the House until after the vote was taken on H. R. 5478, an act to amend existing law to provide the privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period. Had I been here when the vote was taken I would have voted to override the President's veto.

STAR-ROUTE CONTRACTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAINES submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 4408) to provide for the renewal of star-route contracts at 4-year intervals, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DEVELOPMENT OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER PROJECT AT CABINET GORGE ON CLARK FORK OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation, pumping, or other uses, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 6, strike out "in the reclamation fund" and insert "not otherwise appropriated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

This bill was passed by the House. The Senate amended it slightly in the matter of the source of the funds.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What does the Senate amendment do?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. All it does is to substitute "not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. TABER. Yes. The bill as it passed the House provided that the payments should be made out of the reclamation fund. The Senate amendment makes the money payable out of the general funds of the Treasury. It is entirely different. I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. MILLARD asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 155. Joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

The message also announced that the Senate having proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the bill (H. R. 5478) entitled "An act to amend existing law to provide privilege of renewing expiring 5-year level-premium term policies for another 5-year period", returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States, with his objections, and sent by the House to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill, Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 5 has been read, and the committee amendments to that section are now pending.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on last Thursday I asked the Committee to rise in order that we might have some conversations to see if we could not arrive at an amicable settlement of the differences that were dividing us. I had a talk with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT], and with various other Members of the House. It was decided that I should go to the President, which I did.

The first matter discussed was the so-called Beiter amendment. I had said to the gentleman from New York and some of those who stood with him that I thought that if we could get a reasonable understanding about some matters which the Members of the House from practically every district in the country felt that the Government was morally obligated to undertake that we would be getting somewhere; that while the amendment of the gentleman from New York, if adopted, would earmark $300,000,000 and would keep it from being spent for anything except the purposes named in his amendment, it would not insure that the money would be spent. The President readily agreed, and I am authorized to say that he thought that where communities had voted bond issues, many of them had sold the bonds and the money was lying idle and the community was paying interest on it; that he thought each and every one of those projects that were sound and in proper form ought to be taken care of, and that he would do that.

The next matter discussed was schoolhouses. This is a matter that is very near to the hearts of a great many Members. He said that where it was proven that a schoolhouse was a fire hazard and that the community was not financially able to carry on that he would see that the schoolhouses were built.

He said further that he would revoke his Executive order with reference to the P. W. A. funds and that he would like to see the Congress pass a bill extending P. W. A. for a time long enough to complete this work. I reported this back to these gentlemen and to many of their supporters, believing then as I do now that with that agreement we are getting somewhere; and I trust that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] feels justified in making a statement as to how he individually and his group feel about it.

Then we came to the matter of flood control, or the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES]. The President remarked that there were about $63,000,000 to spend on flood control: $22,500,000 authorized for the lower Mississippi, $30,000,000 under a bill pending in the Appropriations Committee at this time, and that under a bill that it is contemplated will be reported by the Flood Control Committee dealing with flood control for the next year there will be another $11,500,000, making in all about $64,000,000; and if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is here and I am wrong, I wish he would correct me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. I called the President's attention to the fact that that money could be used only on authorized projects, whereas the flood of this past spring had wrought terrific havoc in some places, and that Congress had not had the opportunity, or the time, or the disposition—whatever it may be—to pass legislation authorizing those projects and I thought that some concession ought to be made somewhere with reference to unauthorized projects. He said that he would work on all of these emergency matters and in the flood-control areas every available man on relief would be put on this work. I think those who are sponsoring the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, together with the gentleman from Alabama, have about determined that this would probably call for the expenditure of at least as much and probably more than is called for in his amendment; and I hope that the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. STARNES, who is the head of that group, will make a statement to the House.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. And this money would be spent upon what are now unauthorized flood-control projects to be allocated by the President?

Mr. RAYBURN. The exact language I asked the President to agree to was "authorized and unauthorized projects."

Mr. PARSONS. It would include the unauthorized projects.

Mr. RAYBURN. Absolutely.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. May I ask the gentleman if under the provisions of this relief bill the President does not have that authority anyhow? He may make allocations to unauthorized projects or to anything he wishes.

Mr. RAYBURN. He said he would do that.

Mr. McCLELLAN. He has that authority under this bill anyhow, whether anything was said about flood control or not.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. He did say he would. He did not have to say that. He can spend this money as he pleases.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I agree with the gentleman he would not have to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I come now to the roads amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT]. The thought is if $150,000,000 is earmarked according to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, it would freeze $150,000,000 of this money so that it could not be used in all probability for the construction of these so-called farm-to-market roads. As we know, and as we were told the other day by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], this money would be expended by the Department of Roads in Washington and by the highway commissions of the various States. It is my understanding, backed by the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, that the Road Department will not authorize or endorse the expenditure of one dollar for any sort of a road that is not the type and character that will cost at least $7,500 per mile. We can very easily see where we would get in building farm-to-market roads at a cost of $7,500 a mile. We would not get very far.

Furthermore, this being a work and relief bill, and due to the fact it is known that practically every State in the Union builds roads by contract, the thought was that 80 percent of the money that went into the construction of roads in the various States might be spent for material and about 20 percent for labor. Those who are in authority in the Administration are very anxious that about 80 percent of this money be spent for work and about 20 percent for material.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. In a moment I will, if the gentleman will pardon me at this time. It was thought, therefore, it would be better to expend this money in another way.

There were $75,000,000 earmarked in the Cartwright amendment to be spent on State- and Federal-aid highways. This money, if divided between the 48 States, would leave very little for any particular State. Accordingly, it was thought that the highway commission of a State might determine to spend every dollar of the money on one State highway and not touch one-tenth of the counties in that State. It was thought that it would be better for this money to go direct to the State set-up and that allotments be made to the governing boards of the various counties. In my State it is the county judge and four commissioners, which constitute the commissioners' court. These authorities know the labor problems in their own localities and it was thought this money could be better expended under their direction, allowing them to spend it on State highways, farm-to-market roads, or lateral roads, or in any other way they might desire to expend it in order to take care of the labor situation and do the best work they could for the county involved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire about the gentleman's statement to the effect that only 20 percent of the cost of construction of a State highway goes to labor. If the gentleman's statement is correct, it is contrary to testimony that has been presented to the Committee on Roads of the House for the last 4 years. The testimony shows it is between 80 and 85 percent.

Mr. RAYBURN. I made the statement it was stated that in all probability 80 percent of it would be spent on material.

Mr. MOTT. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all of the testimony before the Roads Committee of the House for the last 5 years is to the effect that between 80 and 87 percent of all the money expended on roads goes to labor.

Mr. RAYBURN. That may be true, but I never heard it before.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. If the amendments that were placed on the bill the other day earmarking specific amounts, as I understand, are voted down, arrangement has been made with the President whereby the work provided for by those amendments will in substance be taken care of?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, just to the extent I remarked. I think in all probability there will be more money expended on these projects that the amendments covered than is involved in the amendments, to be frank with the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I want to get at. The arrangement with the White House is that these projects will be taken care of, but they will not be taken care of with this relief money but through additional appropriations and by additional spending on the part of the Government to carry out the programs, provided the earmarking amendments are cut out of the relief bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; that is not the understanding at all. It is supposed to be spent out of the $1,500,000,000, because the President has that much money at his disposal.

Mr. MICHENER. Where does the money come from?

Mr. RAYBURN. It comes out of this one and one-half billion dollars.

Mr. MICHENER. If we appropriate one and a half billion dollars and allow the President to do with it as he may see fit, the gentleman says he will then do the things which the earmarking amendments provide for.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I do not say that.

Mr. MICHENER. If this is the case, then there is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was simply trying to report to the House the matter I was authorized to report, believing myself it is a much better method.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman said these projects would get more money.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not say they would get more money. I said, so far as the flood-control matter is concerned, if they employed all the people on relief in these flood districts it would probably amount to more than that. I have not stated that any specific amount would be spent on anything.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my understanding that instead of any agreement or arrangement, the President informed the gentleman from Texas what he intended to do without action of the House?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, the gentleman from Michigan is trying to impute an agreement and an understanding, whereas the gentleman is reporting back to the House the result of his conversation in which the President reported what he would probably do, anyway.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is what I understand the President intends to do.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for two questions?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think it is true that in 1936 only eleven millions were devoted to flood control. I know I was able to secure $600,000 for my district, and we needed much more.

Also, I remember a letter that came down from the President before the passage of the economy bill. I feel very sure that bill would not have been passed if it had not been for that letter regarding cuts to veterans in their compensation. I knew, and I know the Members of the House knew, as did the veterans, that this agreement was not carried out, and that cuts in compensation were made in spite of the promise in that letter.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentlewoman is not asking me a question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I ask it in the form of a question, then.

Mr. RAYBURN. If there was not enough money in 1936, is the lady voting for the billion and a half or the billion this time?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I expect to vote for earmarking the billion and a half; but that does not answer my question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute in order to answer the question of my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], who has been on his feet for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. I understand it is the agreement that more than the amount stipulated in the amendment which I offered will be spent for ponds, lakes, and other water-conservation projects in the Plains area?

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman there was no agreement whatever. Those in charge of this expenditure for the purposes contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Texas thought his amendment might be a limitation upon them. It was their opinion that in all probability they could well spend more than the $10,000,000 called for by the gentleman's amendment in the Dust Bowl and in the drought section.

Mr. JONES. The amendment states not less than that amount. I had assurance from both Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Aubrey Williams that they expected to spend much more than this amount for those particular purposes. I hoped the gentleman would identify it for the RECORD. They stated it to me. If they did not mean it, I would like to know it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know what they meant when they talked to my colleague.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes. I would like to ask the gentleman some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. I think it is perfectly all right. However, the amendment itself states "not less than $10,000,000", and how that can be a limitation is more than I can understand.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman I am reporting conversations I have had. No one connected with the Administration said to me he knew they would spend more than that much.

Mr. JONES. Did they say that much would be available?

Mr. RAYBURN. They said to me they thought they would spend much more in the drought section than called for in the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. I may say to the gentleman—and the reason I have been insistent upon this is that I understand they claim they have spent it heretofore—that not one dime has ever been spent on this kind of work in the area which I represent, which is in the heart of the worst distressed section. It may be the fault of the State authorities, but the money has not been spent. I had assurance from both these gentlemen that more than that much would be spent. I wanted it made a matter of record. If the gentleman did not hear them state it, I may say I heard them state it, and I expect to stand on that. However, I would like to have the gentleman's assurance that he will try to help us get some money allocated for this purpose.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have told the gentleman that all the time. The gentleman knows my position very well. If they were going to earmark money, I thought they ought to earmark money for the project about which the gentleman is talking.

Mr. JONES. I understand that under the terms of this bill it would be possible for farmers and others who are in need and who are not technically on relief to have their services utilized in carrying out these projects.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me, after listening to the statement of the gentleman, that the final analysis of this whole proposition is the President agrees he will spend, or is willing to spend, practically the same amount of money as the Members have decided they want to spend for the same purposes. If this is true, and to a certain extent it seems to me from the statement of the gentleman it is true, why does the President object to Congress earmarking the money and insist on reserving to himself the right to earmark it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman I did not state it would take all the money mentioned in the Beiter amendment to carry out what we think is the obligation of the Government. I do not know whether it would be $50,000,000, $100,000,000, or $200,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the fact the statement of the gentleman has been very general this afternoon. Nearly anything could be done under it and still comply with the remarks of the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. SNELL. Well, pretty nearly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me it is the fundamental right and duty of Congress to say how this money shall be spent. Does the gentleman agree with me to that extent? Does the gentleman agree with me on that?

Mr. RAYBURN. How it is to be spent?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Under the law; yes.

Mr. SNELL. It is the fundamental duty of Congress to say whether it is to be $100,000,000 for the Navy, or some other amount for another purpose or department.

Mr. RAYBURN. How it is to be spent, that it is not to be wasted, that it must be used on necessary projects, and all that sort of thing, but I do not think it is the business of the Members of the House of Representatives, if they are going into this relief business, to say they know with how many people on relief the work in a given locality can be done.

Mr. SNELL. I did not say that, but I think it is the fundamental right and duty of the Congress to say this Government shall spend so much money this year for public buildings or for the Army or for the Navy or for good roads.

Mr. RAYBURN. We do that in our regular appropriation bills. Every dollar of it is earmarked.

Mr. SNELL. I know, but if we are going to spend a billion and a half, is it not the fundamental right of this Congress to say they want to spend $300,000,000 of that billion and a half for good roads? Of course, these are general figures.

Mr. RAYBURN. If this were a permanent thing like appropriating for the departments of the Government; yes.

Mr. SNELL. These things have become very nearly permanent at the present time.

Mr. RAYBURN. And I may say to the gentleman that I do trust that when we come here next year we will not have to pass a billion-and-a-half bill.

Mr. SNELL. If it was right last week to earmark these various appropriations, and a huge majority of the majority believed it was, let me tell the gentleman that it is right today, and if this Congress has any backbone, it will stand up and do what it thinks is right and perform the duty devolving upon it.

Mr. RAYBURN. We are going to do that over on this side of the aisle this afternoon, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understood from the gentleman's statement in regard to flood control that the President intimated that eleven and one-half million dollars, or some such figure, was to be used in the distressed or flood areas, bringing the total for flood control up to some $63,000,000. Is that the limit on expenditures for flood control? If it is, it would mean that none of the money at present earmarked in the relief bill would be used.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the gentleman, again, that the President stated he would use part of this relief money on unauthorized flood-control projects.

Mr. FERGUSON. That, definitely, then, is saying that the earmarking proposition that the House adopted, which includes the $25,000,000 of the omnibus bill and $20,000,000 of the Overton bill, is taken out because they are both authorized projects.

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly, and they are going to stand.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The eleven and a half million dollars to which the gentleman from Oklahoma refers is not all the money that is to be used on flood-control projects. There is twenty-two and a half million dollars for the lower Mississippi, $30,000,000 under the Overton bill, and eleven and a half million dollars under the bill contemplated to be brought in, and then these other millions of dollars in the bill for relief, which includes authorized and unauthorized projects.

Mr. RAYBURN. Whatever amount the President determines can be used in connection with relief labor, he is going to use in the flood-control areas.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question with regard to the slum-clearance projects in Detroit. We have two of them started, the Brewster and Chandler Court. The foundations are in, the slums have been cleared, and there is approximately $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 involved, and what I would like to know is whether these slum-clearance projects are going to be finished.

Mr. RAYBURN. Under what fund were they started?

Mr. DINGELL. They were started under P. W. A.

Mr. RAYBURN. P. W. A.? Has there been a bond issue or a commitment of money?

Mr. DINGELL. There has been a commitment on the part of the Government, as I understand.

Mr. RAYBURN. What about the city of Detroit? What commitment has been made on its account?

Mr. DINGELL. The city of Detroit has not been involved in the matter at all.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will simply go far enough to say that my understanding is that wherever with reference to buildings the moral obligation has been created on the part of the Government, the President intends to carry it out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute, and then I am not going to ask for any further time.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Did the President state whether this order no. 197 would be rescinded so they could get to work on these projects?

Mr. RAYBURN. It must be rescinded at once if the work is to be done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I think the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], is entitled to the full thanks of the House of Representatives for bringing in here a proposition and an agreement that certainly must prove satisfactory to those who are advocating the earmarking of this bill for P. W. A. and flood control. I am only a private in the ranks. This is my seventh term, but I have never known of a leadership composed of the Speaker of the House and the majority leader that has been more solicitious of the rights of the individual Members of this House than the two men who now hold these positions. [Applause.]

I was one of those last week, Mr. Chairman, who voted to reduce this appropriation to $1,000,000,000. I want to see the time come when we can end this [applause] without doing violence to those who are in need. I believe that if some day we do not finally end it, then it is going to sap and undermine the morale of the American people. But those of us who voted to reduce were defeated, and I then took the position that as it was urged that this was the minimum needed for purposes of relief, I would not vote to earmark the bill for any other purpose.

Much has been said in this debate about Mr. Harry Hopkins.

He is a legitimate target for criticism, both constructive and destructive. His job has been to spend. I do not agree with many of his views, or many of his theories, but I can say this for him. He is the soul of honor and integrity, and he will look you in the face and tell you the truth. [Applause.] That is the highest compliment I can pay anyone. I think we, in a spirit of madness, in a spirit perhaps of dislike, of passion and prejudice, voted to snipe at him by cutting his salary, and I think when we get back in the House again we ought to undo that injustice to that man. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Not now. I took the floor, Mr. Chairman, to discuss one proposition where there has been no agreement. The most indefensible item that has been put in this bill, and personally it would mean more to me than any other item that has been put in, is the amendment to earmark $150,000,000 for roads. Bear with me, my friends, and let me tell you what we have done for roads. Just a month ago we passed an appropriation bill for $165,000,000 for roads, and for next year we have authorized $214,000,000, the very highest amount that has ever been authorized by any Congress for that purpose. Let me ask you this. In view of what we have already done for roads, is there a man in this House, were a relief bill not being considered, who would now come in and say that in addition to all we have given them for roads, we would now give them $150,000,000 more? That item, my friends, ought to go out of this bill.

I am not telling committee secrets. I know the injunction that is always laid on things that transpire in a committee, but it has been said here previously on the floor that the Committee on Roads was unanimously backing this proposition. In view of that it is only fair to tell the House that this very morning that committee voted 7 to 7 on the question of coming in here and asking that that particular amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT and Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. WARREN. Not now. On the matter of roads we have treated the States generously, and the appreciation that the States have is that they are collecting this money for road purposes and diverting it for every other thing they can possibly think of. Do gentlemen know that the States of the Union last year diverted $200,000,000 that was collected in those States for roads, and that the estimate this year is $300,000,000 that will be diverted? For instance, do gentlemen know that the State of New Jersey within the last 6 years has diverted $72,000,000 that was placed on the taxpayers of that State for road purposes, and that in the same period the State of Pennsylvania diverted $23,000,000—all this while they are coming to us and asking us to increase our appropriations and authorizations each year for highways. And they have never had a better friend than I have been in this House, for I handled on the floor the first two road bills that were ever passed that required no matching on the part of the States. While they are asking for more funds from us they spend the money levied for that purpose for everything they can think of.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Largely for relief.

Mr. WARREN. And I appeal to this House, when we go back into the House for consideration of this bill in the House, that we strike out of the bill that most indefensible of all items that have been placed in it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not talk very much on this floor, but I am one who votes the way he talks. I do not march up the hill one day and down the next. [Applause.]

There is nothing new or novel about this amendment. In 1933 when we were looking around for ways to relieve the depression, in the National Industrial Recovery Act we earmarked $400,000,000 for emergency road construction, which was apportioned in the same manner as provided in the amendment agreed to here last week. In 1935 in a relief bill we earmarked not to exceed $800,000,000 for roads, but only $400,000,000 of that was made available, divided $200,000,000 for grade crossings and the other $200,000,000 for highway construction. If it was a good thing then, what is so bad about it now?

I should like to see us win, lose, or draw on this amendment. This House put the amendments into the bill by a vote of more than 3 to 1. I do not have the right or the desire to withdraw it. You spoke, and it is up to you to speak again if you want the amendment out.

Something has been said about employment furnished by highway construction. Official reports show that from the beginning of the public-works program, authorized by the National Industrial Recovery Act, to October 1934 highway expenditures from the Federal Treasury accounted for only 43 percent of the total spent yet highways furnished 57 percent of the total employed for the whole period. That report is typical of the results of highway construction programs from the standpoint of aiding and creating employment.

Public roads construction created employment and put money into circulation faster than any other type of Federal project.

Says a report on operation of the Works program in 1933 and 1934 which adds:

Road construction was not held up by legal difficulties and projects.

Beyond question, therefore—

The Department report says—

the work of highway improvement must be continued indefinitely and at a faster pace. As the demands of traffic have become more exacting there has been a steady trend toward substituting State and National control for local control, and this trend must inevitably continue, the Federal Government taking an increasing part.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], said that the Bureau of Public Roads would not approve a proposal for a road costing less than $7,500 per mile. The gentleman has projects in his district approved by the Bureau on which the cost is considerably less—on one it is as low as $1,577 per mile.

We should consider the value of projects in terms of public use and benefit. When thousands of miles of our most important roads are unimproved or only partly improved, there is no better way to spend a part of this huge work-relief fund. Who is better prepared to pass on projects than the highway commissions?

Many projects have already been passed on and are approved. It does not take a lot of time to go ahead with them. When the money is apportioned to the various States, they can go right ahead.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is aware of the fact that Mr. MacDonald, head of the Bureau of Roads, made the statement before the Committee on Appropriations, Subcommittee on Agriculture, that he would not consider the expenditure of any money on any road on which the cost was less than $7,500 per mile?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Of course, he may have made that statement; if he did, I am sure he has changed his mind, like many other people. Cheaper roads have been built in the gentleman's own district.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But it was done under a plan which we now propose, as used in the bill, without earmarking. It was not done by the State highway commission.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that notwithstanding the fact that $150,000,000 was earmarked by the House last week, not one single cent of it can be spent except under rules and regulations prescribed by the President of the United States?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I am very glad the gentleman brought that out. The last sentence in that amendment says that the President shall prescribe the rules and regulations, and he may require the use of all the relief labor possible. Not only can much skilled and unskilled labor be used from relief rolls but also a good deal of employment will be provided indirectly, as an analysis of any road construction project will show. Work is badly needed in every State on the connected road systems where the roads serve the most people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I realize the difficulties under which these gentlemen have labored and I realize the fine efforts of my colleague from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], for whom I have the highest regard. I cannot believe the gentleman meant to leave the impression as to the drought areas, that his words left with me. I think he must not have meant to put it that way.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. If there is any misunderstanding about my meaning, I would be glad to clear it up.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman stated that he had no promise or assurance whatever insofar as the drought area was concerned. Now, the gentleman did give assurance as to the flood in the Ohio Valley and the Mississippi Valley, where the situation was bad, and I agree with that; but I want to say that intimately linked with the proposition is water conservation in the great plains area that flows into and complicates this problem. I had a telephone conservation with Mr. Hopkins and also one with Mr. Williams, and they stated they expected to spend more than the amount stipulated in the amendment. I wanted to know if the gentleman did not remember something of that character being stated?

Mr. RAYBURN. I stated in reply to the gentleman a moment ago that those in charge, meaning Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Williams, said they felt sure they would spend much more than the $10,000,000 called for in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JONES. Well, that is more certain; but I understood the gentleman to state a while ago that he did not have any assurance nor any promise of expending any amount.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not have any promise.

Mr. JONES. That is what I understood. If I misunderstood the gentleman, I will be glad to stand corrected.

Mr. RAYBURN. They did not make any promise because I asked them for none. They did say what I said a moment ago in reply to the gentleman's question, that they felt sure they would spend three times the $10,000,000 on the very projects which the gentleman had in his amendment; but they did not make any promise that they would spend any definite amount.

Mr. JONES. Did they make any promise of any amount?

Mr. RAYBURN. Hopkins and Williams?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. JONES. They did not make any promise of any minimum?

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not ask for any promise.

Mr. JONES. My sole effort is to get a definite understanding. I am wondering if someone else in this House has not talked to Mr. Hopkins or to Mr. Williams on this proposition or heard a statement.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I heard Mr. Aubrey Williams say that the $10,000,000 embraced in the amendment would be considered a limitation, that probably $30,000,000 or more would be expended for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. Did he say they expected to spend that much, or was that just the contingency that they might spend it?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I do not think I would construe it as a contingency that it might be spent when a man said that if the amendment were adopted finally it would be a limitation upon their power to expend. I got the idea that they would spend more than the $10,000,000 on that proposition.

Mr. JONES. That statement is one thing that gives me pause, for the amendment states "not less than $10,000,000." How that can be construed to be a limitation, I do not know.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. I am not trying to stir up an argument, I am trying to arrive at a conclusion. We have had a desperate situation in the plains area, and I am trying to get something definite. We have had many suggestions and many might-be promises, but I would like to have it just as clear as possible, and that is what I am trying to get at now. With this disclosure, I feel that it is in much better shape than it was, or at least better than my impression was. I do not think the gentleman from Texas meant to leave the impression that he certainly did with me and five or six others with whom I have talked on the matter.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I may say that the gentleman's district and my district adjoin. We have heard about all the money they have spent for ponds and dams in the past, but there has never been a pond or a dam built in this area yet.

Mr. JONES. No. A desperate situation exists in that area and something ought to be done as soon as possible. I may have misunderstood my colleague. I wanted this cleared up.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is the gentleman satisfied now?

Mr. JONES. I am satisfied that I have got about all the information that I can, and I think that we are in much better shape than we were when the first statement was made.

Mr. NICHOLS. But the gentleman did not answer my question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one additional minute to permit me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. As I understand it an amendment has been adopted by the committee providing that not less than $10,000,000 shall be expended in the Plains area on ponds, dams, and so forth. Is the gentleman now satisfied after the various conferences that we have heard discussed here now to agree that this $10,000,000 earmarking amendment be taken out of this bill?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman realizes that it is an amendment to another amendment on which those interested in flood control had agreed. I do not think we have much choice at this time, and I will state this, that while the earmarking will provide that the money shall be available for this purpose if it finally passes, yet it must be expended by these gentlemen, and after all they must administer the whole act. They gave me the assurance that they expected to spend much more than this amount. They have told some others that they expect to spend much more than this amount and I think that is the best that we can do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. May I inquire if there are any amendments on the Clerk's desk pending to this section 5 which we are now debating?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment now pending.

Mr. WOODRUM. I would like, if possible, to fix the time for debate on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two other amendments pending to this section at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WOODRUM. Two amendments besides the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment at the desk, and I know there is another amendment at the desk. This would allow but 10 minutes on each amendment. If the amendments are worth anything, they are certainly worth more than 10 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and change the time to 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state that there are now four amendments pending to this section.

The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Virginia intend that this 30 minutes shall take care of those opposed to the amendments?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I may state to the gentleman from Oregon in justification of the effort to close debate that we have been debating this section for an hour now.

Mr. MOTT. There are many people interested in this section who would like to have some time.

As a member of the Roads Committee who is very much interested in the roads amendment, I would like to have an assurance I may be given 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is no road amendment in this section. We passed that long ago. All this discussion is on a pro-forma amendment. There is no road amendment in this section.

Mr. MOTT. It is all going to be taken care of in the 30 minutes, I imagine.

Mr. WOODRUM. I should like to see the debate for the 30 minutes confined to this section and amendments thereto. We have been talking for an hour on everything but this section.

Mr. MOTT. I want about 5 minutes on the road-ear-marking amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. If the gentleman does not get in on this section, there is another section.

Mr. MOTT. I would rather get it on this section.

Mr. WOODRUM. I would suggest the gentleman slip up and speak to the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say that 12 Members or more have asked for recognition, which would leave 2½ minutes apiece under the unanimous-consent request.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as I understand, there is a committee amendment pending at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. There is.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia how much of the 30 minutes will be consumed in debate on the committee amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. I would like to have 2 or 3 minutes. The gentleman can have the rest of the time.

Mr. NICHOLS. It seems to me that the gentleman from Virginia, being chairman of the committee, should limit the time beyond the debate on the committee amendment, because members of the committee are entitled to recognition ahead of everyone else. The time could be used by them and none left for any other amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the committee amendment. I do not think anyone knows what that amendment is.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, it is printed right in the bill.

The regular order was demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Page 6, line 1, after the word "State", insert "or county"; page 6, line 2, after the word "State", insert the words "or county."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, the bill by section 5 provides as follows:

Appointments to Federal positions of an administrative or advisory capacity in the foregoing appropriation in any State shall be made from among the bona-fide residents of that State so far as not inconsistent with efficient administration.

My amendment simply adds the words "or county" after the word "State."

There is not a project in any county in the district of any of you gentlemen but that there are competent men in the county or within the district to carry on the administrative or advisory work for that project. If it is good to limit employment to the State, then I say it should be limited to the county if for no other than the following reason: It will stop the practice of State and district administrators using their own little political cliques to further their own political ambitions and transporting their pet men all over the State to be supervisors and foremen on the various projects that they have no connection with and very little knowledge of. It always incites and incenses the people of the county to have someone from a little political clique from another county sent out to a rural community to take charge of the farmer boys who are constructing a farm-to-market road or any other project.

I think my amendment should be adopted. It would guarantee to the people of a particular county that when there is a project going on in that county the people living in the county will be employed on the project and it will not be run by someone imported from another part of the State.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAY moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, my only object in offering the motion at the present time is for the purpose of responding to some of the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina made with reference to the amendment I offered last week, which amendment was adopted by the Committee.

Personally I have nothing whatever against Mr. Harry Hopkins. I met him personally one time, and then for only a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is based on the idea that if there are any efforts to be made toward economy and aiding the President in balancing the Budget we ought to start at the top instead of at the bottom. My amendment is in defense of the men down in the ditches who are working for $1.56 per day in my district and other districts. My amendment is in the interest of the hungry women and children all over America who are on the relief rolls.

I say to you the man who sponsors the opposition to this amendment is taking a stand flat-footed and four-square against the interests of the people who are on relief and for whose benefit this measure is to be enacted.

I stated last week, and I repeat the statement now, I have seen something happen in the House of Representatives this afternoon which I never expected to see. In the 7 years I have been a Member of this House I have never seen such an event as the Members of the House of Representatives of the United States going into a round-table discussion to try to determine whether they will run downtown and ask some bureaucrat whether they can spend money for some particular purpose, whether or not the appropriating body of the people, the body which alone has power to appropriate, shall ask somebody in a department whether they will spend it for roads or bridges or whether they will spend it for relief.

The President, in his annual message, urged that the Congress curtail expenditures in every possible way. He emphasized the all important fact that all Treasury estimates of income in revenue, had been extremely disappointing in that it had fallen far short of all estimates of the Treasury. He has this day sent here a lengthy message again emphasizing further shortages in revenue and that message has today been read to this body. Are we so deaf to our duties that we cannot contemplate the seriousness of the fiscal affairs of our country? Are we going to refuse the admonitions of our chief? Must we continue to incur colossal deficits and continue to disregard our leadership? As for me I think it time to call a halt. Some of us have sought to earmark portions of the funds appropriated in this resolution and we are charged with sponsoring "pork barrel" appropriations because we want only a third of this stupendous fund to be used in construction of such worthy projects as highways, bridges, railroad crossings, and better and more modern schoolhouses.

If that is "pork" I am guilty of "pork barrel" activities and have no apology to offer for it.

Last year during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress when certain business interests sought to express opposition to certain legislation by telegram, they were held up as corrupt lobbyists, and yet today we find a situation here in Washington 10 times more infamous than anything that has yet happened. As soon as we, as representatives of the people, attempted to secure some substantial improvements from this fund, a chain of telegrams and telephone messages flowed out of Washington to every State director of W. P. A. And here come telegrams by the thousands from every section of this country. From my home town came a telegram signed by the mayor of that city and every county officer in the county, imploring me to change my attitude. At that very moment the mayor of my city was sitting in my office at my desk in the House Office Building in Washington in conference with me. Similar telegrams were received by scores of Members. That is Washington bureaucracy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the discussion with reference to Harry Hopkins' salary.

In the first place, taking $2,000 from Harry Hopkins' salary does not amount to anything as far as economy in the United States Government is concerned. [Applause.]

Second, with respect to the argument I have heard about our getting only $10,000, well, that is our fault. We should have been getting $15,000, 10 years ago. [Applause.] When we raised the salary of Members of Congress from $7,500 to $10,000, I sat alongside two Members who said, "Billy, are you going to vote for this?" I said, "Yes." "On a roll call?" "Yes." They said, "We will vote for it if there is not a roll call; but back in our districts $10,000 is like $10,000,000."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I am sorry; not just at this point. I will yield later.

Let me say that any corporation in the United States, United States Steel or any big corporation, which could get a man of the caliber of Harry Hopkins, who could put 4,000,000 men to work in 38 days at union wages, would be glad to pay him at least $25,000 a year, and probably from $50,000 to $100,000 a year.

It seems to me this kind of economy is not worth while, and it is not protecting the gentleman to whom reference has been made, the low-paid worker on W. P. A. The best friend the poor worker on W. P. A. has in the United States of America today is Harry Hopkins.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell me what Harry Hopkins was doing before he came with the Government and how much he was earning?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. He was a welfare worker.

Mr. SNELL. This is the best job he ever had.

Mr. CONNERY. Whatever he got, he was worth 10 times as much, because any man who fights for the poor and the weak is not going to get any great wages in the United States today. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. MAY. If the gentleman's statement is correct, that Mr. Hopkins could command a salary of $25,000 a year immediately from some great steel corporation, since the steel corporations are now more active than they have been for years and are wanting men, why is it Mr. Hopkins does not go to such a job instead of holding onto a $12,000 job?

Mr. CONNERY. Because he is doing a more important job. He is taking care of the poor of the United States, which is much more important.

Mr. Chairman, if no one else acts in the matter, I will ask that a separate vote be had on that amendment, and I hope we will put the amount back where it belongs.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I must reserve the right to object until I can see what the amendment is.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. On line 11, page 6, to include the words "W. P. A. district" instead of "State or Territory", so that the officials in the district must be residents of that district.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I must object to that. I may state in objecting that the committee amendment was agreed to while the gentleman was speaking to me awhile ago. When we get in the House I am going to have to ask the House to strike out the committee amendment, because it is absolutely unworkable. I am forced to object to the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment on the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: Page 6, line 3, after the word "Administration", strike out the period and insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter all appointments of persons to the Federal service for employment within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, whether such appointments be within the classified civil service or otherwise, shall be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census. In making separations from the Federal service or furloughs without pay to last as long as 3 months of persons employed within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, the appointing power shall give preference in retention to appointees from States that have not received their share of appointments according to population: Provided, however, That soldiers, sailors, and marines, the widows of such or the wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines who themselves are not qualified but whose wives are qualified to hold a position in the Government service shall be given preference in retention in their several grades and classes where their ratings are good or better."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which I believe is entirely fair in every respect. It is an amendment which provides that appointments in the District of Columbia shall be apportioned among the various States according to population.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment to his amendment that no supervisor or engineer in any county shall be appointed without the consent of the sitting Member of Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FADDIS. I believe it would be a good amendment, and I believe our friends over on the other side would accept that amendment.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would the gentleman accept the amendment?

Mr. FADDIS. I do not believe it would be germane to my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer is one to prevent families like the McQueens from appropriating all the jobs given out in the city of Washington, D. C.; and I believe the amendment is germane to the bill, and certainly it is in conformity with the principles of apportionment with respect to appointments under the civil service. It is an amendment which will give the various States throughout the United States representation in the various departments according to their population, and it is an amendment which I intend to offer to every bill to which it may be germane during the remainder of this session of Congress.

I hope the distinguished gentleman from Virginia will not insist upon his point of order, and I hope the Committee will adopt this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR of New York). The Chair is ready to rule.

The section in question pertains to appointments of an administrative or advisory character under this bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania provides that all appointments of persons under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned among the States and then proceeds to grant certain preferences. The Chair feels that while the gentleman's amendment might be germane as a separate section, it is not germane to this particular section which pertains only to positions of an administrative or advisory character, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIROVICH: At the end of line 3, after the word "administration", insert: "No supervisor or engineer in any county shall be appointed without the consent of the sitting Member of Congress."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have just proposed requires that no supervisor or engineer under the jurisdiction of this bill shall be appointed in any county without the consent of the sitting Member of Congress from the district in which the county is located. I have introduced this amendment because for the past 11 years that I have been a Member of the House I have persistently and uniformly fought for the merit system. I have battled to protect the civil-service regulations and requirements of all men and women who took examinations under civil service.

People today are being appointed without regard to civil-service rules and regulations. Many complaints have come to me and countless other Members of Congress that people are being appointed to various positions as engineers and inspectors in the W. P. A. who are not qualified for the positions they fill. In view of these tremendous complaints around the Nation, I am taking the opportunity to at least get the consent of Members of the House, just the same as the consent of Members of the Senate is secured for higher positions, so that we may approve the qualifications, character, and experience and virtues of those who will be called upon to look after those who are in hunger, penury, and want.

The civil service of our country must not be defiled by the development within it of a bureaucratic organization that will disregard the rights, privileges, and prerogatives of those who take examinations for important positions.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I just wanted to ask, Did they have civil service in the days of the Roman Empire?

Mr. SIROVICH. They had the civil service even under your Republican organization and you played it and abused it as the Romans did of old. [Laughter.] However, in order to play fair with the sitting Member on the Republican side, the progressives and the liberals, this amendment would provide that no W. P. A. supervisor or engineer could be named in any congressional district without the consent of the sitting Member of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

As the Chair recently stated, this section deals with administrative or advisory officials. The Chair is unable to know, of its own knowledge, whether an engineer or a supervisor is such an administrative or advisory official or not. Furthermore, the section pertains to residence in the States, which seems to be the crux of the section, and for this reason the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not germane to the section.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the Chairman be good enough to let me know to what part of this bill this amendment would be germane?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not a parliamentary counsel for the Members.

Mr. SIROVICH. But the Chairman is a very good parliamentarian.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to know if it is the purpose of the Committee to go ahead with the bill to completion tonight?

The CHAIRMAN. Again the Chair does not have that information available. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as complete orders from the White House have not arrived as yet, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. No part of the foregoing appropriation shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any person who is a candidate for any State, district, county, or municipal office (such office requiring full time of such person and to which office a salary attaches), in any primary, general, or special election, or who is serving as a campaign manager or assistant thereto for any such candidate.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 6, line 16, after the figure "6", insert "(a)."

Page 6, after line 22, insert:

"(b) No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States who holds an administrative, executive, or supervisory position under this joint resolution if such person receives or earns compensation for personal services (rendered during the period when he holds such position) from any other source."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment on page 7, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania to the committee amendment on page 7: Page 7, line 2, after the word "compensation", insert "in excess of $1,000 per annum."

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment, and I think the Committee might agree to it, is this: Under the reading of the committee amendment, without my amendment, any man who earns anything for personal services cannot be a foreman, a general foreman, or hold a supervisory position on a project. For instance, if a farmer, who is skilled as a road supervisor, were earning by farming $1 or $10 in a year, he would be excluded from holding a foremanship on a project. He could not be a foreman on a road project and raise a bushel of potatoes himself and sell them. If a woman had a garden and was a foreman on a sewing project, she could not raise and sell a nickel's worth of onions. She would be excluded entirely.

Take it from the standpoint of an engineer. Suppose an engineer is in a supervisory capacity in a district, and he were called out by a neighbor some day to lay a grade or to lay out a lot in town. He would either have to do that work for nothing or, if he charged anything for it, he would be thrown off his job, and he might be necessary to the work of the whole district. Any worker who has any supervisory, executive, or administrative job of any kind, according to the reading of this amendment, without the addition of the amendment that I have offered, could not earn 5 cents. If a lawyer were the foreman of a county assessment indexing project, he could not go before a justice of the peace or a magistrate some evening to defend some fellow, or appear for someone for a $10 fee. If the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] will give me his ear for a moment, I would ask if he will agree to the amendment that I have proposed?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the attitude of the committee, and there has been no meeting of the Appropriations Committee, but this language, beginning on line 23, page 6, down to line 4 on page 7, is an amendment adopted in the full committee just as we were adjourning, without debate, and those in charge of this work program say it is administratively almost impossible to put it into operation.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Then there could be no damage done if this amount, $1,000 per annum, were inserted in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. If any of it is to go in, I have no objection to the thousand dollars going in, but I am against the whole amendment.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. While it is true that this amendment was adopted at the closing hours of a committee meeting, I am not prepared to admit nor will I ever admit that the Committee on Appropriations passes any regulations or amendments without knowing what it is doing.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALY. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. TABER. The design of this amendment is to prevent someone from getting two salaries, is it not?

Mr. DALY. Absolutely.

Mr. TABER. And that is a laudable purpose.

Mr. DALY. The gentleman from New York has placed his hand on the meat of what this amendment stands for. I doubt if there is a Member of this House who does not know people in his own district who are getting a salary from the P. W. A., who also have lucrative sources of income otherwise.

If there is any excuse for relief at all it is to take care of people who have nothing and who need help. It is certainly not to grease fat hogs. In the State of Pennsylvania where I come from—not in Philadelphia—so I have no personal ax to grind—there was a man holding a $4,500 job in an administrative office under W. P. A. and getting $30,000 a year as receiver of a bank. I am opposed to that. [Applause.] I think it violates everything this bill stands for. If the amendment suggested by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], limits it to $1,000, I am unalterably opposed to it for this reason: If I am making $1,000 in the practice of law or anything else and my neighbor is in want, making nothing at all, I do not think I ought to get a job, if I am making $1,000, when somebody else is making nothing. [Applause.]

If you place any restrictions upon this amendment as it is written in the bill, you will defeat the very purpose of it. You will open the door for men to get dual salaries and hold dual jobs.

I was asked in the W. P. A. to withdraw the amendment because of this fact, that it would interfere with one man who had a job here as a teacher in one of the large universities in Washington, receiving $5,000 a year. He is employed on W. P. A. projects. I was told it would interfere with him. I frankly said, "I do not give a damn whether it interferes with him or not." [Laughter and applause.] I said, "That is the kind of a bird I am after." [Laughter.] That does not mean relief. If that man is getting that salary to which he is not entitled in addition to another salary when there are men and women in this country in want.

Therefore I ask you to vote against putting any restrictions on this amendment, which would permit men making $1,000 a year to get a remunerative job on W. P. A., when his neighbor is receiving nothing and is in want. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I rise, Mr. Chairman, simply for the purpose of saying that I think the amendment which was incorporated in this bill by the full committee, and which the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the subcommittee, having control of the bill, has indicated he is now willing to abandon and desires to eliminate from the bill, received as careful consideration by the full committee as any other portion of the bill, and was adopted by the full committee by an overwhelming majority, and, in my judgment, still represents the views of an overwhelming majority of the Committee on Appropriations. Certainly we are making this matter farcical if we are not willing to provide that these funds, presumably provide for relief of unemployment, shall not be paid out to men who already have positions. It does not occur to me that any logical objection can be urged to the language which was included by the full committee, after careful consideration, upon motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALY]. I certainly hope that the Committee of the Whole will approve the action of the full committee rather than approve the position of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], who now indicates his desire that the committee amendment should be abandoned.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, there have been quite a few amendments made to this bill so far, but I do not think there is any amendment that has more merit than the amendment that has been presented by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALY], as a committee amendment. Why should any person who is gaining a livelihood otherwise be permitted to get a supervisory position on W. P. A. when there are thousands and thousands of unemployed who absolutely need this money? So I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALY] on having this amendment approved by the Committee on Appropriations.

I just want to refer a moment or two to a statement made this afternoon by the gentleman from Missouri. He stated that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has diverted $23,000,000 of money paid by the taxpayers for highway purposes. I want to inform that gentleman and the members of the committee that every cent of the money diverted by Pennsylvania from the highway fund to other purposes will be paid back into the highway fund within the next 6 months so that in actual effect there will have been no diversion whatever of highway funds in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I ask the gentleman why the money was diverted from the fund in the first instance?

Mr. EBERHARTER. For the purpose of furnishing relief to those in absolute want.

Mr. Chairman, the county of Allegheny, in the great State of Pennsylvania, according to the 1930 census, with a population of 1,374,310, outranks 16 States.

By comparison, Allegheny County has a population over 15 times that of Nevada; over 6 times that of Wyoming; over 5 times that of Delaware; over 3 times that of New Mexico, Arizona, Idaho, or Vermont; over 2 times that of New Hampshire, Utah, Montana, or North Dakota; more than that of Rhode Island, South Dakota, Maine, Oregon, or Colorado.

A study shows that Allegheny County's population is equal to, first, the combined population of Nevada, Wyoming, Delaware, Vermont, and New Mexico; and, second, the combined population of North and South Dakota.

ASSESSED REALTY VALUATION

The 1936 assessed realty valuation of Allegheny County amounts to $1,795,000,000. This is exceeded only by 15 States, other than Pennsylvania, as follows: California, Connecticut, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Maryland, New York, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Texas, and Wisconsin.

Allegheny County has an assessed realty valuation over 29 times that of New Mexico; over 11 times that of Nevada; over 7 times that of Vermont or Idaho; over 6 times that of Delaware, Wyoming, or Arkansas; over 5 times that of Arizona; over 4 times that of South Carolina or Florida; over 3 times that of Utah, Mississippi, or New Hampshire; over 2 times that of Montana, Maine, North Dakota, Colorado, South Dakota, Georgia, or Oklahoma; more than that of Oregon, Rhode Island, Alabama, Washington, Tennessee, Virginia, Minnesota, Kentucky, Louisiana, West Virginia, Nebraska, or Kansas.

FEDERAL INCOME TAXES

Based on published Government 1933 reports, the county of Allegheny paid not less than $24,000,000 and not more than $27,000,000 in income taxes to the Federal Government.

The county of Allegheny, assuming the minimum figure, pays more income taxes to the United States Government than any State in the Union, excepting California, Illinois, Michigan, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, of which it is a part.

According to the above figures, Allegheny County paid in 1933: 102 times the amount paid by North Dakota; 75 times the amount paid by New Mexico or Wyoming; 60 times the amount paid by South Dakota; 30 times the amount paid by Arizona, Mississippi, Montana, or Vermont; 25 times the amount paid by Arkansas; 10 times the amount paid by Oregon; 6 times the amount paid by Georgia or Maine; 5 times the amount paid by Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Washington, or West Virginia; 4 times the amount paid by Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Rhode Island, or Tennessee; 2 times the amount paid by Indiana, Minnesota, North Carolina, Oklahoma, or Virginia; 1½ times the amount paid by Texas or Wisconsin.

This great county is governed by a board of commissioners consisting of three men who have complete control of both its legislative and executive functions. The chairman of that board is Mr. John J. Kane, whose grasp of governmental functions is so exceptional that it is acknowledged by all without question. Another member of the board of three, George Rankin, Jr., until a few years ago engaged in finance, is also recognized as an able and exceptionally capable public servant. Being in control of such a vast government as is constituted by this county, this board of commissioners with their experience are naturally competent to judge of the merits and advantages and disadvantages of any contemplated public improvement or work, insofar as both the financing and the general benefit is concerned.

Last week, on May 27, 1937, this board of commissioners passed a resolution in which attention was called to the fact that under the new regulations of the Public Works Administration, Federal grants on four large improvements, namely, Hemlock Drive $150,000, Browne Hill Road $145,000, Glenwood Bridge $256,000, and Rankin Bridge $175,000, would be on the basis of an amount equal to the actual amount of wages paid to relief labor plus 15 percent. It was further stated in the resolution that grants on such a basis would not in most cases, exceed 20 percent of the total cost of such projects, and in the resolution it called on the Congressmen and the Senator from Pennsylvania to endeavor to have the P. W. A. adopt reasonable regulations so that this activity of the Federal Government would be of some assistance and further called attention in the resolution to the arbitrary administrative red tape which the county had encountered in P. W. A. directed projects.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the four projects mentioned, there has been prepared plans and specifications for the construction of a new road leading to and from the city of Pittsburgh, which will be known as the Banksville Road, the cost of which will be $1,000,000. Negotiations have been in progress to obtain a grant of $200,000, one-fifth of the cost, from the P. W. A., but, gentlemen, it appears likely that this great county of Allegheny will reject a P. W. A. grant on grounds which I personally believe well founded. The Congress of the United States is on this very day considering legislation to establish minimum wages and has approved the right of labor to collective bargaining. But what does this P. W. A. agency of the United States Government attempt to force upon Allegheny County? The prevailing and union wage scale in this county is from $1.43 to $1.50 an hour for skilled workmen, but this P. W. A. agency insists that no more than $1.20 an hour shall be paid for skilled workmen on this particular project. The prevailing wage rate for laborers in this county is 62½ to 65 cents an hour, but what does the P. W. A. insist upon. It insists that the grant shall be made on the basis of 50 cents an hour for laborers. P. W. A. is trying to force an unfair wage scale upon Allegheny County. Much as these public improvements are needed, this board will never agree to chisel on the workingman.

For nearly 6 months a program for public improvements has been in the hands of P. W. A. officials, complete in every detail with regard to specifications and all other matters. These public improvements are sorely needed but today almost 6 months have elapsed and, in spite of the fact that officials of the county made repeated trips to Washington and expended large sums of money for the preparation of plans and specifications, no definite answer has been received. And, more than that, no reason has been advanced by P. W. A. officials as to why some answer cannot be given or has not been given. So much red tape has developed in this agency, through multitudinous and picayunish regulations and rules, that on every project an enormous amount of extra detail work must be done, the cost of all of which must be borne by the municipality receiving the grant; so much that by the time the project is completed the municipality does not receive any benefit from the grant. The minutest change in the specifications requires, under P. W. A. regulations, a legal ordinance or resolution of the municipality before it will be approved. For instance, if the specifications call for white paint and the county desires to have buff paint applied instead, it would require the legal adoption of a separate ordinance or resolution. It requires an expert to draft such a resolution in the first place. Then five certified copies of such resolution must be forwarded to the P. W. A. officials here in Washington, and, after interminable delays, perhaps such a minor change would be approved. In one case award of a contract in the sum of $120,000 was made by the Commissioners of Allegheny County. This was only done after previous bids had been rejected because it was felt that the bid was rather high. The county commissioners of Allegheny County are thoroughly familiar with the cost of this kind of work in their county and previous bids were rejected on the insistence of P. W. A. officials sitting here in Washington, who probably know nothing about conditions outside of Washington. They were repeatedly informed that no contractor would bid a lower amount; and each successive bid submitted was higher than the previous one. And what did the P. W. A. officials here in Washington do? In violation of the spirit of the agreement which had been entered into, they arbitrarily said that they would allow only $80,000, instead of the sum of $120,000, which was the lowest bid. Such high-handed and arbitrary action by people here in Washington certainly does not entitle P. W. A. to consideration at the hands of Congress. I doubt if there is a P. W. A. official anywhere in the country who will dispute the assertion that P. W. A. restrictions regarding labor slow up progress and increase the cost of construction work, and it a fairly well-established fact that contractors have advanced as much as 10 percent to their usual contract price on account of the many regulations which must be met by them in the prosecution of the work.

This county also has an airport with the largest paved area of any airport in the world. It has been contemplated to further improve this wonderful airport, and for a while it was expected that P. W. A. funds would be utilized. It has now been practically decided that P. W. A. money would in nowise be of assistance in such a project because of the red-tape restrictions and regulations.

When the P. W. A. was first established it seemed to have the approval of the majority of the people of the country and for a while after its inception it seemed to operate with dispatch and judgment. From day to day, however, new regulations were imposed and this has continued until one gets the impression that each official of this agency is striving to erect barriers and obstructions. One cannot help but feel that it is becoming an ever-growing bureaucracy entangled in such multitudinous restrictions so as to make it an example of inefficiency.

In short, Mr. Chairman, the statement of Works Director John F. Laboon, of Allegheny County, that Federal grants offered for bridge and highway improvements are insufficient to warrant the inconvenience and red tape of P. W. A. directed projects, is true and absolutely borne out by experience.

And if Executive Order No. 197, providing that all skilled labor must be taken from the relief rolls, is kept in force and effect, it is my conclusion that the sooner the Congress of the United States dissolves the P. W. A. the better it will be for the country, economically and otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, earmarking any sum whatsoever to go to P. W. A. out of the funds appropriated for relief would be a sad mistake and would deprive hundreds of thousands of deserving people of work.

Let me urge you with all the earnestness at my command not to earmark one cent out of this bill so that it will go to P. W. A.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the amendment being discussed undoubtedly has a meritorious objective, but the Works Progress Administration, which will have charge of the administration of part of this fund, says that it is absolutely unworkable when it comes down to practical operation. For instance, they say that in many places it is in the interest of economy to employ a private architect to render a small supervisory service in connection with the project, yet under this language they would have to get a full-time architect working for the Government. Under this language you could not employ anybody to do anything on any works project if he gets on penny of compensation from any other source. Mr. Chairman, that is unworkable. I want to say to our friends from Pennsylvania that if they have any such situation as that in their State relief set-up, men who are chiseling by drawing salaries from other sources, they should get them out of their set-up, because they have full control of that. We do not have anything like that in my part of the country.

Mr. Chairman, of course nobody wants to see relief money dissipated, but it is going mighty far to say that not one penny of this money may be spent for employing one who may draw a salary from another source. It puts the Administration in the position they have to employ full-time men to do a small job in a community or on a project where maybe they might need an engineer to go out and lay out a plat of land. They could employ him for $5, but under this amendment they would have to get one sent from headquarters at considerable more expense. The object is all right, but the language is too restrictive. It defeats its own purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated. It was adopted by the full committee practically without debate; and, as my good friend the gentleman from Georgia knows, it was adopted after members of the committee were preparing to leave the committee room.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DITTER moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that motion has already been offered and passed upon.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I contend that business has been transacted since the motion was made and that my motion is therefore in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The other preferential motion was withdrawn and a vote not taken on it.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offered this motion because of the conflict that exists among my Democratic brethren from the State of Pennsylvania. I am exceedingly disturbed as I find my distinguished friend from Philadelphia taking one position and some of his brethren taking another position. As I contemplate this conflict, there comes to my mind the possibility that they might advise me with respect to a similar conflict in reference to some telegrams that have been brought to our attention. It has not been many months since a great hue and cry went up about the matter of telegrams coming in here with respect to a utilities bill. I find now that many of us received recently a telegram from the chief engineer of the Pennsylvania Department of Highways. I assume my Democratic brethren received the same telegram. That telegram reads as follows:

Strongly urge your support of House Road Committee's resolution, Cartwright amendment, to earmark relief bill funds for roads.

I assumed, of course, Mr. Temple was speaking with authority when that telegram came through. However, I was further disturbed and embarrassed, Mr. Chairman, and am particularly disturbed now, as my Democratic brethren from Philadelphia seem much concerned now that the light of day is brought to bear upon this matter of telegrams.

I find one of my own constituents has wired here. You know, I have the honor of representing His Excellency the Governor of Pennsylvania. I read now from a telegram from His Excellency the Governor of Pennsylvania that seems to be in direct conflict with the one from the chief engineer. The chief engineer expressed his views before any pressure was brought. Of course, I assumed that the chief engineer of the highway department would know the needs of Pennsylvania. He should know. I want to read now from an original telegram from His Excellency George H. Earle:

Many of you Members are preparing to earmark President Roosevelt's one-and-one-half-billion-dollar relief program for various projects, many requiring little relief labor, thereby defeating purpose of President to provide maximum unemployment relief. Stop.

Such action will add greatly to relief burden of all States.

Stop. I say to you Pennsylvania Democrats, stop!

I urge you, in the interest of our State, to support the President's plan, and if you wish special projects to appropriate additional funds. Stop.

The majority leader was not certain a bit ago when we interrogated him as to whether there were to be additional funds. That is the answer. There are to be additional funds. More spending is the order of the Governor.

I sincerely hope you will stand by the President on this vital issue.

Stop again.

Now, all my brethren on the Democratic side, from Virginia, from Kentucky, from Oregon, from Washington, yea, from Michigan, because I remember last week a question was raised as to whether the Governor of Michigan was doing this, should give heed. Listen to the last sentence. I do not know whether this is a threat or promise. I have a great regard for the Governor; he is my constituent. Mark this last sentence:

I am asking all Democratic Governors to make a similar request of their Congressmen.

I am just wondering as I read this state paper—and I ask my friends from Pennsylvania on the Democratic side, is this last sentence intended as the opening gun of the George H. Earle for President in 1940? [Applause.]

My sympathy goes out to the Democratic Members from Pennsylvania. They are in a difficult position. They received the straightforward, nonpolitical, professional opinion of the chief engineer of the highway department urging that the bill be earmarked for the needs of the Commonwealth which they represented. Many of them were favorable to this earmarking last week. They depended upon the recommendation of the engineer of the State. They realized then their duty to the Commonwealth. They accepted and were persuaded by professional opinion. Political influence had not been exerted. That was before orders were issued. Politics were out of the picture. They were free agents then, free to voice and vote their convictions. The engineer's opinion was worth something then. Courageously they could vote and go to their people and declare that their position was predicated upon the professional advice of an authority on highway construction and who knew the needs of Pennsylvania.

Then something happened. The Democratic majority here was divided. An attitude of freedom of thought took possession. Many were encouraged to think that the House of Representatives was assuming again its prerogatives to think and act as in its judgment would be to the best interests of the people. It seemed that the rubber-stamp characteristic was being discarded and that the shackles of political serfdom were being broken. The administration's program was threatened. Then the second telegram came—a telegram not from the chief engineer of Pennsylvania, whose duty it is to know, but a telegram from the Governor, who declares by his telegram that they must disregard the professional opinion of the State engineer and accept his dictation.

Naturally, my Democratic friends from Pennsylvania are distressed. They are torn between two choices.

They can be positive and maintain the position which they took last week, and thereby incur the displeasure of the Governor, or they can reverse the position which they took before, cast to the winds the advice and recommendation of the engineer, and thereby receive the approval of the Governor. This is a difficult position for them. It calls for our sympathy. We extend it to them.

We have hope in their spirit of independence. We believe that they resent the odium which attaches to the characterization "rubber stamps." They realize, of course, that obedience to orders means the inevitable label "rubber stamps." They know the difference between independence of thought and the humiliation of following orders. They can make a choice between professional opinion and political pressure. They can be free men, acting as they believe the best interests of their districts and State require, or they cay be "yes men", doing as they are bidden by political bosses, irrespective of the interests which they represent. It is a choice between being rubber stamps or being real Representatives.

The Democratic Members from Pennsylvania have an opportunity today to exemplify the best traditions of Pennsylvania and to prove their worth as representatives of the people. Whom do you represent, I ask you today? To whom are you responsive? Do you accept orders or do you vote your convictions? Is an engineer's professional opinion worth more than a political order? Your vote today will be the answer. You will stand firm by your convictions or you may do a political flip-flop. You have the choice of being a representative of the people or a political trapeze artist. Vote your convictions today and go home to your people unembarrassed and unashamed, satisfied that you have not been mere political puppets and pawns.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DALY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

May I say in reply to my friend, and an old friend of many years standing from a neighboring county [Mr. DITTER], on the other side, that he read with great care two telegrams. I do not know where he got them. But, if he had gone further to the source where he procured those, he would also have received a copy of a telegram from the secretary of highways of Pennsylvania, Warren Van Dyke, repudiating the telegram that the engineer sent and repudiating the engineer. Why did not the gentleman from Montgomery County, Pa., read that telegram? Why was he not fair enough to read that telegram? Or did he not want to read it?

Did he only want to make a speech about the distinguished constituent which he says he represents? He does represent the most distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania. That is, he represents the district in which that citizen resides, but I doubt very much that he represents that distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania. [Laughter and applause.] I do not know whether he really represents anybody in the district. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the Republican side spoke about the fact this might be a boom for George H. Earle for president. God knows, they (the Republicans) wanted Earle. He was with them for awhile. He could not stomach them and left them. [Laughter and applause.]

He came out in the open to support the real people of Pennsylvania. When you are looking for Presidential timber in the next election year, when you are looking at the record of this man from Pennsylvania who has driven out all the rats who had occupied every office in the State for as long as I have lived, and that is a long time, and has made the best Governor Pennsylvania ever had, you will find you could go much farther and fare worse than to take the constituent whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not represent. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY] to the committee amendment.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if it is intended to stay here tonight until the consideration of the bill is completed?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think we might work a little bit longer, to satisfy the gentleman. It is 25 minutes after 5.

Mr. RAYBURN. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I may say I have asked everyone to stay to finish the consideration of this bill tonight. If the Committee rises, it will be over the protest of the gentleman in charge of this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Then, I object to any extension of time.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, the newspapers for the past 2 days have been carrying various statements relative to so-called compromise proposals in connection with the plan to earmark a portion of this bill for worth-while public-works projects.

These press reports refer to a "revolt" in the House and state that the proponents of the earmarking plans have now backed down on the issue. This is not in any way a revolt so far as I am concerned, and there has been no backing down.

It is true that some compromise proposal has been discussed in regard to the public-works plan, and, for the information of the House, I did submit a 10-point program which was presented to the President. Of these 10 requests the President has indicated he is willing to go along on 6 of them.

The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], our floor leader, made a statement to the Membership of the House which I do not believe was very clear in the minds of the Members, and I desire at this time to clarify the concessions that have been obtained, if I can.

The first of these provides for continuation of the authority of the Public Works Administration for 2 years, or until June 30, 1939. The second would permit the use of the uncommitted balance in the revolving fund of P. W. A. which is still available for grants. This amounts to $95,000,000 and is not committed in any way.

The third request would involve rescision by the President of his administrative order 197 so that projects for which bonds have been voted or funds otherwise secured on a 45 to 55 percent basis may be financed as originally recommended. This the President has agreed to do.

The fourth request is one which is of particular interest to me. This would provide funds for the construction of 1,178 schools which are hazardous to the lives of students and have been condemned by local inspection agents. The funds necessary for this program would amount to a little over $91,000,000.

The fifth request would make it possible to provide funds for the construction of non-Federal P. W. A. projects for which appropriations have been made by State legislatures. Thus, all of those projects for which bonds have been voted, or funds otherwise secured by local municipalities, would be taken care of.

The sixth item would provide a sufficient fund for administrative expenses to carry on the Public Works Administration.

I am interested in this public-works program, not from any selfish standpoint, but because I believe implicitly that private business must be stimulated if it is to assist in the unemployment problem.

I have obtained assurances from the President, through our distinguished majority leader, that the group for which I am spokesman in this matter can be assured of having the public-works agency continued and certain funds made available to construct 1,178 schools and all projects on which bonds have been voted or funds otherwise secured by local municipalities. Thus, we will be enabled to keep faith with our local communities. I might add here that I do not have one P. W. A. project pending in my district and my interests are, therefore, purely altruistic.

I am introducing today a bill to provide for the extension of authority of the P. W. A. until June 30, 1939, containing certain provisions outlining the basis on which loans and grants will be made. Since we have assurances of administration support on this it is believed the committee will promptly report it. I hope it will have the support of every Member. I might add, for the information of the House, that the provisions of the bill have been written after conferences with Members making up the so-called P. W. A. bloc, and I believe it is acceptable to all interested.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to ask the question I asked our distinguished floor leader about the slum-clearance projects in Detroit. Two of them have been authorized. The foundations are in. The slums are cleared. About $10,000,000 was originally allotted, or possibly somewhat more. What I am interested in is to know whether those projects are going to be completed, or some assurance given that the job will be completed.

Mr. BEITER. It is my understanding all projects which have been started will be completed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Can the gentleman give the Committee the assurance that where a sponsor has had final approval of a project and work is ready to begin, and the sponsor has placed the money on deposit, regardless of whether a bond issue has been called, the work will start?

Mr. BEITER. It is my understanding wherever there is a moral obligation on the part of the Government the project will be completed. In this case I would say there was a moral obligation, since funds have certainly been secured and set aside for that specific purpose by the municipality. In other words, whether bonds have been issued or whether State legislatures have created authorities with the right to issue revenue bonds and such authorities have been established and applications submitted and approved, or whether other means have been obtained to secure the necessary funds, all municipalities having found and established a method to share the financing of such projects will be eligible under this concession.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. LAMNECK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, although during the last 2 hours we have debated a number of different amendments, everyone realizes the fact, I think, that all of this debate is pointed toward the separate votes which will be taken on the three earmarking amendments which were adopted by the House last week. The general opinion is that the House is going to reverse itself on the action taken last week, and that, it seems to me, is a very, very unfortunate situation for the House to find itself in.

I would like to talk to you particularly on the road earmarking amendment, but first I want to touch upon the other two amendments in passing. The flood-control amendment and the P. W. A. amendment are said to have been sponsored by blocs. Perhaps that is true. The road amendment, on the other hand, is not, and it is therefore in a different category than the other two.

I admit there may possibly be some question as to whether it is wise to take relief money and use it for the purpose of flood control and the construction of P. W. A. projects, because on those two classes of work it is, of course, not possible to employ quite so many people as it is on some other kinds of work.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I will, if I may complete my statement. My time is very limited. I say that as to the flood control and P. W. A. earmarking there is room for honest difference of opinion. In this regard let me remind you that the House considered this matter very, very carefully when the amendments were offered and debated last week.

All of the objections which could possibly be offered to the P. W. A. and the flood-control amendments were advanced, and the House thought these two amendments were meritorious and adopted them by a vote of nearly 2 to 1.

The House understood the situation then, as it understands it now, and I say to you if it was proper last week to earmark a part of this relief money for flood control and for P. W. A. projects, it is proper to continue that earmarking now and, for one, I intend to vote the same way upon the earmarking as I did last week. I intend to vote to earmark funds for flood control, P. W. A. projects, and roads.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I am sorry, but I cannot yield at this point. Let me call your attention to the fact that nothing has been said here on the floor today that would give any Member any reason whatever for changing his vote in this regard. All we have heard is a statement from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who said he went to see the President and had a conversation with him. He said no agreement was made with the President and we have no assurance from anybody that any money at all from the relief appropriation will be spent for flood control or P. W. A. projects, unless we retain the amendments earmarking funds for those purposes, which we adopted last week.

Now, it is evident the House is not going to do that. It is evident now that when a separate vote on these amendments and on the road amendment is demanded by the majority leaders this afternoon the majority Members of the House are going to reverse themselves and repudiate the vote by which they expressed their considered judgment on the subject last week.

Why? Simply because since the vote on these amendments was taken last week the President has said he wanted the vote reversed. To most of the majority Members, who voted overwhelmingly last week to earmark these funds, the order of the President was sufficient. They intend willingly to obey him. They intend upon the roll call to repudiate not only their own votes but to repudiate what they declared upon the floor last week to be their own independent and considered judgment as legislators. They have once more forcefully demonstrated the fact that they are in Congress not to legislate but simply to obey the commands of the Chief Executive.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. SWEENEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there have been pending at the desk for 1 hour six amendments to this section.

Mr. WOODRUM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize first gentlemen with pending amendments.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania: On page 6, line 22, after the period, add the following: "And provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be available to pay the compensation of W. P. A. district officials unless such officials are bona fide residents of the W. P. A. district in which the office is situated."

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is so obvious that it will not take me very long to explain it. I feel that the executive officers or the administrative officers of any W. P. A. district—and I am referring to the district alone—should be bona-fide residents of that district. We have heard a great deal lately about returning relief to local authorities. This is a good step in that direction. There is nobody who knows the relief situation in any given locality as well as the local citizens themselves. The whole W. P. A. procedure has been reduced to a form where it is a routine matter. I do not believe there is any W. P. A. district in the country that cannot produce reliable, efficient, and honest officials who can handle the work in that district. I do not believe it is fair to any district to have outsiders brought in to administer its affairs when local people are available who could do the job just as well. This is the purpose of the amendment and I sincerely hope it will pass. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: On page 6, line 22, after the word "candidate", insert "nor of any person holding an elective or appointive office in any State, district, county, or municipality, whether or not any salary, fee, or emolument attaches to such elective or appointive office."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment merely adds to this section 6 that, in addition to candidates for office, that no holder of an elective or appointive office in any State, district, or municipality shall be the recipient of any portion of these funds intended for relief.

It is my opinion that section 6 was designed by the committee to take politics out of W. P. A. If we want to take politics out of W. P. A. and keep it out, in addition to barring candidates from public office from working on W. P. A. pay rolls, we ought to bar holders of elective offices, many of them holders of small offices in small communities, that pay fees and require political activity to keep, from working as supervisors or as administrative workers. Certainly, the holder of an elective office cannot help but engage in politics and engage in politics among the workers he may supervise if he expects to keep his office, and relief should be as free from politics as we can keep it.

This is all I have to say about my amendment, and I hope the Committee will adopt it, because it simply carries out the intention of section 6 more completely.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MASSINGALE: Page 7, after line 4, add a new paragraph as follows:

"(c) No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available for use in the Army and Navy Departments of the Government of the United States."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. It is not germane to this portion of the bill or to the bill itself.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a little bit.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will prevent any transfer of the funds provided for in this act so that no part of this appropriation may be used by war agencies of the Government. The amendment was suggested when hearings were being had on the Army and Navy appropriation bills. At these hearings it was disclosed that during the years 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936 there was taken from the relief appropriations exactly $942,761,048.10 for use for Army and Navy purposes. True, there was nothing secretive in taking this huge sum of money intended for relief of the distressed and applying it to uses of the Army and Navy, but in the minds of the public, this amount of money stands charged against relief to the destitute of the land, and to that extent has often been used as an argument that relief is too expensive and that because of the high cost of relief, the Government is unable to stand the burden of it. This charge of extravagant, lavish, and foolish spending on our poor, so often heard on the floor of the House, should have a credit of near one billion dollars, and the military branches of the Government should be debited with this billion during the same period. The mercy side of Uncle Sam's ledger is a billion dollars short of what it is due according to the judgment of the Congress making the appropriations for relief work. I mention this because the public ought to be kept informed on what is happening. This is important enough to at least help keep the records straight.

The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee of the Navy appropriations bill for the coming year, Mr. UMSTEAD of North Carolina, very frankly stated in answer to a question by me, that in his opinion the Navy did not contemplate the use of any relief money for the year 1938 for purposes provided for in the naval appropriation bill. I am sure this is correct, and I hope that the Army is disposed to take a like view of the matter, for I am certain that the American people will approve such an attitude on the part of the Army and Navy. My amendment forbids the use of any of this appropriation for either the Army or the Navy. The diversion of this near one billion dollars for relief purposes might have been disastrous and in all likelihood must have meant real deprivation and suffering in those areas known as the Great Plains drought States—10 States in the area.

The billion dollars taken away from relief in the 4 years would have provided 1,000,000 distressed families with $1,000 each for 1 year; it would have provided 2,000,000 distressed families with $500 each for 1 year; it would have provided 4,000,000 distressed families with $250 to each family for 1 year. I can see that if we had had the use of Oklahoma's part of this billion dollars to use for relief purposes, much suffering in that area would have been avoided, and many persons who went hungry and cold need not have done so. No one will ever know how many human beings in America suffered because this money did not reach its intended use. But it is definitely known that during these 4 years, some people have died of starvation or malnutrition and many have suffered for food, fuel, and clothing.

I cannot picture the situation, as it appears in the Midwest, better than by quoting a paragraph from a letter received from a young lady of my district on the social aspect of relief. It is as follows:

> Perhaps my one criticism is that the sight of miserable people hurts me. Like D. H. Lawrence, "I am wounded in my fundamental societal impulses." I can never get used to tent towns and ragged children. I can never stand the sight of the hollow, empty faces of some of the men. It is the fact of their resignation that incenses me. If they would show some resentment, I would feel some hopes for them. But no! They accept a pittance without a murmur. It is like the old Roman populace taking bread tossed in the streets by the nobles. There isn't a shred of manhood left in many of them. And that hurts—and it hurts deeply—as it should hurt those of us who claim to have any humanitarian feelings for the masses of unwanted and unloved people.

The impressions of this young lady have been burned into her soul by things that she knows and sees and that are all about her.

To my mind, the most tragic era in America has been the trail of the depression. The old and the weak have been hurried on. Babies have died for lack of proper nourishment, and children have been stunted in the development of body and mind, though our Government has been generous to an extent heretofore unknown to modern governments.

No need here to discuss the cause or contributing causes that brought about the miserable condition of so many people. The truth is that some 8 or 12 million of our people must have more or less assistance in order that they may be assured of some little income from work that will enable them to subsist until their economic situation is improved. The need for this appropriation varies according to the degree of recovery in the various areas. Members from some districts have said there is no need for Government assistance to their unemployed, and we have heard statements that in some of the States every man willing to work can find a job. I take such statements at their face value. But I fail to see in them any real argument that relief appropriations are unnecessary. I grant that relief money may not be necessary in some communities, but I have failed to hear any Member make the request that his State or district should be excluded from participation in the relief fund. The mere fact that such large numbers of unemployed are found makes it self-evident that assistance is needed or that the morale in America has broken completely down.

It must be remembered that our needy people are not chronic ne'er-do-wells. Many of them up to 5 or 6 years ago never knew want. They are largely the victims of bad economic conditions for which we as a Nation are responsible. If Congress will batter down economic barriers to the point where every man can find a job at a living wage, we will then be finished with unemployment. The unemployed, in asking this opportunity of their Government, are not unreasonable, for it surely is little enough to justify the existence of the Government to have it said about the Government that it is so operated that any man in it may find work, if he wants to work. Millions of men are endeavoring day after day to find work and cannot find it because it does not exist.

The difference in opinion as to the specific purposes for which this money should be used, "earmarking it", should not interfere with the passage of the bill. In some communities where men can get work and the various divisions of the Government are able financially to make such contributions as are required for public improvements, then "earmarking" for P. W. A. might be feasible. In the Midwest where municipalities are unable to match grants by the Federal Government and men cannot get work, if you earmark any of this money, it would be the equivalent of taking bread and meat from hungry mouths and giving the money to cement factories and steel mills to supply materials for public improvements in large cities that are able to meet the requirement for grants.

I believe that I am safe in stating that the situation in Oklahoma is such that earmarking of these funds might result in depriving some hungry people of food, and I am not giving my vote to earmarking. It is true that there are many P. W. A. projects in my State that need to be finished, and if the one-hundred-and-fifty-odd million dollars now on hand will not complete these projects, and if it requires $300,000,000 more to complete them, then I would gladly support such an additional appropriation. But I cannot give my consent that this $300,000,000 should be diverted from the appropriation for relief of our most distressed population and made available almost wholly for the benefit of contractors and material men. The ordinary day laborer who is in the greatest distress would get very little of the $300,000,000 asked to be taken from this appropriation for P. W. A. purposes, for most of it would go to skilled labor, cement mills, and the steel industry.

No person knows how many unemployed there are in America, for it seems that no census has been taken of them; but the estimate of the number as gathered from the Department of Labor and Mr. Hopkins' official knowledge of them is that there must be somewhere between eight and twelve million of them. I am sure that the President and Mr. Hopkins want to make sure that no family in all of this large group shall suffer for the necessities of life, and when they have recommended a minimum of $1,500,000,000 to accomplish this purpose, I have no difficulty whatever in going along with them 100 percent.

The significant fact is that until this administration came upon the scene, the distressed of America received nothing outside of donations from private charitable organizations. So great was the distress that such agencies could not cope with it, and it seemed to require men of the type of the President and Mr. Hopkins to intelligently undertake the great task of so organizing the relief agencies of the country as to make it reasonably certain that people were not going to suffer to any extent for the things necessary to sustain human life.

I know of no man who ought to be a better judge of the needs of the great throng of needy people than Harry Hopkins. I have had a number of talks with him, and he impressed me with his understanding of this great social problem and with his sincerity of purpose in wanting to assist the unemployed. I am sure that by going among these people and receiving letters similar to the one from which I quoted, he made his recommendation; and I believe he made his recommendation for $1,500,000,000 because his conscience would not permit his recommending an appropriation for a less amount of money than the minimum, in his judgment, necessary to prevent hunger and hardships.

I believe Mr. Hopkins is right in his prophecy that America had as well face the fact of a permanent policy of relief. This does not at all imply that the unemployed are not willing to work, but it does show that the soul of Hopkins has been touched by personal contacts with these millions of people, and that he has the courage to speak out in open meeting in their behalf. It is not a pleasing thought to the country to be advised of such an obligation, but Hopkins is the more to be admired for having served notice on us respecting the actual condition among the more unfortunate people of our land. His statement emphasizes the fact that recovery has come in a large part to those that have and only in a small way to those in need.

Instead of being condemned, I think Harry Hopkins deserves a high tribute at the hands of the American people, and I believe that the common, hard-working, unfortunate day laborer feels that in Hopkins he has perhaps the most sympathetic friend in America aside from the President himself. It seems to me that instead of wanting to punish Mr. Hopkins because perhaps some of this money may have been spent not according to our individual wishes is not meeting the requirements of the Congress. If too much money were appropriated to take care of these distressed, it would be an easy matter to turn it back into the Treasury, but the great danger comes in not appropriating enough, or if when it is appropriated, it be diverted to some other less humane cause.

To the end that this relief money shall not be used for any other purpose and that it shall be conserved for the purpose of carrying the necessities of life to our more unfortunate people, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is merely a limitation on the use of funds appropriated under the act. In this particular section there are already two limitations, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. WOODRUM, there were—ayes, 75; noes, 80.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed Mr. MASSINGALE and Mr. WOODRUM to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided and the tellers reported—ayes, 88; noes, 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Page 6, line 18, after the word "any" insert the word "Federal" and a comma following it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I do not believe that any person running for a Federal office should, in any way, directly or indirectly, participate in the benefit of any of these funds under this bill. We should amend the bill so the man who votes for it cannot participate in the funds appropriated.

The verbal pyrotechnics whose glare a few days ago threatened like a fluoroscope to show the country that after all the Congress has a spine and a determination to say where and how the money of the taxpayers should be spent and by what method the part of that one-third ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed now on or in need of relief should be cared for, has now faded—cooled and almost is extinguished by the means of a recess. Today the rubber stamp has been dusted off and Congress will be asked to put its mark of approval on another billion-and-a-half-dollar spending program severing its own strings of control.

Whether it is a "pig in the poke" or the "pork in the barrel" we seem to be going into this new relief program without anything very concrete upon which to work. In the Life and Letters of Charles Darwin is the quotation:

As for a future life, every man must judge for himself between conflicting vague probabilities.

That is about the circumstance here today. This body is asked to choose between the vague probabilities of what is going to be needed in the way of relief.

The administration has turned its back upon the only effective way of ascertaining how much money will be necessary to assist the ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed for another year. I refer to an unemployment census. While we are putting government in business, we should also put some business in government and take an inventory once in a while.

But, instead of a current inventory, the Works Progress Administrator, who is proving himself to be publisher extraordinary and plenipotentiary, sends Members of Congress a finely bound and gold-leaf labeled book, bulging with unemployment figures obtained in May 1934. Aside from its value in the archives of the United States and for study in combating future eras of unemployment, what good will come at this time from the distribution of this out-of-date publication, which, I understand, was not even printed in the Government Printing Office.

We recently had a fine example of this "pig in the poke" method of legislation being forced upon Congress without a somewhat definite survey when we were considering the C. C. C. extension. At that time we were asked to provide for 350,000 boys in the C. C. C. camps of the country while at the very moment C. C. C. enrollments were falling short of that mark by the thousands, apparently because of the young men returning to private industry. In my own State, as well as in other States, camps are being closed because of a lack of sufficient men to man them economically. I am advised that the April 1 enrollment fell 30,000 men short of the authorized quota. Some sixty-odd camps are now being closed, 14 of these being in Michigan.

I am certainly pleased to note that in at least one branch of this emergency program there is one official who agrees with me that it is a happy day in the life of this Nation to see these men returning to private industry. A few days ago a Government official, in answering my inquiry relative to the C. C. C., said:

While from one standpoint we all regret the closing of any of the camps, there is very distinct encouragement in the indication that economic conditions have apparently so improved that more of the young men are receiving employment in private industry and are not therefore applicants for enrollment in the C. C. C.

We are here asked to appropriate a sum of money similar in amount to that we were asked to grant last year. Has there been no improvement in the economic conditions of this Nation since we last debated relief appropriations? Has the C. C. C. program been a failure to such an extent that 30,000 boys went on a sit-down strike against returning to its fold April 1? Such a supposition is naturally an absurdity. There is a shortage in enrollees because private industry is absorbing these young men. Despite the fact that we are asked to appropriate approximately the same amount as last year in another of the elaborate publications of the Works Progress Administrator—his voluminous report of October 1936 showed that at its peak in February 1936 the works program provided jobs for 3,800,000 people (including C. C. C.) and that by the end of August this roll had been diminished by 400,000 people. Mr. Hopkins' own report of the date I have mentioned says that this reduction was "due to the curtailment of the program in response to improved conditions in private industry and seasonal employment in agriculture." Must a billion and a half dollars again be authorized in spite of diminishing rolls?

If 400,000 people left the works-relief rolls from February to September, last year, when we had not heard a lot about increased industrial activity, then how many have left the rolls since that time, now that industry has picked up?

In an address at Indianapolis, last Thursday evening, Mr. Hopkins said:

To get a clear picture of what we are up against we have to break down the unemployment problem into its various component parts. We cannot think intelligently on unemployment at large. We have to think in terms of types of unemployment and of groups of unemployed.

WHY DELAY A CENSUS?

If we are to believe this statement—and I do agree with the Administrator on that point—then why do we shy at an unemployment census? Let us break down the unemployment situation today. Let us think in terms of types and groups of unemployed in the summer of 1937 and not in a gilded book of statistics just released giving a May 1934 survey.

On January 23, 1935, I said on this floor that no one man living is powerful enough, without staggering waste and inefficiency, to go out and plan and put into operation the works necessary for the consumption of four and a half billion dollars. Some people may hail among its accomplishments a so-called mandate of the people last November, but the pages of the RECORDS of Congress since my prediction was made, bear out the significance of my thoughts at that time.

Today I hold the same feeling toward this grant of one and a half billion dollars in which Congress is again requested to toss the purse strings to that amount to the four winds and let the money be spent irrespective of what portion of those on the works rolls return to pay rolls of private business.

Congress will be in session again in 7 months. The summer is ahead of us, and the works rolls will have their seasonal reduction. Why not adopt a short-time program providing adequate aid for those who will not be absorbed by the pick-up in factories and on farms, and in the meantime take an unemployment census?

Administrator Hopkins told the Conference of Mayors here last winter that—

> One major obstacle in the path of meeting the problem of unemployment has been the absence of really adequate unemployment figures.

He further said:

> I am convinced we ought to find out by taking an unemployment census. A census will give us a pretty exact picture of our present unemployment problem—a much better picture than we have now.

NEED GUIDE TO POLICY

I previously stated we are dealing with vague probabilities. Mr. Hopkins stated in that November address that data of an unemployment census—

> Would be a guide to policy. It would eliminate much of the popular confusion arising out of the widely divergent estimates—both good and bad—we find at the present time.

Those words were uttered over 6 months ago, yet confusion as to the situation continues to be popular and we still have no guide to policy.

We have heard considerable in recent months about "horse and buggy" days and the three-horse team. It appears that two of the horses are shying at a piece of paper containing facts on unemployment based on an up-to-date unemployment census.

President Roosevelt's own Council for Industrial Progress has taken cognizance of the fact that unemployment statistics are conspicuous by their absence. Meeting in Washington in December of last year the council adopted a report on this subject in which it said:

> There is no question of the great need for accurate information in this field. Indeed, it seems incredible that the Nation has been collecting facts and figures in almost every field of interest excepting only this one. * * * What we do not know is how many people there are, to what extent they are employed or unemployed, what they do, or how they make their living. How they make their living is the most important problem in the world to them and to the Congress which must legislate in their behalf.

But the President and Congress apparently differ with the opinion of this council, and we go on and on with these programs without the benefit of the facts such a census would afford.

It begins to appear to me that this administration fears the outcome of an unemployment census. Such a census might even cause the President to revise and reduce his oft-repeated phrase of the one-third and the three ills. Such a census might also cause the next session of Congress to curtail some of these make-ready spending programs in the face of diminishing unemployment. As private enterprise expands there will be less need for these "made" projects. If the people want them at that time they will pay for them through their own local funds and not by siphoning them from their own pocketbook through the hidden-tax pipe line that now runs into the Federal Treasury. Eventually every one of our citizens will realize this is what has been happening.

The current pick-up in private industry is proving a bogeyman to the administration at this time. With an unemployment census revealing such a hobgoblin of men returning to work throughout the land, it would take longer than a 4-day recess to persuade Congress to rubber-stamp these billion-dollar programs.

DEPARTMENTS VOCIFERATE

The President says that the majority of the Nation has little patience with "those who vociferate today that prosperity has returned, that wages are good, that crop prices are high, and that Government should take a holiday."

While the President speaks in this manner about those whose hearts beat faster with the thought of diminishing relief rolls and increasing factory pay rolls, his own unprecedented beehives of press agentry engage in some boisterous vociferating of their own in a pell-mell rush to get the word to the Nation that "conditions are improving."

The President talks about the little patience with those vociferating about higher crop prices and on the next day his Department of Agriculture headlines press release no. 1601 with Farmers' Income at New Recovery Peak, and states "The highest April farm income in 7 years was reported today by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics."

The Department of Labor publicizes the fact that not only weekly earnings of workers in its five selected durable-goods industries are greater than last year but the report for March shows a gain in weekly earnings of workers over February of this year.

It appears while we strum the fiddle to the tune of another one and one-half billion dollars others are giving credit to private enterprise for improved conditions. Eventually the people back home will pay for our fiddling. In its latest report the United States Employment Service says:

> A striking upward movement in private-placement activity during the month of February is reported. Despite the short month 158,013 placements were made. This volume represents a gain of 138.5 percent above the number reported in February 1936.

IS EARMARKING A DISGRACE?

This administration has thrown the earmarking of the taxpayers' money into the category of disgrace. Much concern has been felt recently over delegation of power in Federal Government, but Congress has not lost any sleep over delegation of the tax box of the citizens whenever a request labeled "must" comes up here from the White House.

Records show that at one time over 35 percent of all of those employed by the Works Progress Administration were assigned to projects on highways and roads. The popularity of this type of project has stood head and shoulders above works in the program of other types. The report of the Administrator shows other types of projects consumed groups totaling respectively downward from 10 percent.

In our State of Michigan we have a highway system of which we are justly proud. It has taken years to build up such a system. If we are determined to appropriate one and a half billion dollars under this program, Congress is certainly entitled to say how at least a part of this money should be spent, and we are all interested in improved highways, whether they be cross-country arteries or farm-to-market roads.

Of this type of work Mr. Hopkins in his own report says:

> The most important among the activities carried out under the W. P. A. program is the work being done to improve the country's thoroughfares.

He recognizes this as one of the choice plans of giving work to the greatest number of men. At one time over a million men were employed on highway and road projects, which account for well over a third of the W. P. A. program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIROVICH: On page 7, line 4, after the word "source", insert a new paragraph, to be known as section 7, as follows:

"No supervisor or engineer appointed under this act in any county shall be appointed without the consent of the sitting Member of Congress."

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, about an hour ago when I proposed this amendment, it was declared not germane to the section then under discussion. Since it is germane to the present section, I desire to call the attention of the membership of this House to the fact that this amendment which I have just offered provides that no supervisor or engineer under the jurisdiction of this bill shall be appointed in any county without the consent of the sitting Member of Congress. Every Senator has the right to pass upon the qualifications, character, and virtues of the people in his State. Why should not every sitting Member of Congress, Republican, Progressive, Farmer-Labor, Democrat, at least pass upon the character qualifications and experience of the men who are going to enforce this law, so as to have a humane, just, and fair interpretation? We are not recommending the names but are just approving of the men who will be authorized to enforce the rules and regulations provided in this humane relief bill that will help millions of men and women who are the tragic victims of our economic depression and are floating around as economic derelicts and driftwood on the ocean of unemployment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment.

I think it would be very unfortunate for the House of Representatives to go on record here, unblushingly, to make this a political measure instead of a relief measure.

Mr. SIROVICH. The other way, it is a political measure. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to hesitate before we make the appointment of positions under this subject to the approval or disapproval of any Member of Congress, I do not care who he is.

I hope very much that the Committee will not adopt this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 94 and noes 114.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SIROVICH and Mr. WOODRUM to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 68 and noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: Page 7, between lines 4 and 5, insert a new section, to be known as section 6 (a), to read as follows:

"Hereafter all appointments of persons to the Federal service for employment within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, whether such appointments be within the classified civil service or otherwise, shall be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census. In making separations from the Federal service or furloughs without pay to last as long as 3 months of persons employed within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, the appointing power shall give preference in retention to appointees from States that have not received their share of appointments according to population: Provided, however, That soldiers, sailors, and marines, the widows of such or the wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines who themselves are not qualified but whose wives are qualified to hold a position in the Government service, shall be given preference in retention in their several grades and classes where their ratings are good or better."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment is not germane under the section where it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The pending amendment is offered as a new section to the bill. It pertains to the appointment of persons to carry out the purposes of the bill.

The Chair holds the amendment germane to the bill and overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, I believe, is in every manner fair. I believe its provisions should be a part of every piece of legislation that passes this House which provides for any appointment in the city of Washington, D. C. I do not see where there can be any valid objection against the amendment or to its being included in any piece of legislation. I intend to introduce it to every piece of legislation to which it may be germane.

I hope the Committee will adopt it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WOODRUM. Has time been fixed on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Time has been fixed on this section. Four minutes remain, and the Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to offer an amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall not take any time on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 133, noes 67.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee: Page 7, after line 4, add a new subsection to be known as subsection (c) to read as follows:

"No part of the foregoing appropriation shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any person who is related to the State administrator, district manager, or county supervisor, or the appointing power within the third degree by blood or marriage."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the 3 minutes. This amendment explains itself.

Mr. Chairman, at best it is never easy to administer relief or charity. A great deal of criticism has arisen because in certain local jurisdictions those in authority, the county supervisors, and frequently the State administrators and district managers have appointed their next of kin to responsible positions. I hope the Committee will agree to this amendment. I do not believe there is any Member who would not agree that this amendment would improve the bill. Certainly those in authority should not be permitted to appoint their next of kin if they are inclined to do it, but they should be prevented absolutely from doing so by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I have frequently heard the gentleman from Tennessee arraign nepotism, so-called. I ask him now whether the same statements he has made in fighting nepotism apply to the action of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in employing his own son as his secretary and paying him from Government funds?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Answering the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. Chairman, I may say that I certainly find no fault with the President for appointing his son to the position he holds. I make this statement for the reason that even if there were a general statute to prevent the practice of nepotism, there is none of us but who would gladly permit the President under the circumstances that obtain to appoint his son. I know the gentleman well enough to know that he himself would not object to it. At least I know he should not.

This bill, and particularly the administration of relief, puts a serious responsibility on those chargeable with its administration. If on this important work they appoint their next of kin, immediately there is just and proper criticism in the county, in the district, and in the State. I hope that this amendment will be agreed to and will be adopted by the House.

Mr. SHANNON. What is more, this is a sacred trust.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: On page 7, after line 4, insert a new subsection, as follows:

"Subsection (c). No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any architect, engineer, superintendent, or foreman who has been actively engaged in the promotion of any project constructed in whole or in part with funds appropriated by this joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (48 Stat. 351), relating to disability or death compensation and benefits shall apply to persons (except administrative employees qualifying as civil employees of the United States) receiving compensation from the foregoing appropriation for services rendered as employees of the United States and to persons receiving assistance in the form of payments from the United States for services rendered under the National Youth Administration created by Executive order of June 26, 1935: Provided, That hereafter the monthly compensation in any individual case heretofore or hereafter coming within the purview of said act of February 15, 1934, shall not exceed the rate of $30, exclusive of medical costs: Provided further, That so much of the foregoing appropriation as the United States Employees' Compensation Commisison, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, estimates and certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury will be necessary for the payment of such compensation and administrative expenses shall be set aside in a special fund to be administered by the Commission for such purposes; and after June 30, 1938, such special fund shall be available for such purposes annually in such amounts as may be specified therefor in the annual appropriation acts: Provided further, That this section shall not apply in any case coming within the purview of the workmen's compensation law of any State or Territory, or in which the claimant has received or is entitled to receive similar benefits for injury or death.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I feel it is my duty to make a statement with reference to the flood-control amendment which was adopted by the House during the past week. I have the positive assurance from high and unimpeachable sources that all relief labor available in the flood-control districts will be used on flood-control projects. On this day I have been furnished a letter which, with the permission of the House, I shall insert in the RECORD at the proper time as a portion of my remarks. This letter will give definite and concrete information as to the number of people on relief rolls who are available in these districts. Time forbids me giving the information now. Suffice it to say that the number available will cause the monetary provision to exceed the amount which my amendment called for by approximately $5,000,000. Later I shall offer an amendment which will enable a great amount of flood-control work to be carried on in connection with so-called unauthorized projects to take care of the situation at Louisville, Cincinnati, and points on the Ohio River. I am told by the chairman handling this bill and the majority leader there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. DUNN. At Pittsburgh, too?

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I think the debate on this measure has opened the eyes of the country to the need of a careful and deliberate study by the Congress of the United States on the subject of relief. [Applause.] I am perfectly willing to admit that the Members of this House do not have sufficient knowledge in their possession which would enable them to intelligently earmark definitely all the funds provided herein. If they had this knowledge, I would be willing to stand and fight until the last ditch to earmark every dollar of it, but I am sensible of the fact the President and Mr. Hopkins have knowledge about relief that we do not have. I say that the principle we have raised here that Congress should resume control over the expenditures of this Nation is of paramount importance and we must carry on until that fight is won. [Applause.]

Much power has been delegated to the administrative branches in the past few years under the guise of an emergency, and I offer no criticism, because I voted for it myself. I think it is wise and advisable in war or in peace when a great emergency confronts our country to delegate power to executive and administrative officers which it would be unwise to delegate when an emergency does not exist. But when the emergency is past, if our democracy is to survive, the Congress must resume and exercise the power assigned to it by the people under our system of government.

Mr. Chairman, in my humble judgment, before another dollar is appropriated for relief in this country, a congressional committee should be appointed to make a study of the relief question. We want to know ourselves how many unemployed there are in this Nation. We want to know, and it is our duty to ascertain, how many men and women of this country are in need of relief before we appropriate another dollar of the taxpayers' money, either by blank-check provision or otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Congress will take such action before we are requested to vote another dollar for relief, and that before we vote for additional funds for relief the Congress will definitely and positively earmark every dollar that is to be expended and for which we have to tax the people of this Nation. [Applause.]

Those of us who have fought for earmarking or giving definite directions to the expenditure of a certain amount of the funds provided under the work-relief bill have done so without any feeling of unfriendliness or rancor toward the President or the leadership of the House. We felt that protection and relief should be given to people and their property in areas which are subjected to floods. This protection and relief has been positively assured us by the President. Mr. Hopkins has this date furnished me with a letter giving in detail the number of men on relief rolls who are available for work on authorized flood-control projects under the Overton Act and under the Copeland Act. The letter is inserted herewith:

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1937.

The Honorable JOE STARNES,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STARNES: The following is in response to your inquiry regarding the possibility during the fiscal year 1938 of furnishing relief labor for work on flood-control projects which have been authorized by the Congress for the lower Mississippi Valley (Overton Act) and in the omnibus flood control bill (Copeland Act). The projects mentioned in this letter are those which are listed for prosecution in the first and second years of the program outlined in the statement which has been furnished to you by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, entitled "Tentative Priority of Construction by Stream Basins on Assurances Received or Reasonably Anticipated From Data on Hand That Local Cooperation Will Be Forthcoming Promptly."

The approximate amounts of relief labor which it is believed could be supplied on projects in the lower Mississippi Valley are as follows:

St. Francis River Basin	6,667
West Atchafalaya Floodway	5,000
Eudora and Morganza Floodways	8,333
Levees:
Memphis	3,333
Vicksburg	3,000
Yazoo River	3,000
New Orleans	5,833
Total	35,166

The approximate amounts of relief labor which it is believed could be supplied on projects authorized by the omnibus Flood Control Act are as follows:

Merrimack Basin	1,050
Connecticut Basin	1,315
Southern New York	1,670
Susquehanna River	555
Potomac River	528
Tar River	68
Rome, Ga.	275
Buffalo River	29
Red River	1,170
Ouachita River	512
Arkansas River Reservoir	2,090
Arkansas River levees	2,500
White River Basin	1,250
Upper Missouri and Illinois	1,875
Reservoirs—Pittsburgh	2,775
Wabash River	505
Cumberland—Middlesboro, Ky.	290
Kansas River (Topeka)	528
Los Angeles and San Gabriel	6,315
Santa Ana, Calif.	1,580
Columbia River	2,000
Willamette River	670
Puyallup, Wash.	1,000
Umatilla, Wash. Lewis, Wash. Stillaquimah, Oreg. Cowlitz, Wash.	390
Total	30,940

You will note that no projects for construction of flood walls in the Ohio River Valley are included in the above tabulations. This is for the reason that no such projects have yet been authorized by the Congress. Should such authorizations be made during the present session of the Congress, very considerable amounts of relief labor could be furnished for such work.

You will, of course, realize that it is not possible at this juncture to give accurately and in complete detail definite amounts of relief labor that can be supplied on specific projects. Therefore, the above program would be subject to such adjustments as might be necessary in view of local conditions, particularly in view of complications which may arise in obtaining rights-of-way. Furthermore, the use of this relief labor on flood-control projects would be dependent upon the provision of regularly appropriated funds for the Corps of Engineers, in order that that agency would be in a position to provide the necessary materials and equipment and to absorb the expenses of supervision on this work.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY L. HOPKINS,
Administrator.

It will be noted from this letter of Mr. Hopkins that approximately 35,166 men can be supplied for work on projects in the lower Mississippi Valley. The monetary expenditures involved will approximate $26,374,500.

Approximately 30,940 men will be available from relief rolls to work on projects under the terms of the Copeland Act. Approximately $23,205,000 will be spent on these projects. The total amount of money which will be expended on all authorized projects using relief labor will amount to approximately $49,579,500, or almost $5,000,000 more than the amount provided for under my amendment to the bill. With my amendment, which the House adopted today, which would authorize work on flood-control projects in the Ohio Valley adjacent to Louisville, Cincinnati, and other points on the lower Ohio many thousand more relief workers will be available for duty.

We can safely estimate that if my amendment offered today and adopted by the House is retained by the Senate on the final passage of the bill at least sixty to seventy million dollars of the funds provided herein can be used for flood-control purposes alone.

In connection with the remarks made by my distinguished colleague, Mr. JONES, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I, too, have been given definite assurance that several times the amount provided for in his amendment to my amendment for water conservation in the drought area and in the great Dust Bowl will be made available.

According to our majority leader, who speaks with full authority, the President has definitely stated that he recognized a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government to release grants and loans to thousands of counties and communities throughout the country on approved P. W. A. projects where elections have been held authorizing the issuance of bonds, or where bonds have been issued and sold or where money is on deposit to comply with the terms submitted by P. W. A., and on school buildings where there exists a fire hazard or a menace to public health. He has definitely stated he would approve an extension of P. W. A. for a sufficient period of time to enable these projects to be completed. He has also definitely agreed to rescind Executive Order No. 197 so that these projects may be completed on the basis of a 45-percent grant and under a contract basis as originally approved. I feel that the House has won a clean-cut victory in this fight. It will now be possible to build 1,178 schoolhouses; construct numerous sanitary sewer systems and waterworks projects to promote the public health; and, finally, to construct many other worth-while public-work projects of a lasting social and economic benefit to every section of this country of ours.

I think the House should be congratulated on the fight it has made to reassert its prerogatives, and that the President's gracious offer to compromise and settle this issue on the above and foregoing terms should be accepted by the House in good faith. Such action will preserve unity and harmony and promote the best interests of the country. It will enable us to carry on a fine, constructive public-works program and will discharge in full the moral obligation our Government owes to these communities, which but for this fight would not have been discharged. We have kept the faith with our people. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was full of "pork" when it came out of the White House. It was full of "pork" when it came out of the committee and it is full of "pork" now. All the "pork" that was put in it on the floor you have been given assurances from the White House will be delivered. There has not been the slightest attempt on the part of the White House to solve the relief problem. This is not a relief bill, and every one of you know it is not a relief bill.

Are we ever going to get to the point where the Congress will have the courage to refuse to put up money to be allocated by someone who has not the constitutional authority to do it? Are we ever going to get to the point where we will try to meet the relief problem as a problem, and meet it honestly and try to solve it? Are we ever going to get to the point where we will cease to temporize with this problem and not attempt to fasten a crowd of professional reliefers on the throats of the taxpayers like leeches, and deprive the workingman of a chance to make himself self-supporting? Are we ever going to get to the point where we will cease this ridiculous kind of employment, which is destroying the morale of our people?

Let us have courage enough, manhood enough, and patriotism enough to try to solve this problem. There has been but one suggestion made toward solving it, and that is the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], who attempted to allocate this proposition to the States to take care of relief and not use it for the continuation of the promotion of political purposes and rackets. I hope when the amendment is offered you will vote for it when the roll call comes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would the gentleman want us to go back to the rugged individualism of Hoover?

Mr. TABER. I would let you go back to honesty.

Mr. HOUSTON. And let them starve. That would satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. TABER. No; I would not let them starve. They did not starve, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. HOUSTON. They came pretty close to it.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman does not want to solve it. He wants to have continuous relief.

Mr. HOUSTON. If we had waited for the gentleman's administration to act, we would have starved.

Mr. TABER. You do not want to give the workingman and the honest fellow a chance to get away from the relief problem.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman wants to let them starve.

Mr. TABER. No. You would destroy him by destroying the country's financial position so that the poor man would starve. That is the gentleman's position.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Virginia to conclude the consideration of this bill tonight?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is the intention of the gentleman from Virginia to conclude the consideration of the bill if the Members are willing to stay here and do so, and I certainly hope they will. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. How long does the gentleman think its consideration will take?

Mr. WOODRUM. It depends on whether the committee votes with me to close debate or not.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is reasonable to expect we will have three roll calls, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. I should imagine there would be three or four roll calls.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. Then there is an amendment which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is going to offer, which will probably take an hour.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not know what the gentleman is going to offer or how long it may take.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago when we had this measure up for consideration, and at a time and at a stage in the proceedings when we had adopted amendments earmarking some of these funds, the leadership of this House, realizing the fact that these amendments were going to be adopted over the protest of the chief of the department that is going to administer these funds, asked for time in which we might go through a cooling-off process. I say to the membership of this House that since adjournment on that day, instead of going through a cooling-off process, those gentlemen have been trying to "turn on the heat" in order to force the membership of this House to retreat. They may force somebody to retreat. They may force my good friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], and others, to wait until the next time to start, but as for me, there will be no retreat. I am ready to settle the issue now. [Applause.]

What I did and said last week when this measure was up, I repeat today. I choose not to retract or apologize for voting the way I did. I shall vote the same way today.

From what are you retreating? There is a fundamental issue here that strikes right at the core of this Government. That is, Mr. Chairman, whether legislation is going to be adopted down here in some department and served up to us, or whether we are going to do the legislating and serve it up to them. As far as I am concerned, we are going to do it here. [Applause.] It was so intended. It is not only our prerogative but is our solemn duty to do some thinking for ourselves and vote our own sentiments. In cases of extreme emergency it may be all right to delegate these powers, but when and how are you going to get them back? The time to get them back is now. You have adopted these amendments and you have not a thing in the world to justify or warrant you in taking them out, except somebody talking about what he intends to do. You have been trying to find out all afternoon whether you had a promise. Have you got one? You do not have a promise now, and you are acting on the flimsiest protext to take out these amendments, unless you want to make a surrender.

Yes, I am loyal. I am loyal to the President, I am loyal to my party, and I propose to be loyal to the leadership of this House. However, loyalty, according to my interpretation, does not mean surrender, it does not mean abdication, and I do not propose to abdicate or surrender. I am willing to go back to my people and say, "I stood up there on the floor of the House and undertook to have something to say as to where and for what some of your money would be spent, instead of turning it over to somebody else to do with as they might choose without any restraint or directions." It is wrong to do it in this fashion.

Some of you want to control floods. One of the streams on which you want to control the floods runs through my district. Last summer an old Negro was out there fishing, sitting on a log hanging over the stream. He was about half asleep, batting at the mosquitos and gnats. A big catfish got on the end of the line, gave a big splash, and jerked the Negro off the log into the river. He swam back to the bank and crawled out, turned and looked around, scratched his head, and said, "I don't know whether this "nigger" was afishing, or that catfish was "aniggering." [Laughter.]

We have reached a stage here where we do not know now whether we are legislating or being legislated. Let us settle this issue. Let us start legislating. They say, "You can earmark it 2 years from now." You can earmark it today, and you should earmark this $150,000,000 for roads.

I want to take up one statement made here by a gentleman who attended the meeting of the Committee on Roads this morning for the first time in 2 years, I understand. He came down there for a purpose—in order to make it a tie vote, I guess. That is his prerogative and his duty. I am glad to see him there once.

When we voted over there the other day before this cooling-off process began and before the "heat was turned on", so we could exercise our own independent judgment, out of 14 members present there was not a dissenting vote. And the statement that this roads amendment is indefensible is an indefensible statement. This Congress earmarked funds for roads in the National Recovery Act of 1933. We earmarked funds for roads in the $4,800,000,000 relief bill in 1935. It was good legislation then. Now someone wants to call it "indefensible." The emergency was far more severe then than now. Secretary Wallace says it is the best way next to C. C. C. camps to put men to work who are on relief. Why the objection? Just simply that bureaucracy wants not only to administer the law and spend the money but it wants to dictate the terms and provisions of legislation we shall enact.

I have no quarrel with Mr. Hopkins. Possibly he has made mistakes. Anyone in his position would have made some. My disagreement with him and the President is on the issue of the right of Congress to have a voice in determining the class of projects some of the relief money shall be spent on.

Mr. Chairman and Members, we can stand by our position, retain these earmarking amendments, and still leave $1,000,000,000 which the President may expend as he chooses. Is not that enough? We are giving him two-thirds and we are allocating only one-third. Who can criticize that? What are we allocating it for? Roads, flood control, school buildings, and other public buildings that local people have voted bond issues to construct.

The President, Harry Hopkins, or no one else can find more worthy projects for relief labor to work on.

Mr. Chairman, I shall retain my official integrity and vote my own sentiments and convictions on this issue, free from coercion or pressure and in the interests of my constituents and the Government I represent. I hope a majority of my colleagues will join me in this effort to have Congress accept and perform its duty. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there was a time, about 4 or 5 years ago, when the morale of the American people was being destroyed because of the inability of people to find jobs in private industry. It was not destroyed because of the setting up of the W. P. A. It was not destroyed because there came into the White House a President who said that as a principle of government unemployment must be regarded as a national problem and that the Government had a responsibility to the millions of people who were out of work to see that they not only had support but likewise had a chance to work and support their families by constructive employment. This did not destroy the morale of the American people. It was too little of this kind of thing that had destroyed the morale of the American people. It was the refusal of people of like mind with some here today to do anything about the failure of industry to provide work for the people that destroyed, or nearly destroyed, our Nation's hope.

I am in entire and hearty accord with what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] said this afternoon. I believe it is entirely proper that Congress should say all it wants to about how money should be spent, provided it has the facts upon which to act. In connection with this bill, however, I believe we not only do not have such facts but I believe we are trying to shy away from the facts we do have.

It has been said over and over again that we do not want to believe Harry Hopkins when he tells us we are going to have the problem of unemployment for a long time to come. But the trouble is he is undoubtedly correct. The trouble is there is not a great industrial nation in this world that has got rid of that problem. The fact is we have got to get down to business and decide what we are going to do, and if we turn our backs on the Roosevelt plan of carrying on public works for the useful employment of these people, we have got to find some other way. We cannot solve the problem by turning these people out in the streets and telling them to find a job in private employment, because, as has already been said by two or three Members on the Republican side, as well as many on the Democratic, there are 10,000,000 people unemployed in this country and W. P. A. at this moment is only employing 2,000,000 of them. By the appropriation of no more than $1,500,000,000, let alone cutting it any further, we will be compelling 630,000 to 700,000 people to go off W. P. A. work and onto direct relief in the cities and counties.

I am against earmarking for one reason, and that is because it means that still more people will be forced to go on direct relief. I am not against it in principle, but I am against it under the circumstances, because if you want projects requiring a heavy cost for material, you have to appropriate enough money to meet the needs of the unemployed people and also have enough to pay for necessary materials. If you do not appropriate more money, you inevitably reduce the number of workers you can employ.

There are a lot of facts I could give you, but I have never had the time to do it, but I would like at least to point out that there has been a joint resolution introduced providing for the appointment of an unemployment and relief commission to make a complete study of this problem. This joint resolution has been introduced in the other body by two Members of that body and also introduced in this body. Its number is House Joint Resolution 378.

I would like to see that joint resolution passed. I would like to have a legislative committee work on this problem and decide what the American Congress is going to do about the great problem of this age—the problem of unemployment. We have got to get down to business and decide what is going to be done, and this business of beating a retreat away from the principle of the right of people to have work is not going to solve the problem but is going to make it more serious, and I feel we are liable to be selling America short to cut the buying power of our poorest people to check the increase of production—yes, to create another depression—unless we stick to that principle until we have something else to put in its place. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. So much of the foregoing appropriation as may be determined by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to be necessary for administrative expenses of any department, establishment, or agency of the United States for additional work incident to carrying out the purposes of such appropriation or the provisions of section 5 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or as may be necessary for administrative expenses of any agency heretofore established by the President under section 4 of said act, may be allotted therefor by the President, and the funds so allotted shall be available until June 30, 1938, for expenditure in the discretion of the President for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of section 3 of said act.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In coolness I want to discuss the flood-control amendment. The amendment adopted by this House provided $20,000,000 to carry out the provisions of a specific act of Congress, the Overton bill. That, added to the $22,000,000 that is carried in the Budget, brings the money for the lower Mississippi up to the amount anticipated by legislation passed by Congress. I want these people who say that this money earmarked for flood control would not be for relief to understand that the materials used will come out of the regular appropriations. So, in effect, practically every dollar that is earmarked would go for labor, a much higher percentage than could possibly be figured out under any other project, and I challenge anyone to criticize or object to that statement.

The other section of the amendment earmarks $25,000,000 to carry out projects in the omnibus flood-control bill. In this bill there are some 300 projects, in 37 States of the Union. In the first place, the States must furnish the rights-of-way. In the second place, the regular appropriation of $30,000,000 will provide for the materials. So, in effect, every dollar of this $25,000,000 will go for labor. Every single dollar will go for labor. Anyone making an objection upon the ground that it would not be for relief, and the amendment specifically requires it must go for relief, is drawing a wrong conclusion, and I plead with the membership to agree to this amendment. I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is sincere, I know that he is sincere, and I certainly do not impugn the motives nor the ability of Mr. Hopkins or Mr. Williams, because they have done a good job. They have informed Mr. STARNES that the labor is available to carry out these projects. Why not earmark this fund as we have done, and carry out the project?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I ask the gentleman to make it 15 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that all debate upon the section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 8, line 13, after the word "appropriation", insert "including a census of the unemployed people needing relief."

AN UNEMPLOYMENT CENSUS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am following the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] this afternoon, that the next thing we should do is to start a study of this problem of relief, and also the words of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] when he said, "It is all very well to talk about the facts, but we need the facts."

This amendment provides that the purposes of this relief appropriation bill shall include a census of the unemployed people needing relief.

We have made many amendments to this bill. I think the Members of this House want to improve the record which the administration is writing in the handling of relief. The first step toward improving that record calls for determining the number of unemployed people who need relief.

That is the one and only purpose of this amendment. The Members are tired and seem now not to be in a mood to consider further amendments. But this is one amendment that I feel sure would have been adopted if it could have come earlier in the debate.

Some time we will take a census of the unemployed needing relief. We should do it now.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I take this time in order to clear up, if I can, what appears to be a misunderstanding on the part of some Members as to how the earmarked road money will be used if the Cartwright amendment earmarking funds for road building which was passed last week is not reversed. The statement has been made on the floor today that the Federal Commissioner of Roads would not approve road projects which cost less than $17,500 a mile. There is absolutely no ground for such an assertion. I read to you from the testimony of Mr. McDonald, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Roads, before the Roads Committee, of which I am a member.

We are building some of the low-cost roads there—

He was talking then about the road program in Ohio—

that is, roads costing as low as $3,000 or $4,000 per mile. Some of the work has been done for even less than that.

He then goes into detail on that particular point. Now, I want to urge upon you this thought: If you reverse yourselves on the Cartwright amendment earmarking funds for road building, you are going to do something you will be very sorry for. Earmarking money in relief appropriations for roads is not a new proposition. It has been done every year for the last 4 or 5 years and it has always met with the general approval of everybody. Spending relief money for giving employment to people in road building is the one thing that has not been criticized any place in the United States as far as the relief program is concerned. More than 80 percent of the relief money spent for road building goes for labor. That cannot be said in respect to any other kind of relief work. If you stand by the amendment you adopted by a vote of 2 to 1 last week you will earmark $150,000,000 for the purpose of prosecuting legitimnte road projects. With the money thus spent you will not only furnish more relief work than you can furnish in any other way, but you will have something to show for the money expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has expired.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I feel we ought to give particular concern to the activities that will be curtailed if this process of earmarking goes through. One phase of the present work of the W. P. A. that has not been mentioned is that of the National Youth Administration. If these funds are earmarked it will inevitably result in a very serious curtailment of the work of this department of the W. P. A.

At the present time there is being aided by the National Youth Administration a total of 426,000 students. Two hundred and twenty-five thousand are boys and two hundred and one thousand are girls. Those students, on the average, are receiving only about $7.57 a month. Of this number 281,000 are in the high schools. A total of 139,000 are in colleges, and some 5,000 are in graduate schools. We have in addition to the number that are being aided in the schools of the country approximately 191,000 students who are working on works projects of one kind or another, receiving an average wage of $16.83 a month.

I feel we should take into consideration not only on the one hand the benefits that may result to individuals from working on roads, on harbor projects, on flood control, or on public works, but we also should take into consideration that today we are aiding an average of more than 1,000 young people in each congressional district in the United States. [Applause.]

We have heard much here today about roads. Concrete roads; asphalt roads. These are important. But important also is the road of youth. I have been particularly interested in this road. Its construction, its preservation is the question of tremendous importance to all of us. The fate of several million young Americans hangs in the balance here today. It is within the power of this body to tip the scales one way or the other; to decide whether America shall continue to give its youth a helping hand through one of the most confusing periods they have ever faced, or whether they shall be cut adrift and told to fend for themselves.

I am certain there is not a one of you here who does not have within his constituency dozens of fine, capable young men and women who have been stopped dead in their tracks by the impact of harsh economic forces. You have seen boys and girls forced to drop out of high school or prevented from entering or continuing in college because they had not the money for clothes, books, and tuition. You have seen them loafing in the parks, on street corners, around the courthouse, or the general store, wasting their youthful energies because society has no work for them to do. Each of us is personally familiar, I am sure, with scores of such instances as these, in which America's future citizenry is being relegated to the discard even before it has a chance to test its strength or show what it can do.

The problems of American youth can be stated simply: They are denied, by circumstances over which they have no control, the opportunity to develop into the full responsibilities of citizenship, opportunities which are implicit in our American way of living.

President Roosevelt recognized this cruel paradox 2 years ago when he created the National Youth Administration. He said then that youth should have "their chance in school, their turn as apprentices, and their opportuntiy for jobs—a chance to work and earn for themselves."

Since its establishment in the summer of 1935, the National Youth Administration has on its relatively limited funds performed a remarkable task. A varied program of aids and of projects through which it has served the Nation's younger citizens. It has been a sort of social insurance for youth. It is important for us to know that, all told, some 2,000,000 young people between 16 and 25 years of age have received direct benefits from this agency since it began operations. These 2,000,000 youths are scattered in every city, town, and farm community throughout the Nation, in your constituency and mine. Without exception, they are the children of our lowest income families; some, even, are the chief bread winners of families. The Youth Administration has given them the kind of help they have needed most. For some it meant an opportunity through work to remain in school and complete their education; for others employment on work projects in which they not only become wage earners, many for the first time in their lives, but also acquire the rudiments of work experience with which to fight for jobs in the open market. For others practical guidance in finding life's job and economic adjustment; for others a decent form of recreation; for still others a complete program of social adjustment.

The record which this agency has of fitting young men and women for private employment is outstanding. The greatest single barrier a young man or woman just out of school faces in getting a job is lack of experience. The average employer knows usually that he can hire an experienced adult for little more than he will have to pay an inexperienced youth. The young job seeker finds he cannot get a job without experience and that he cannot get experience without a job, and there he hangs on the horns of a dilemma. The United States Employment Service has shown in a recent study that while those under 21 represent 18 percent of all registered job seekers, they constitute but 9 percent of those placed in employment. This is the smallest proportion of jobs to applicants of any age group up to 65, a startling demonstration of how the cards are stacked against youth trying to get a start in the world. Besides the terrific economic waste involved in this maladjustment of youth, I ask you to consider the effect on the morale, on the whole outlook on life, that this wasteful living has on each of these young people.

The work-project program of the National Youth Administration is giving employment and job experience at this time to approximately 194,000 out-of-school youth. Practically every project which this agency operates contains some training of value for the inexperienced young worker. After a few months on a project he can approach a prospective employer with something more than a willing heart. He knows how to do something well to try for the initial employment. He is not made a skilled craftsman or mechanic in this way, but he can say truthfully that he has worked before. The training in the crafts comes under the excellent apprentice program of the N. Y. A. The president of the State Federation of Labor of my State, Henry Ohl, has made a particularly noteworthy contribution to this program. May I be pardoned for boasting a little of the truly social program of vocational work and apprentice training going on in my own State. It is a fine model. And the N. Y. A. program has in many ways supplemented it.

There is a turnover in employment of approximately 10 percent a month on N. Y. A. work projects. Between a third and a half of those who leave do so because they have found jobs in private employment. The number who found such jobs in April alone was more than 7,000. This is a sound contribution to the readjustment of youth in our complex society, for there is no future for youth save as it adjusts itself to the world realistically. And in this adjustment the Government must help.

An end of equal importance is being achieved by the junior placement service. This branch of the Youth Administration works cooperatively with public employment offices in 60 cities about the country. They register young job seekers and try to find jobs for which their abilities and experience fit them. Recently this service has averaged better than 5,000 placements in private employment for youth each month.

As we consider curtailments in relief appropriations for the coming year we must remember that the National Youth Administration will suffer in proportion as its funds are reduced. While it has reached more than 600,000 young people in the present year, there literally are millions who need its help who have not been reached. The surface of youth's needs today have been barely scratched by what the N. Y. A. has been able to do. The N. Y. A. needs more money—not less—to adjust the youth people of today in this complex, rapidly changing social order. It is not empty oratory that I give, but cold facts. I submit for your study here a summarized analysis of the varied service of the N. Y. A.

This is an extremely important group of people who are affected here—important socially, economically, politically. Twenty-four percent already are past 21. Of the remainder, 90 percent are in that very significant age group of 18 to 21. That is the period when social and political views begin to take root and form. If they feel that society has cheated them, there will be a bias to their thinking when they gain the power of the ballot. Let us tip the scales today in favor of these youths so that they may have the full measure of opportunity which is rightfully theirs as Americans.

Personally I favor a far-reaching permanent program for youth. I have sponsored such legislation here and I shall continue to work for such a permanent set-up. In the meantime let us here and now preserve this fine foundation which has been laid and devote ourselves to building on it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page 8, line 21, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That such amounts allotted for administrative expense shall not exceed 8 percent of the total expense of any department, establishment, agency, or project within the scope of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. In carrying out the purpose of the foregoing appropriation the President is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of special funds in the nature of revolving funds for use, until June 30, 1938, in the purchase, distribution, or rental of materials, supplies, equipment, and tools.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STARNES: On page 9, line 2, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That with the approval of the President, materials, equipment, and personnel of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, may be assigned to service in connection with flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted under this act, notwithstanding that such projects have not been duly authorized by act of Congress: Provided further, That the requirements hereinafter established that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted hereunder."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not apply to any purchase made or service procured in connection with the foregoing appropriation when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the situation this Congress is in right now in regard to the bill before it is that we have not provided anywhere near the amount of money that will be required to carry on the relief program in this country for the next 12 months. I pointed out to the House when we started the debate on this bill that in my humble opinion it would require at least $4,000,000,000. Since that time emergencies are arising on every hand. I can say to you that in eight States of this Union the drought situation is worse than it ever has been before. It means that in my section of the country it is the eighth straight year of drought, and at least 200,000 people in my State alone of 680,000 will have to be given work. Congress cannot tell tomorrow what the relief situation will be, nor can it tell what the situation will be next week, or next month; and when we have this pittance of $1,500,000,000, much as I would like to see Congress express itself on how public money should be expended, it would be foolhardy to interfere with the administration of the amount of money that we are appropriating to meet a great relief situation. I am not against the independence of this Congress, but the very purpose of this bill is to furnish relief. What kind of relief? Emergency relief. I am in favor of a scientific plan of work that shall be arranged to take care of unemployment whereby there will be no necessity for the waste of public money, but we are now confronted with a situation that is an emergency.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman point out the basis for his statement that the relief needs require $4,000,000,000?

Mr. BURDICK. I base that entirely on the fact that it costs about $666 per person to carry him through 12 months. That multiplied by the number of people out of employment, which this bill cannot protect, gives over $4,000,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. How many people are out of employment?

Mr. BURDICK. Ten million now, of which number this bill cannot hope to aid more than 2,500,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is more than were out of employment when Hoover was President.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not think Hoover helped it any.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman explain where he will get the $4,000,000,000?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I will explain where we will get the $4,000,000,000. To start out with there would be two kinds of work, one to take care of those people who must be put to work at once. They must eat now. When enough people get hungry enough they will get enough to eat. You are going to get it from taxation, the same place we get all relief money today. The second way you are going to get it is to provide a scientific program of Government work for the people who are out of jobs and finance the undertakings by the issuance of Government currency, free of interest, and retired from the income from the things produced.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman would get it from taxation?

Mr. BURDICK. From taxation and from the profits of the operation of the projects.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. What sort of tax?

Mr. BURDICK. The same sort of tax you are using now except that those who are escaping taxation by transferring their property will be brought in and required to pay their just share of taxes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman means through income taxes?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. Any person who knowingly and with intent to defraud the United States makes any false statement in connection with any application for any project, employment, or relief aid under the foregoing appropriation, or diverts, or attempts to divert or assists in diverting, for the benefit of any person or persons not entitled thereto, any portion of such appropriation, or any services or real or personal property acquired thereunder, or who knowingly, by means of any fraud, force, threat, intimidation, or boycott, or discrimination on account of race, religion, or political affiliations, deprives any person of any of the benefits to which he may be entitled under such appropriation, or attempts so to do, or assists in so doing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FISH moves to recommit House Joint Resolution 361 to the committee with instructions that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can a motion to recommit be made in the Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was mystified by the language of the motion and was waiting for someone to clarify it.

The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. For what purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. In support of his motion, whatever it may be.

Mr. FISH. The motion is to strike out.

Mr. Chairman, we are now approaching the conclusion of this bill and I would like to make certain comments and observations upon the whole bill whether the title is stricken out or not.

The Works Progress Administration has become a national scandal, permitting the relief workers to be used for partisan purposes until it has permeated and honeycombed the entire Nation. There can be no hope for permanent benefit in view of the waste and squandering of governmental funds for unproductive and futile purposes through a top-heavy bureaucracy at Washington. I am opposed to the continuation of the present administration of Federal relief, which has become a stench in the nostrils of the public and under which political debauchery has flourished like a green bay tree. All Federal funds for relief purposes should be turned over to the States to be administered by local communities on a nonpartisan and humane basis, in order that the money may go to the needy and not into the pocket of a partisan bureaucracy at Washington, or to a host of partisan supervisors all over the Nation.

There should be an immediate investigation of the numerous and serious charges of gross and contemptible political activity, including pay-roll padding, in the W. P. A. The whole rotten mess stinks to high heaven, and, like a dead mackerel in the moonlight, stinks and shines and shines and stinks. Mr. Victor Ridder, former relief administrator in New York City, has publicly charged that the Workers Alliance, a Communist organization, controlled and dominated the distribution of relief in New York City and that loyal American citizens and war veterans have been discriminated against. This also should be investigated.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion was so wide that the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FISH. The W. P. A. has become such a costly and tragic failure that the New Dealers are afraid to permit a nonpartisan investigation of the charges of offensive partisan politics and maladministration of huge funds for boondoggling. These charges do not emanate alone from Republicans, but from such outstanding Democrats as Senator RUSH HOLT, of West Virginia, who says that W. P. A. in his State is a gigantic political machine, and Senator VAN NUYS, of Indiana, who charged the W. P. A. is playing politics. There should be a vigorous housecleaning in order that anyone guilty of pay-roll padding, graft, and offensive partisanship shall be weeded out and dismissed.

The deplorable and tragic fact is that after more than 4 years of the costly New Deal experiments there are over 10,000,000 unemployed and over 20,000,000 on relief. The main reason for the failure of the New Deal to relieve unemployment, even after the expenditure of $15,000,000,000, is that many of the New Deal measures are unsound, socialistic, and unconstitutional, and destroy business confidence, retard recovery, and prolong the depression.

Who is going to pay for the vast expenditures of the Federal Government, which keep mounting year after year? The very rich have been soaked and swatted to the limit until they have been squeezed dry. It is now the turn of those of moderate and small incomes to foot the bill, including the wage earner, farmer, and small-business man. They will be lined up against the wall and their pockets picked by Federal tax collectors.

If the spending continues, there must be additional taxes levied, practically all of which will fall on the middle class and small-income taxpayers. It is inevitable unless we are willing to face inflation, bankruptcy, repudiation, or financial chaos.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has that privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The Works Progress Administrator is hereby authorized and directed to liquidate and wind up the affairs of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration established under the act of May 12, 1933, as amended, and funds available to said Federal Emergency Relief Administration shall be available for expenditure for such purpose until June 30, 1938.

SEC. 13. A report of the operations under the foregoing appropriation, including a statement of the expenditures made and obligations incurred by classes and amounts, shall be submitted by the President to Congress before the 15th day of January in each of the next two regular sessions of Congress.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is now 7 o'clock p. m. We have been here all afternoon. We are going to have three or four roll calls, probably six or eight, on this bill. At any rate, there will be several roll calls, and each roll call takes about 35 minutes. I do not see any necessity for having these roll calls tonight. [Applause.] I can see the necessity of concluding the reading of the bill this evening. I do not know how much time will be taken on the coming section, because it is a very controversial section. But certainly it seems to me the leadership of the House would be exercising wise judgment if, when we concluded the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole, a motion to adjourn was made after the previous question is ordered. If the leader or Member in charge of the bill does not offer the motion to adjourn, I am going to make a motion that the House adjourn, if the House has not adjourned prior to that time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have spent 10 days on this bill. The gentleman from Virginia and those in charge have been liberal so far as time is concerned. We are all impatient to get this off of our shoulders and out of the way. Many Members in the House have business or engagements elsewhere tomorrow and they want to get away early in the morning. We adjourned from last Thursday until yesterday morning. It seems to me those who had opportunity to go away might have stored up enough energy to stay here an hour or two longer this evening and get this bill out of the way. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I trust that when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] makes his motion that the Committee rise that the Members will defeat the motion so that consideration of this bill may be completed tonight. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not say I was going to make a motion that the Committee rise. I said I was going to make a motion that the House adjourn after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. RAYBURN. I also trust that will be voted down.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. No part of the funds of the United States shall be loaned or granted, except pursuant to an obligation incurred prior to the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, to any State, or any of its political subdivisions or agencies, for the purpose of carrying out or assisting in carrying out any program or project of constructing, rebuilding, repairing, or replanning its penal or reformatory institutions, unless under the laws of such State the sale in the open market of goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined in whole or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) has been prohibited.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Page 10, lines 12, 13, and 14, strike out the words "except pursuant to an obligation incurred prior to the date of the enactment of this joint resolution" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nor shall the unexpended balance of any such funds heretofore loaned or granted be made available for payment."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of section 14 of this bill is to prevent the use of Federal funds in the production or sale of prison-made goods in competition with the products of free labor.

The purpose of my amendment is to make sure that the limitation extends to unexpended balances in the United States Treasury. For example, if a million dollars has been earmarked for loans or grants to the State of New York and $600,000 of that money has been turned over to the State so that it is subject to obligation for contracts within the State, the limitation will apply, and apply only, to the $400,000 remaining in the Treasury.

At the time that this bill was before the subcommittee I received, as a member of that committee, a number of communications from different parts of the country, including a communication from the American Federation of Labor, urging the importance of a limitation of this character. Why? Because it was stated that Federal funds had been used in the construction or repair of prison factories or in providing prison factories with machinery, thereby contributing directly to the sale of prison-made goods in the open market in competition with goods produced by free labor. A witness appeared before the committee and made the same appeal. He stated that according to his information funds had been made available for purposes of this kind under both W. P. A. and P. W. A.

The committee adopted section 14, which, it was thought, would take care of the objection which had been raised. It appears, however, that the section does not go far enough in the opinion of those who are primarily interested in dealing with the situation. It does not go far enough because it is not certain from the language used that it covers specifically unexpended balances in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, there are two steps in connection with the use of the funds now under consideration. First, there is the earmarking of the funds in the hands of the Treasury. Second, there is the turning over of the funds to some particular State. Once the funds have been turned over to a State, and are therefore subject to a contractual obligation within the State, it seems clear to me that the Federal Government is not in a position to deal further with the funds. As long, however, as the funds remain as unexpended balances in the Treasury it seems clear to me that the Federal Government is in a position to attach such a condition as is suggested in this instance. I quote one sentence from the letter received from the American Federation of Labor in this connection as follows:

Congress may certainly enact additional restrictions with reference to the disbursement of funds which are to be given away, as in the case here, at any time prior to the actual payment of the funds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, whether or not the sale of prison-made goods is to be permitted within a State is, of course, a question for determination by that State. Surely, however, the Federal Government has the right to determine whether or not Federal funds shall be used in the manufacture and sale of prison-made goods in competition with the products of free labor.

To allow the use of Federal funds in the manner objected to is, to my mind, to move squarely in opposition to the philosophy reflected in the Hawes-Cooper Act and the Ashurst-Sumners Act, both approved by the United States Supreme Court. Moreover, in the last analysis, it is to produce the absurd result of authorizing the use of relief funds to further increase unemployment and therefore to further increase the need for further relief funds.

I hope the amendment which I have offered will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], for this purpose. I have an amendment sponsored by the American Federation of Labor through its legislative agent, Mr. Hushing. My amendment goes a little further than the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH]. The gentleman's amendment must be voted down under the parliamentary situation in order for me to have the right to offer this amendment, because I cannot offer the amendment now either as an amendment to his amendment or as a substitute. Therefore I ask that the amendment of my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts be voted down in order that I may offer my amendment, which is sponsored by the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman inform the House what his amendment does?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I will be pleased to read it.

On page 10, strike out all of section 14 and insert in lieu thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. No part of the funds of the United States shall be loaned or granted, nor shall the unexpended balance of such funds heretofore loaned or granted be made available for payment to any State, or any of its political subdivisions or agencies, for the purpose of carrying out or assisting in carrying out any program or project of constructing, rebuilding, repairing, or replanning its penal or reformatory institutions unless under the laws of such State or under an agreement authorized by the laws of such State and entered into with the appropriate agency of the United States sales in the open market of goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured in whole or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) has been or will be prohibited after 1 year from the date any such funds are made available for payment."

In other words, we are going to give them a chance for a year. If they are willing to make an agreement that after this coming year they will not use these funds to manufacture goods for sale in the open market in competition with the products of free labor, we will give them a chance to make such an agreement with the Government.

I ask that the amendment of my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] be voted down in order that I may have the opportunity of offering this amendment, which is sponsored by the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], as well as the amendment offered by his colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], should be defeated, because if enacted would abrogate a solemn contract signed by the officials of the United States Government with a sovereign State.

The amendments have as their underlying purpose the desire to have the States enact legislation prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods. No Member of Congress is more anxious to see every State in this Union prohibit competition between convict-made goods and goods made by free labor than I am. At every opportunity I have supported legislation that we hoped would bring this about. This is not the way to achieve such a result.

My State is vitally effected by the amendments. Much as I dislike to say so, Missouri has not passed a law prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods. I have endorsed every effort to get such a law passed and will continue to do so. Our colleague [Mr. WOOD], who for 25 years has been head of the Missouri State Federation of Labor, has lead the fight for the enactment of such a law in our State and he will eventually win. While I think we are closer to the goal now than we have ever been, nevertheless from the information I receive it is impossible to have a law enacted at this session of our legislature which will adjourn in a few days and will not meet again until January 1939. We only meet every 2 years.

If either amendment had been offered in January, I would have voted for it because our legislature would have had ample opportunity to have met the conditions imposed and because at that time the contract for improvements had not been closed.

Now here is our situation. Missouri passed a bond issue setting aside $10,000,000 for the construction, alteration, and repair of State institutions, which includes the State Penitentiary, reformatories, insane asylum, tuberculosis hospital, and so forth. The State applied for Federal aid from the Public Works Administration and received a grant of $5,054,264.

In our State program was an item for the replacement of existing factories at penal institutions amounting to $198,400, and the Federal Government's grant toward the improvements was $90,000.

Had it not been for the fact that the Public Works Administration refused to approve the original plans and specifications for a new cell house at our penitentiary, most of the improvements would have been completed by this time. They were all delayed due to this controversy which started nearly a year ago, and it was only recently that the State agreed to the demands of the Government; the specifications have been changed and a cell house which follows the recommendations of the former superintendent of prisons, Sanford Bates, is to be constructed. The contracts for all of the buildings have now been let, and the State has already received $843,948.10 from the Federal Government. Material has been ordered, not only for the cells but for everything that will go into construction, alterations, and repairs of the institutions.

I fully realize the benefit that would have come to free labor that manufactures goods that are also manufactured and sold by the State within our State if Missouri had only complied with the demand for a proper law preventing the sale of convict-made goods.

Now, what will happen if either amendment passes? We cannot go ahead and spend several million dollars for the construction of a new cell house, reformatories, and repairs and alterations to the buildings that are included in our penal institutions.

This means that the building trades of the American Federation of Labor will not have the benefit of the spending of this vast sum of money and, at the same time, as the legislature is adjourning, it does not appear from what I learn that there is an opportunity to pass such a law as is needed at this late date. Then, of course, free labor will not benefit as a result of either amendment. In other words, one branch of the American Federation of Labor will suffer if this amendment is adopted while another branch that is entitled to have a law passed that will prevent convict-made goods from being sold will not benefit because the law will not be passed. The building trades of the American Federation of Labor of my State want and need this work.

The House has been asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts to adopt an amendment that will result in the Government breaking its contract with the State of Missouri. Surely there is not a Member of this House who will agree that the Congress has a right to pass such a law in view of the fact that the contracts have already been signed by the proper Government representative, acting under authority you gave them.

I received the following telegram from the Governor of my State:

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives:

Understand Congressman CONNERY intends offering amendment to relief bill which, if adopted, will prevent carrying out our prison program and keep Missouri penal system 50 years behind the times. Hope you will oppose such amendment if offered as this is our opportunity to improve terrible prison conditions in Missouri.

LLOYD C. STARK, Governor.

I immediately talked with Mr. CONNERY, and he advised me that he had been requested to introduce the amendment by the legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor; and having given his promise that he would do so, he could not break it. I contacted the legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Hushing, a gentleman that I have known for many years, and I talked to him about the situation. He told me that the objective was to prevent the use of money to enlarge the facilities already at the penitentiary. I investigated this matter, and I received the following telegram from the Governor, which answers that argument:

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Penal board and building commission absolutely assure me that two so-called factory buildings will reduce factory facilities 76,000 square feet and will not enlarge them.

LLOYD C. STARK, Governor.

The Governor of the State of Missouri is a man who would not make a statement that was not based upon fact, and I feel justified in pledging the House that he will see that the factory facilities are reduced 76,000 square feet, which, of course, means a reduction in the output. How could it mean otherwise?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am advised only 40 percent of those engaged in the building trades are employed in our State at the present time. I do not know whether these figures are correct, but I do know that thousands of men are out of employment. Here is an opportunity to give them work.

I want to go on record now as assuring this House that I will do everything within my power to have the State of Missouri adopt a law that will prohibit the sale of convict-made goods.

When the depression was at its height, I started a movement without a suggestion from any manufacturer or any of those engaged in the trade to have the United States Bureau of Prisons allocate to the trade certain orders or shoes for the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps which could have been manufactured at the penitentiary at Leavenworth. As a result, Sanford Bates, the then Superintendent of Prisons, did allocate to the trade orders for the manufacture by free labor of over 2,000,000 pairs of shoes, and Missouri concerns and employees benefited. This certainly should convince anyone how I feel about this matter; but I submit that the Congress of the United States should not break a solemn contract that it has made with a sovereign State, and that is exactly what you are going to do if this amendment passes. I sincerely hope that the amendment will be defeated for the reasons that I have stated.

In closing, let me say that if the Members of this House only realize the situation that confronts our State, insofar as its penal institutions are concerned, you would not now jeopardize this construction work. Our penitentiary was originally built to house about 2,000 prisoners, and for years over double that amount have been within its walls. The present program calls for better conditions at the penitentiary, as well as a new reformatory for first offenders, so that they will be separated from the hardened criminals. Missouri has met every requirement that the Government has asked, has changed the specifications and plans, and, as I say, has signed the contract which resulted in the allocation of over $5,000,000 by the Government to complete a most necessary building program improving all our State institutions.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has placed a paragraph in the bill which will prevent the allocation of money in the future for the construction of penal institutions if a State does not have a law prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods in competition with free labor. I am for that provision, but I am opposed to making it retroactive because it would place the Congress in the position as saying contract or no contract no money heretofore appropriated can be used for this purpose.

I appeal to the Members of the House to defeat these amendments and adopt the recommendation of the committee. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if it is possible to have some understanding about time on this section and amendments thereto, and I am wondering if 20 minutes will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state there are two other amendments pending and at least eight gentlemen have requested recognition.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to be heard on this matter for 4 or 5 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty sympathy with the purposes both of the Wigglesworth amendment and the Connery amendment, but I feel that the Connery amendment accomplishes the objectives that are aimed at far more efficiently than does the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

If there is one thing which I believe is definitely settled, it is that it is against the policy of the National Government to permit prison competition with free labor to any greater extent than may be absolutely necessary. The National Congress has already passed legislation which is intended to effectually diminish even the amount of competition in Federal penal institutions which had theretofore existed by reason of the manufacture of goods for the use of the Federal Government.

The Connery amendment, to my mind, in at least two particulars, is much better than the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

In the first place, there are either 17 or 18 States which have not enacted laws prohibiting the sale of prison-made goods in the open market, and if you adopt the Wigglesworth amendment you bar those States until their legislatures meet again, which, in many instances, is not for 2 years, from the reception of any loan or grant from any agency of the Federal Government for prison construction or prison equipment. Under the Connery amendment, in States which do not have laws of the type required by section 14, the authorities of the States negotiating for a Federal loan or grant would be permitted to enter into a contract by which they would agree not to produce goods for sale in the open market through the medium of the grant or loan which might be made and the prison construction or equipment which might be procured through such means.

In other words, there are many States which, despite their intention not to use the construction or equipment that they might get through the loan or grant, for the purpose of manufacturing goods for sale in the open market, would be debarred from procuring such loan or grant under the terms of the original section 14, but under the terms of the Connery amendment might enter into a contract by which they might be made eligible, and to my mind a contract is a much better protection for those who are interested in not flooding the markets with prison-made goods than the existence of laws passed by a State legislature forbidding such sale, because a law passed by a legislature might be in existence today or at the time of the loan or grant and might be repealed tomorrow or next week; but a contract entered into between the authorities of the State and the Federal Government in an effort to procure the loan or grant would not be subject to repeal, but would be permanent in its terms and enforceable without regard to what action might be subsequently taken by the State legislature.

There is one other feature of the amendment which I think is preferable to the Wigglesworth amendment, in that it eliminates agricultural products from the provisions of section 14. There are some State prison farms where, for example, some cotton is produced, which under section 14, as it would be if amended by the Wigglesworth amendment, or in its original form, could not be sold by a State eligible for a Government loan or grant for prison purposes. I am sure no good purpose could be accomplished by such a restriction.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 10, strike out all of section 14 and insert in lieu thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. No part of the funds of the United States shall be loaned or granted, nor shall the unexpended balance of any such funds heretofore loaned or granted be made available for payment to any State or any of its political subdivisions or agencies for the purpose of carrying out or assisting in carrying out any program or project of constructing, rebuilding, repairing, or replanning its penal or reformatory institutions unless under the laws of such State, or under an agreement authorized by the laws of such State and entered into with the appropriate agency of the United States, sales in the open market of goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured in whole or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) has been or will be prohibited after 1 year from the date any such funds are made available for payment."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, the House has heard this amendment, and I shall merely say that when the Hawes-Cooper Act, which prevented prison-made goods being sold in the open market in competition with the goods of free labor, was under consideration in the House, representatives from the State of Missouri—that is, the Governor and others—came to this body and in the hearings asked that the matter be put off for 5 years in order that they might swing into line with their legislature and put on their statute books a provision so that they would come under this law. We gave them the 5 years, and 5 years have come and gone, and they have done nothing about it. The Members of this House from Missouri have tried valiantly to get that legislation passed in the State of Missouri. So has the American Federation of Labor, but they have not been able to do it. We think that we have given them plenty of time, and this applies to other States as well as Missouri, and now in this amendment we give the States the opportunity of a year and provide that within the year they must put on the statute books a law, or promise not to manufacture these goods in prisons and ship them out into open competition with free labor goods. This is sponsored by the American Federation of Labor.

The plans by which Missouri is rebuilding and rehabilitating its prisons do not contemplate the elimination of a single manufacturing unit which is now engaged in the production of articles for sale in competition with those produced by industry employing free labor. Neither do they contemplate the establishment of a system of prison employment whereby the products of its prisons are used only by the State and its political subdivisions—the system now in force in 31 of the States.

On the other hand, the plans under which Federal moneys allocated to Missouri for use in its penal institutions actually call for the demolition of two factory buildings now in use in the State penitentiary, and which are better than many factories in which free labor is compelled to work. These are to be replaced by two modern factory buildings, costing approximately $200,000, which will house the machinery and equipment now employed in the two factory buildings to be demolished. The same production machinery will be used in the two new buildings, and it is admitted by State officials that production will actually be increased because of the modern character of the new structures.

For more than a generation the Congress has adhered to the policy of discouraging the competition of prison-made goods with those produced in free factories. Long ago the Congress prohibited the importation into the United States of goods manufactured in whole or in part by convict labor, and provided that no goods manufactured in the Federal prisons may be sold in the markets of the United States. The use of such goods is confined entirely to the agencies of the Federal Government.

In 1904 the Congress passed an act (33 Stat. 435) providing that the Post Office Department might not purchase materials or supplies manufactured by convict labor.

In 1905 the then President issued an Executive order (Executive Order No. 325a) prohibiting any of the officers and agents of the United States from contracting for supplies manufactured by convict labor.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act prohibits the use of convict labor, either directly or indirectly, upon projects financed by loans or contracts made by said corporations.

In 1929 the Congress adopted the Hawes-Cooper Act, thereby subjecting to State laws prison-made goods shipped from one State into another. Missouri was one of those States which insisted that the act be made effective 5 years from the date of its passage, in order that it may have time to replan its prison industries to meet the new situation. Eight years have passed since that time, and Missouri has not taken a single step to conform its policy to that of other States.

The Ashurst-Sumners Act was passed by the Congress in 1935 and has been sustained by the courts. This further limits the interstate shipment of prison-made goods.

Yet, unless the proposed amendment is adopted, the Federal Government will actually be furnishing money for the construction of factories, the products of which are to be used in circumventing this long-established policy.

The Supreme Court a short while ago in the cases involving the Social Security Act laid down the rule that the Federal Government may place such restrictions around the use of money appropriated by it, even when it is to be used by the State, as are to "assure a fair and just requital for benefits received."

If this amendment is adopted, Missouri and other States may accept the conditions laid down by Congress to safeguard its funds or not, as they choose.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I notice the gentleman in the amendment left out the words "produced or mined."

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I take it under that amendment that any coal or iron——

Mr. CONNERY. That is true. I will say that the amendment was drawn and offered to me by the representatives of the American Federation of Labor. If I had had anything to do with it it would have included "produced and mined" also.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Under that amendment they can have convicts mine iron and coal.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I believe that should be covered but the Federation did not want to go that far, because our principal difficulty is in manufacturing.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the Connery amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York to the amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: In line 7 of the amendment, after the word "institutions", insert "nor for purchase of machinery for penal institutions."

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in this question for some time, and I think if Members will stop and think for just a moment they will be interested in this proposed amendment. Here is the situation that has occurred. There is a bureau in Washington that is very much interested in purchasing high-speed machinery to put into penal institutions, which multiplies the man power in those institutions many times. That machinery, manned by these law violators, produces goods which go into competition with the goods of free labor. What I want to do is to see to it that these funds in the Treasury available, these surplus, unexpended funds, are not used or loaned for the purpose of purchasing high-speed machinery to multiply the power of criminal labor to compete with free labor. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF to the amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: At the end of the amendment insert: "Provided, That this prohibition on loans or grants shall not apply to the case of any State, or political subdivision, or agency thereof, if the goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners in its penal or reformatory institutions are sold by such institutions to cooperative associations for distribution or sale within the limits of such State."

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, this section 14 affects 36 States in the Union and it ought to be of vital interest to every Member here. There are only 12 States that it does not reach. My amendment exempts from the provisions of the act binder-twine institutions in factories in penitentiaries that sell the twine to the farmers at cost. That is what we do in Wisconsin, and it saves our farmers $100,000 a year. If you strike this out, it leaves us in a position where we will be unable to go ahead with the $1,300,000 program for our penal and reformatory institutions, because you will deprive us of the opportunity of getting any of this money. I am satisfied that the Federation of Labor is not at all anxious to handicap the farmer. We have passed legislation here again and again helping labor. It is high time that we did something for agricultural interests. This amendment seeks to safeguard to them this slight saving of $100,000 a year on binder twine that they use. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] and the amendment to the amendment is a direct slap at the State of Missouri. In those amendments they do not say anything about picking cotton by convict labor or mining in different States with convict labor. All they are doing is trying to take a slap at our State. Missouri has not at any time asked for anything during this session of Congress. When you people down South wanted your roads, and when you wanted your flood control, Missouri stood by you. I am asking you at this time to stand by Missouri on this question. You who are so interested in roads should know that this will affect your road program. In any State where money is allocated for the building of roads, if there is any convict labor at all used on the roads, it will take the money away from you. This money is for better housing facilities for the prisoners now confined at Jefferson City. At the present time four or five prisoners occupy the same cell and the prison is overcrowded to the extent that the condition is a health menace. But the direct slap is at our State only.

I ask you at this time to stand by the State of Missouri, who has stood by you at all times.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question occurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF], to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EBERHARTER to the amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: In line 11, after the word "manufactured", insert "produced, or mined."

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed that the bill as originally drawn by the committee contained the three words "manufactured, produced, or mined." The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] left out the words "produced or mined"; so that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is adopted, they can use convict labor to mine coal, to mine iron, and produce other materials and still receive a grant.

I know if the United Mine Workers knew of this situation, they would approve of having this word "mined" in there, so there would be no possibility they could use convict labor for mining.

I think my amendment should be adopted for that particular reason. I wonder if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] will be good enough to accept the amendment which I offer, because I do not see where there could be any objection to having those words inserted?

Mr. CONNERY. As far as I am personally concerned, I would be delighted to have those words in, but the federation apparently did not want to go as far as that. Personally, it would be O. K. with me.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Perhaps the United Mine Workers are not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and that is the reason they did not use the word "mined."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, I am rather amazed that our friends from Missouri should come into the well of this House and say, "We want to eat our cake and have it, too. You have been generous enough through P. W. A. to give us many millions of dollars for the remodeling of the penal and reformatory institutions in Missouri. Since you have been so generous in supplying us with Federal funds, we also demand for ourselves the right to flood the market with prison-made clothing and binder twine."

I think it is high time, in the interest of the free labor in every State in the Union, that we should force them to make an election and forego the benefits of Federal money or, once and for all, stop flooding the market in competition with free labor.

I am literally amazed at the demands you are making here today. I have in my district a cordage factory that is having difficulty in maintaining constant production because the market is constantly preempted by the cheap prison-made binder twine that is filling the markets of the Central West; but that is what our friends from Missouri contend for today.

As for the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON], who says we should not penalize them because they have not asked for much, I suggest that they take a portion of the $30,000,000 with which they are going to build a second memorial to Thomas Jefferson and use that money, and perhaps they will have enough to repair the penal institutions in Missouri.

The W. P. A. has allocated certain funds to the State of Missouri with which to repair and rebuild some of its penal institutions. The funds have been allocated, but not yet expended. The buildings proposed to be repaired or replaced will be used for the production of clothing, binder twine, and other goods. These goods will go into the market and compete with free labor.

The gentlemen from Missouri instead of coming before us with some sort of promise that this practice of selling prison-made goods in the open market will stop, merely come and talk of a solemn obligation with a sovereign State that must not be repudiated. Such argument is scarcely persuasive.

I suggest that a little missionary work be done at home first and that the State of Missouri be first made to agree that this practice will be discontinued. It has been said that the legislature is not in session. The answer to that objection is that they can be brought into special session in a reasonably short time for the purpose of giving this matter attention. Besides this possibility, there is the authority of the Governor to bind the State to some form of agreement that prison-made goods will be kept off of the market.

Failing in this, these funds should be withheld. The idea of permitting relief money, meant for the unemployed, to be used to repair prison buildings so that a greater production of prison-made goods can cause more unemployment is a fantastic paradox, and the only sensible thing this Congress can do is to put an end to it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. EBERHARTER) there were ayes 51 and noes 45.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Connery amendment for very good reasons. Section 14 of the bill really eliminates the giving of Federal grants or loans to any State by the Federal Government immediately on the passage of this resolution. Missouri, as has been said, voted bonds for a $10,000,000 building program, and we did it for the purpose of creating employment more than anything else, rehabilitating our eleemosynary institution and penal institution. Nearly all of this money has been spent and, as has been said, we made a contract with the Federal Government. The State of Missouri has carried out its part of the contract. We were granted $850,000 for this new cell building. Now, mind you, if this amendment is passed we cannot complete our program and we will not only lose $850,000, we will lose over $4,000,000 in Federal money, because the Federal Government will have broken the contract we had with them.

Aside from the foregoing there are other reasons. The $850,000 cell building is needed because, Mr. Chairman, we have in one old building from 1,000 to 1,200 prisoners which was originally intended to house only 400 or 500.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain the gentleman's motion. All time has been fixed.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a most important matter to my State. I ask for only 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to accommodate some of the gentleman's colleagues from Missouri.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] for 2 minutes.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, this is the first time recently that I have risen to address you on a matter in which my State is vitally interested. I have a few things I want to say about this amendment.

The gentleman who submits this amendment asks you as Members of Congress to do the amazing and astounding thing of having the United States Government repudiate and nullify a solemn contract already entered into. That is the only thing that this amendment does. I want, in the remaining moment or two, to point out, as we sometimes say, the "nigger under the woodpile." Just a few moments ago somebody said he had a cordage factory in his district. We have a cordage factory down in the State of Missouri. The gentleman's cordage factory has the temerity to come before the United States Congress and ask this body to repudiate a contract. The only interest from my State lobbying for this bill is the St. Louis Cordage Mills. I read a telegram which I received from them, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 25, 1937.

Hon. CHARLES JASPER BELL,
United States Representative, House Office Building:

We are in favor of the amendment proposed by Congressman CONNERY to be added to the relief appropriation bill. Except in the case of States that already have laws prohibiting the sale of prison-made goods on the open market this amendment would prohibit the distribution of Federal funds to be used in any prison rehabilitation program even though these funds may have already been promised. We hope for your full support of this amendment.

ST. LOUIS CORDAGE MILLS.

I am in favor of section 14 just as it was originally written by the committee and reported to this House. That takes care of the question of convict labor and takes care of it in the right way.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman state who is president of the Missouri State Federation of Labor?

Mr. BELL. My colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] who just spoke, is president of the Missouri State Federation of Labor. He is against the amendment and is for section 14 just as it was originally written. He was down in the State of Missouri a few days ago and while he was there he wired me and asked me to oppose this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the Connery amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Strike out all of section 14 and insert the following:

"No funds shall be paid or allocated to any State or political subdivision thereof which permits the employment of children under the age of 18 years except in agriculture."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

The substitute amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain to the Committee just what section 14 as reported by the committee seeks to do. In the first place, I think the Connery amendment should be defeated.

Section 14 was put in by the committee because of this complaint with reference to the expansion of prison institutions. It rose primarily out of a P. W. A. loan or grant to the State of Missouri to expand its penal and recreational institutions, a portion of which was used for the construction of a factory for prison-made goods.

Section 14, as reported by the committee, absolutely prohibits and prevents any further funds from any Government agency being given to any State or municipality for new loans, but it does permit the Government, of course, to carry out obligations which it has already incurred. The committee feels that the language, as reported by the committee, is as far as Congress can honorably go. We did not feel that Congress should have the right to undertake to write legislation here which would repudiate binding obligations which accredited agents of the Government have made with State or municipalities; therefore, Mr. Chairman, we believe the language, as reported by the committee, will absolutely protect any future loans or grants from any Government funds from any source whatever being used for that purpose, but will permit the carrying out of existing obligations.

Mr. Chairman, we hope all the amendments will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 43, noes 148.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment I am proposing, to prohibit the use of funds appropriated by this act to purchase heavy construction equipment, may save the taxpayers of this country millions of dollars; at least it cannot cost them anything. In the past, the Works Progress Administration has made large investments in heavy construction equipment, such as trenching machines, concrete mixing and placing machinery, road-building machinery, draglines, power shovels, tractors, etc. If W. P. A. were a permanent organization to be engaged in heavy construction for years to come, it might be good economy to purchase such equipment, but since it is an emergency organization such investments cannot be justified. I do not believe that it ever was the intention of Congress for W. P. A. to enter the field of heavy construction. As I understand it, W. P. A. was intended to be a relief and work-relief organization, and that the types of projects it was expected to undertake would be confined to work that was predominately and normally hand labor—something that would require little or no investment on the part of the Federal Government other than for small tools and relief labor. As it is, W. P. A. has undertaken large sewer and waterworks projects. It has also gone in for heavy building construction.

Few Federal agencies have use for heavy construction equipment of the type W. P. A. is buying, therefore, the possibility of transferring such equipment to other Government agencies after it is no longer needed by W. P. A. is practically nil. If such equipment has to be sold to competitive bidders or at public auction only a small part of the Government's investment will be recovered. Its purchase should not be permitted in the first instance.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEITER: Page 10, line 22, after the period, insert "No funds herein appropriated shall be expended to purchase heavy construction equipment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCCLELLAN: Page 10, line 22, insert a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"That any grant hereafter made by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works to aid in the financing of any project for which an allotment was recommended on a 45-percent grant basis by the examining divisions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and for which bonds have been voted or funds otherwise secured by the project sponsor to finance 55 percent of the project cost prior to the effective date of this act shall be 45 percent of the project cost."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the portion of the bill to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas is offered as a new paragraph, which would be a new paragraph to section 14 that deals substantially with prison goods. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas deals with Public Works projects and is not germane to section 14. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. This joint resolution may be cited as the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MEAD: Page 10, line 23, after the word "resolution", strike out "may" and insert "shall."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, during the course of this debate I have not taken any time of the House, and I regret very much that I find it necessary to take the floor this evening. First of all, I desire to congratulate the leadership of the committee and the House and the good judgment of the several gentlemen who offered amendments to this bill. I think each of them have won for themselves victories that should compensate them for their efforts. They all deserve credit, and there is credit enough for all.

May I point out to the Committee that it is impossible and impracticable for the House, acting as we have during the past few days, to write a general relief appropriation bill. In my judgment, a better balanced bill was reported to the House than the one we are now about to refer back to the House. Some are bent on balancing the Nation's Budget at any cost; others believe that a proper economic balance should be maintained; still others desire relief sufficient to maintain a proper social order in keeping with the Nation's wealth.

How can members of a committee opposed to the bill in its entirety, together with a group of Members who believe that the bill is grossly inadequate, write a new bill under such circumstances? Some of the earmarking amendments are economically wrong. They violate every rule of relief. They take away relief from the populous centers and confer it on other sections of the country where relief is not so necessary at this time. They rob workers of jobs and in some instances give employment to machines. They buoy up the durable-goods industry and injure the consuming-goods industry. Orders for metal goods will reach new heights while shoes, clothing, and foodstuffs will drop in comparison.

Every large industrial center throughout these United States will suffer as a result of some of the earmarking amendments that have been written into this bill. I hope that those who are actuated by motives based on the needs of the country and on the need for a real relief bill will join with the committee in the elimination of all such earmarking amendments. The agreements explained this afternoon will augment the work program to the advantage of all classes of unemployed.

There is another amendment in the bill I trust will be defeated. I fear it was adopted in a moment when our better judgment had left us. That is the amendment that would strike at the splendid leader of the great W. P. A. organization. In the future, when political passion and partisanship dies down, the name of Harry Hopkins will loom high in the history of our country and in the work of the Roosevelt administration. He has done a good job and I hope the amendment which reduced his salary will be stricken out of the bill. It should go out. W. P. A. is doing a great job, it has profited immensely by the experiences of the last few years. In New York State, as in the Nation, better projects are being selected and better work is being done.

The W. P. A. is a haven for the Nation's forgotten man, that tragedy of the power-machine age, the citizen who happens to be over 45 years old. Over 600,000 such workers are on W. P. A. projects.

A sufficient relief bill, followed by a housing and slum-clearance program, a public-buildings bill, a public-works bill that will release funds for projects already approved, and then to complete the task a bill to regulate hours, wages, and child labor, and we will have done our duty toward the unemployed. Organized labor is creating jobs also by securing better hours, wages, and working conditions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to oppose the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I do not come from that section of Oklahoma which is known as the Dust Bowl. I do not come from that section of the Great Plains States which is known as the Dust Bowl. But the dust still blows in Oklahoma today, and the dust is blowing in Texas and in parts of Kansas and Colorado, and I am interested in helping to relieve this situation.

A few days ago this House by a decisive vote earmarked $10,000,000 of these funds for the purpose of correcting this situation as far as possible. Today the majority leader came back to the House with some proposed compromises.

When he was questioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] as to whether or not he had a promise regarding what would happen to the Dust Bowl, the majority leader very frankly told this membership he had no promise pertaining to the Dust Bowl. The gentleman from Texas

[Mr. JONES] stated he had been in conference with Harry Hopkins and Aubrey Williams, and that they had said, "Why, we might spend $30,000,000 out there. Your amendment is only a limitation." I wish I could think they would spend this sum. But, Mr. Chairman, that dog will not hunt. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas provided that there should be at least $10,000,000, which is no limitation; and if they wanted to spend any sum above $10,000,000, they should know this is no limitation. If they want to spend $30,000,000 and are honest and sincere in such intention, they should welcome the $10,000,000 earmarking amendment placed in the bill.

I want to warn the membership of this House—you gentlemen from New York, who had dust in your breakfast less than a year ago, dust blown from the Great Plains of the Middle West; and you gentlemen from California, who had sand in your breakfast grapefruit, sand blown from Oklahoma and Texas—that if you vote to take out this $10,000,000 amendment, you should do it with your eyes open. You gentlemen from Oklahoma, New Mexico, Kansas, Texas, and Nebraska, and the great Middle West, if you think you received a compromise today, you are being duped, and you are making the biggest mistake you have ever made in your life.

I hope the membership of this House, if they are interested in the starving farmers, whose houses are being covered up by sand blown over their roofs so they cannot even get out the door; if you are interested in protecting the fertile fields in that area, which today are being covered up as the young crops are growing and the dust piles on them and piles on them, you will vote to keep the $10,000,000 amendment in this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAMBETH). Without objection, the pro-forma amendment of the gentleman from New York is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, no Member of this House, in my opinion, is entitled to a higher place in our confidence by reason of his ability, integrity, and patriotism than the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, the Honorable LINDSAY WARREN. When that gentleman told you today that there was no more indefensible earmarking in this bill than the Cartwright amendment, I believe the distinguished gentleman went too far. I believe also that Jupiter nodded!

If the English language means anything, there is already earmarked in this bill $415,000,000 for good roads. I refer you to page 2 of the bill, lines 8 to 13, inclusive. There you will find the policy stated; written, no doubt, by the leadership of this House after conference with the powers that be at the other end of the Avenue. This $415,000,000 is already earmarked for good roads.

All the Cartwright amendment does is to say that of this amount about one dollar in three shall be spent by experts, who know their business, for better and more permanent roads than the cheaper kind which will be built under the W. P. A.

The motive back of this amendment is not one of mistrust of our great leader in the White House, nor of that other leader who has done such a splendid piece of work in the Works Progress Administration. A large majority of us trust them implicitly and admire them extravagantly. No, the motivating cause of this amendment is the honest conviction that relief of all the really needy in this Nation may be achieved under the provisions of this bill, with the Cartwright amendment in it, and that when the year has passed and the relief job done, the taxpayers would have much more of permanent value to show for their money. We believe that good roads, properly built out of good materials, will last. We point to the Appian Way, still good as it was in the days when it bore the chariots of the Caesar who conquered Gaul. We believe that money put into the building of real roads is not spent, but invested.

Another article of our credo is: 80 to 90 percent of every good-roads dollar goes for labor. This has been proven in countless hearings. It is indisputably true. Directly or indirectly, from 80 to 90 cents of every good-roads dollar is paid to labor.

We maintain that it is better to employ men, or keep them employed, in essential industries, thereby keeping them off of relief, than to add to unemployment and relief rolls by failing to buy and use the products of essential industries. Is it not better to feed and clothe and house families by buying cement or tar, slag, rock, asphalt, or other road-building material than by a W. P. A. job after forcing the provider onto a relief roll?

It is the same old case of fence versus ambulance. Why not fence the dangerous cliff by providing work in private industry, instead of spending all our money on the ambulance down in the valley?

Many of us glory in the record which has been made by this administration in transmuting the rule of gold into the golden rule! We have fed the hungry, clothed the naked, housed the homeless, and in every way safeguarded morale and self-respect among the beneficiaries! Our record through W. P. A. is marvelous We have built countless miles of good roads—many of these of the higher class we are now seeking by the Cartwright amendment to continue building. Let us not "weary in well doing", nor cower at the crack of the whip. Let us exercise at least enough of our constitutional authority to retain in this bill this most meritorious amendment.

I have confidence enough in the Honorable Harry Hopkins to be sure that he will do the job of relief in a creditable way. Let us challenge him, by retaining this amendment, to do it even better than he planned.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly.

Mr. MOTT. Without the Cartwright amendment there is no requirement whatever in the bill to spend any money for roads.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; that is true.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. KELLER. Is it not also true that the money could be spent by contractors who would employ men who did not need help?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; that is possible, but I think not a pressing problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very critical of the administration of the W. P. A. in my district because of the reports and complaints which seemed to be well-founded, and so I was compelled to ask that the management of this important work be investigated. We cannot permit discrimination of any kind to exist if it is possible to stamp it out. Especially must we be ever watchful that political considerations have no weight in the desperate fight we are waging against unemployment and distress.

But in spite of my critical attitude toward those who would sabotage the President's program of giving relief where it is needed, I am wholeheartedly behind any move that will continue employment for those who cannot receive it elsewhere, and for providing for the needs of the poor, the hungry, and the less privileged to the full extent of our national ability.

In this relief bill which we have been discussing now for the past several days we have considered the necessity of providing for from one to two millions of people who would not otherwise be able to buy even the necessities of life for themselves and their families. And I have consistently supported every amendment offered to increase this appropriation, even to three or four billion dollars if during the coming 12 months the President should find it necessary to expend that amount to relieve distress.

But, my colleagues, I would like to draw your attention to a fact that no one seems to have considered. It is this—that although we had some 18,000,000 persons unemployed at the time President Roosevelt arrived on the scene and assumed the direction of national affairs, and in spite of the fact that 8,433,000 persons have been placed back on the pay roll of industry, agriculture, and commerce—that there are still 9,600,000 persons unemployed in this country. These figures are not mine. They have been compiled after considerable research according to an announcement of the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

Now, if this is true, and I see no reason to believe otherwise, why are we providing for one and one-half million people when there are nine and one-half million unemployed? Let us presume there are only one-half or even one-third of this number that are actually heads of families with dependents to support. That will still give us between three and five million heads of families who have no way of providing for themselves and their families except direct relief and the W. P. A. In other words, when we provide for one million up to two million people, not all of them heads of families, it is obvious that we are taking care of but a small proportion of the total number who are just as much entitled to relief as are those who happen to have the good fortune to get on the pay roll.

Now here is another fact that I should like to bring to your attention and that is that because of the limited funds we appropriate for W. P. A. it permits those in authority in the district offices to place on the rolls their friends and to deny work to their enemies. They can even go further because of certain classifications, they can make these poor, unfortunate people be "good" or else their classification changes to one of a lower grade. At any rate, the pay received, because of these various classifications, gives considerable latitude and power of discrimination to those in authority.

You have probably seen it in your own district where a skilled mechanic, perhaps a carpenter, is required to dig ditches at $55 a month, whereas a common laborer may be classified in such a way as to receive many dollars more per month. This undoubtedly breeds discontent and defeats the very purpose of relief. Because why should one in an easy job, of say $94 a month, ever care to risk giving this up when private industry for a similar classification cannot pay so much?

The real answer, of course, must be that our basic wage scale is so low that it does not provide the American standard of living. As long as there is a dearth of jobs and an oversupply of labor this condition is bound to exist. Unless we will outlaw child labor and retire our old people this oversupply of labor will continue to exist. It may be necessary to come to the 30-hour work week to provide jobs for all. But I believe if a real effort were made to enforce even a 40-hour work week, the effect on unemployment would be most salutary.

In the meantime, however, it is necessary that we back up the President in his promise that as long as he is President of the United States no one in this great land of ours shall starve. And I trust, therefore, that this Congress will at least vote the amount of money the President asks for and be ready and willing to vote more when the need for it becomes evident as I believe it will within the near future.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement by my friend from Oklahoma, I want to make one observation: On the question of provision for the ponds and lakes amendment, I had direct assurance from Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Williams that they expected to use more than the amount stipulated in my amendment for the purposes indicated in that amendment. I have faith in what they said and expect to accept their statement.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, Chairman of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the following amendments:

Page 2, lines 1, 13, 18, 20, and 21, the several amendments dealing with the amounts in the bill.

On page 2, line 18, the so-called Starnes flood-control amendment.

On page 2, line 20, and page 3, line 24, the two Caldwell amendments, or the so-called public-works amendment.

On page 3, line 18, the Cartwright good-roads amendment.

On page 5, line 22, the May amendment limiting the salary of any employee of the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a separate vote on each amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 123, noes 223.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Wisconsin has requested a separate vote on each amendment. Does that include the amendments with respect to the amounts?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Wisconsin has demanded a separate vote on each and every amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House.

The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment:

On page 1, line 11, strike out "$1,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000,000."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the vote now about to be taken, a vote of "yea" means a vote for $1,500,000,000, and a vote of "nay" means a vote for $1,000,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has arrived at a correct conclusion. [Laughter and applause.]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 271, nays 107, not voting 54, as follows:

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments on page 2, line 13, line 18, line 20, and line 21, merely dealing with the allocation of amounts, be voted on en bloc.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Does this involve the May amendment on the Hopkins pay roll?

Mr. WOODRUM. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the several amendments referred to by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out "$276,700,000" and insert "$415,000,000."
Page 2, line 18, strike out "$420,000,000" and insert "$630,000,000."
Page 2, line 20, strike out "$253,300,000" and insert "$380,000,000."
Page 2, line 21, strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$75,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "including", insert the following: "Electric transmission and distribution lines of systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit cooperative associations."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 108, noes 91.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "conservation", strike out the words "and miscellaneous."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the sign and figures "$630,000,000", insert the following: ", of which amount not less than $20,000,000 shall be available to augment funds otherwise provided to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 702–a), as amended by the Flood Control Act, approved June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1508), and not less than $25,000,000 shall be available to augment funds otherwise provided to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1570–1595), as amended: Provided, That these funds are expended under the provisions herein established for the use of relief labor: Provided further, That the requirements hereinafter established that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to duly authorized flood-control projects."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that this is the so-called Starnes amendment. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the Starnes amendment strike out the period, insert a semicolon and add the following: "and not less than $10,000,000 shall be available for the construction of ponds and small lakes and for water conservation in the Great Plains area."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAGNUSON: Page 2, line 19, after the word "professional", insert "and self-help."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the semicolon, add: "Provided, That from the amounts specified for the foregoing classes, $300,000,000 shall be allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Caldwell amendment on page 2, line 20, dealing with $300,000,000, and the companion amendment on page 3, after line 18, dealing with the Public Works Administration, be voted on together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The question is on the so-called Caldwell amendment, page 2, line 20.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it in order for the Speaker to once again have the amendment read?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTWRIGHT: On page 3, between lines 18 and 19, insert:

"Of the amount specified for highways, roads, and streets, not less than $75,000,000 shall be allocated for the survey and construction of public highways on the Federal-aid highway system and not less than $50,000,000 for the survey and construction of secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, rural free-delivery mail roads, and public-school bus routes. Such sums shall be apportioned in the manner provided by section 204 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act for expenditure by the State highway departments under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented. Not less than $25,000,000 shall be allocated for the survey and construction of projects for the elimination of hazards to life at railroad grade crossings, on the Federal-aid highway system and elsewhere, including the separation or protection of grades at crossings, the reconstruction of existing railroad grade-crossing structures, and the relocation of highways to eliminate grade crossings, and shall be apportioned and expended in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 16, 1936, entitled 'An act to amend the Federal Highway Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.' No part of the funds apportioned to any State or Territory under this paragraph need be matched by the State or Territory. The President shall prescribe rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this paragraph."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "determine", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no agricultural laborer and no unskilled laborer who refuses or has refused an offer of private employment paying as much or more in compensation for such work as such person has received or could receive under the relief herein provided, and who is capable of performing such work, shall be eligible for relief hereafter for the period such private employment or any similar subsequent offer of such employment would be available: And provided further, That any person who performs such private employment shall, at the expiration thereof, be entitled to an immediate resumption of his previously existing employment status on the work relief authorized by this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 165, noes 68.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, after line 18, insert:

"The funds allocated hereunder to the Works Progress Administration shall be so apportioned and distributed over the 12 months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and shall be so administered during such fiscal year, as to constitute the total amount that will be furnished during such fiscal year through such agency for relief purposes."

The question was taken, and the Chair being in doubt the Committee divided; and there were—ayes 241, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 24, add a new paragraph as follows:

"In order to maintain or increase employment by providing for useful public-works projects of the kind and character for which the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (hereinafter called the Administrator) has heretofore made loans and grants pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, the funds hereinbefore allocated to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works shall be used for the making of loans and grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects, and for the making of loans or grants to finance or aid in the financing of such projects in accordance with existing law. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $10,000,000 of the funds allocated in this joint resolution for administrative expenses."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEITER) there were—ayes 1, noes 241.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided further, That in order to insure the fulfillment of the purposes for which the foregoing appropriation is made and to avoid competition between the Works Progress Administration and other Federal or non-Federal agencies in the employment of labor on construction projects of any nature whatsoever, financed in whole or in part by the Federal Government, no worker shall be eligible for employment on any project of the Works Progress Administration who is needed and who has refused to accept employment on any other Federal or non-Federal project at a wage rate comparable with or higher than the wage rate established for similar work on projects of the Works Progress Administration: Provided further, That any worker who has been engaged on any Federal or non-Federal project and whose service has been regularly terminated through no fault of his own, shall not lose his eligibility for restoration to the relief rolls or for reemployment on any other Federal or non-Federal project on account of such previous employment."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM) there were—ayes 145, noes 138.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, lines 4 and 5, strike out the word "continental."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 9, strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided, That preference shall be given to American citizens in employment by the Works Progress Administration and next those aliens who have taken out first papers prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 9, after the word "discharge", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That veterans of the World War and Spanish War shall be given preference for employment by the Works Progress Administration."

Committee amendment: Page 6, after line 3, insert the following: "No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States who holds an administrative, executive, or supervisory position under this joint resolution, if the position is in any office located outside the District of Columbia or is on any project prosecuted in any place outside the District of Columbia, unless such person is an actual and bona-fide resident of the State or Territory in which the office or project is situated, but this provision shall not apply to the temporary and emergency assignment of any person to a position where the period of service in such position does not exceed 60 days."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 16, after the "6" insert "(a)".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 6, line 22, after the word "candidate", insert "nor of any person holding an elective or appointive office in any State, district, county, or municipality, whether or not any salary, fee, or emolument attaches to such elective or appointive office."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY)—ayes 17, noes 131.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the period, insert "and provided further, that no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be available to pay the compensation of W. P. A. district officials unless such officials are bona-fide residents of the W. P. A. district in which the office is situated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, after line 22, insert the following:

"(b) No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States who holds an administrative, executive, or supervisory position under this joint resolution if such person receives or earns compensation for personal services (rendered during the period when he holds such position) from any other source."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, between lines 4 and 5, insert:

"SEC. 6 (a). Hereafter all appointment of persons to the Federal service for employment within the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this act, whether such appointments be within the classified civil service or otherwise, shall be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census. In making separations from the Federal service or furloughs without pay to last as long as 3 months of persons employed within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, the appointing power shall give preference in retention to appointees from States that have not received their share of appointments according to population: Provided, however, That soldiers, sailors, and marines, the widows of such, or the wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines who themselves are not qualified but whose wives are qualified to hold a position in the Government service shall, be given preference in retention in their several grades and classes where their ratings are good or better."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, after line 4, add subsection (c), as follows:

"No part of the foregoing appropriation shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any person who is related to the State administrator, district manager, or county supervisor, or the appointing power within the third degree by blood or marriage."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, after line 2, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That with the approval of the President, materials, equipment, and personnel of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, may be assigned to service in connection with flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted under this act, notwithstanding that such projects have not been duly authorized by act of Congress: Provided further, That the requirements hereinafter established that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted hereunder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. BACON. In its present form; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there any gentleman present opposed to the joint resolution who has a motion to recommit?

Mr. BACON. I am opposed to the joint resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies, and the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BACON moves to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith to the House with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That to provide relief, and work relief, and to increase employment, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,500,000,000, which shall be available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938.

"SEC. 2. (a) Not more than $1,400,000,000 of the sum appropriated by section 1 shall be available for grants-in-aid to States to assist them in financing and administering such forms of relief and work relief and methods of increasing employment as may be determined upon and undertaken by them. Such amount shall be allocated by the Federal Relief Board (hereinafter established), with the approval of the President, among the several States upon the basis of the Board's findings and conclusions with respect to the facts concerning and weight to be given to unemployment and living costs in, and population and financial resources of, the several States. Not more than 15 percent of such amount shall be paid to any State.

(b) The sum allocated to a State under subsection (a) shall be paid quarterly by order of the Federal Relief Board to the State if—

(1) The Governor (or in the case of the District of Columbia, the District Commissioners) has certified to the Federal Relief Board that there has been established a board of relief trustees in such State, the membership of which is not composed solely of individuals who are members of the same political party, and that such board has the power and duty of receiving and disbursing sums which may be granted such State under this section;

(2) The State board has certified to the Federal Relief Board that the State, or its subdivisions, or both, have provided or are prepared to provide an amount equal to not less than 33⅓ percent of the amount allocated to it under this section, for relief, work relief, or methods of increasing employment; and

(3) The State board has agreed to furnish to the Federal Relief Board such reports (respecting the administration of the relief, work relief, or methods of increasing employment with respect to which funds allocated to the State under this section are used) in such form and containing such information as the Federal Relief Board may from time to time require, and to comply with such provisions as the Federal Relief Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

(c) If the Federal Relief Board finds that any part of an amount granted to a State under this section has been diverted to a purpose not reasonably within the purpose of furnishing relief, work relief, or increasing employment, or that more than 75 percent of the amount devoted to such purposes has been expended out of grants under this section, the amount of future grants to be made to the State shall be reduced by an amount equal to the amount the Board determines has been diverted or the amount the Board determines to be such excess.

(d) The Federal Relief Board shall allocate, out of the sum specified in subsection (a), such sums as it deems necessary on the basis of the needs of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone for relief, work relief, and increasing employment. Such sums shall be expended as the Board prescribes as necessary for such purposes and subject to such requirement, if any, as the Board may prescribe for contribution by the possessions to such purposes.

SEC. 3. Not more than $100,000,000 of the sum appropriated by section 1 shall be available to enable the Federal Relief Board, with the approval of the President, in its discretion and on its order, to make such grants or loans to States as it deems necessary in order to meet extraordinary and unforeseen emergencies, and such grants or loans shall be made without regard to the provisions of section 2. The sum specified in this section shall also be available for all administrative expenses of the United States in carrying out the provisions of section 2 and this section.

SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established the Federal Relief Board, which shall be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two of the members of the Board shall be members of the same political party, and the President shall designate one of the members as chairman. Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

(b) The Board shall have the power and duty of carrying out sections 2 and 3 of this act, and such powers and duties shall be exercised under the direction and subject to the approval of the President.

(c) The Board is authorized to make such expenditures, and, subject to the civil-service laws and rules and regulations made thereunder and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, as may be necessary to carry out its powers and duties.

SEC. 5. Any person who knowingly makes any false statement in connection with securing a grant or loan or making any report or furnishing any information under section 2 or 3, or who solicits or receives political contributions from any person who directly or indirectly receives any part of a grant or loan made under section 2 or 3, or any person who, in administering any such grant or loan, discriminates against any person on account of race, religion, or political affiliation shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both. For the purposes of this section, each payment made by a State to which a grant or loan has been made under section 2 or 3 for relief, work relief, or increasing employment shall be considered to consist one-fourth of funds of the State and three-fourths of funds of the United States.

SEC. 6. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000,000, which shall be available for carrying out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the provisions of written contracts made prior to the date of the enactment of this act under authority of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936. Except the sums appropriated under this section, no part of the sums appropriated under this act shall be available for carrying out such acts. No contract shall be entered into under such act of 1935 or 1936 after the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 7. As used in this act, the term "State" means the several States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. This act may be cited as the Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the joint resolution.

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 58, noes 264.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 79, nays 296, not voting 57, as follows:

Mr. Luther A. Johnson with Mr. Ford of Mississippi.
Mr. Green with Mr. Pierce.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order we have passed that point in the consideration of the joint resolution and that the gentleman's request comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the reading of the engrossed copy of the joint resolution. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that the demand is not in order because it comes too late. The Chair will read rule XXI:

> Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage."

The situation is that the joint resolution was read the third time by title, no request was made for a reading in full, and the Chair holds that the request for the reading of the engrossed copy comes too late.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the final passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 327, nays 44, answered "present" 1, not voting, 60, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou in whom are our longings, hopes, and aspirations, help us to approach Thee in the spirit of the Master. May we understand and assimulate His precepts and emulate His virtues. Almighty God, in the broad fields of endeavor, in the complicated conditions of these times, in the rush for wealth and power, the Lord God help us to realize our dependence upon Thee. Thy laws are imperative and perpetual in their obligations, and if we are to be saved it is through loyalty to the statutes which Thou hast ordained. We pray Thee to fill our hearts with brotherly love as we enter upon the labors of this day. Heavenly Father, blessings of good health, strength, and happiness upon our most capable Speaker. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, some days ago the House authorized the United States Marine Band to attend the Confederate Veterans' Reunion at Jackson, Miss., June 9 to June 12, and authorized an appropriation of $6,000 to defray their expenses.

We have had an itemized statement presented, a breakdown of the amounts, and it comes to $5,300.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution (H. J. Res. 394) making appropriation for expenses of the Marine Band in attending the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion at Jackson, Miss., in 1937.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I made a request of the Navy Department administration to take the Marine Band to Columbus, Ohio. I was told it was against the policies of the Government and against the policies of the President to take the Marine Band to Ohio, but it was not against the policy of the Government to take them down to South Carolina or North Carolina. I would like to know just what sort of reasoning that is, if the gentleman knows.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will say that as far as I know the only trips which the United States Marine Band are ever permitted to take are to attend the reunions of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans. I think I am correct in that. I think we have universally permitted that one trip by the United States Marine Band each year.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman from Ohio tell us for what occasion he was trying to get the band to be sent to Ohio?

Mr. LAMNECK. The Spanish-American War veterans were having a national convention at Columbus in August. I have not yet been able to figure out in my mind how anybody could say that sending them south was in line with the President's program and to send them to Ohio was against the President's program. I cannot figure that out.

Mr. TABER. I will say that, as I remember it, the Marine Band or some other Army band was sent to the Texas Centennial Exposition.

Mr. LAMNECK. Oh, I know all about that. I was not in the issue at that time, but I cannot quite figure it out. I am not going to object to this, but I am just calling the attention of the House to the fact that it is absolutely unfair, in my judgment, to make any such discrimination. If we are going to send the Marine Band any place, let us send it to all these places.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I recall 3 or 4 years ago a request was made by a Representative from Rochester, N. Y., that the band be sent to Rochester to some great celebration which was being held there. At that time the statement was made that they could not permit the band to go because it was contrary to the rules to send them away from Washington. I made a request to have the band come to Williamsport 3 or 4 years ago, and I did everything possible to have that band go there for a celebration. It was stated at that time that the band could not leave Washington except on official duties. I am a great deal like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK]. I would like to know why the band can be taken out to Texas and can be taken down to Mississippi and some of these other Southern States, when Northern States are discriminated against. I think there is a "nigger in the wood pile" some place, and we ought to find out what that is.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will say to the gentleman that the question of where the band goes is not determined by the section of the country. That does not enter into it. The gentleman knows it would be impossible for the three service bands to fill every request. All of them are in constant demand, and at every place having a celebration people would like to have one of these bands. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who is a great economist and a great Budget balancer, would not for a moment permit the House or the Appropriations Committee to send these bands everywhere in the country that the people wanted them and pay expenses. Our policy has been, as far as I know, to permit them to go to the Grand Army of the Republic reunions and the Confederate Veterans' reunions. They may have gone to other places that I do not know of.

Mr. RICH. Well, what are the rights of anyone to request the band to leave the District of Columbia? Will the gentleman get that information and put it in the RECORD?

Mr. WOODRUM. Anyone can request it.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman place in the RECORD a statement of what their policy is?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I will try to get a statement of policy.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I regret that I came in a little late and lost the benefit of this enlightening conversation, but I think the gentleman can inform me. Has the Marine Band ever attended a meeting of the Grand Army of the Republic at any time?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think so, but I will not be positive about it. It is my understanding that they have attended reunions of both the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate veterans. I know they have attended Confederate veteran reunions, and I think they have attended Grand Army of the Republic reunions.

Mr. FISH. I have just been informed that they have not gone to the reunions of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure they have attended both of them. I know I would be glad to vote for an appropriation for them to go.

Mr. FISH. That is all I wanted, the gentleman's assurance.

Mr. RICH. But if that should prove to be contrary to the rules and regulations, what then?

Mr. WOODRUM. Then they ought to change the rules and allow them to go.

Mr. RICH. That is what we are trying to get.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I think the statement the gentleman originally made is correct, that we have simply allowed the Marine Band to attend the reunions of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate veterans; and I want to say, as one Member of the House, that I think that policy is correct. If, however, we start sending the Marine Band to various places for other occasions we will be deluged with requests and bothered to death, because every big celebration would like to have the Marine Band.

Mr. WOODRUM. And that applies likewise to the other bands.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; any of the main service bands, Army or Navy or Marine. We simply cannot enter into that kind of proposition, to send them all over the country. I believe the gentleman from Virginia is right in his position.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 394

Resolved, etc., That for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the United Confederate Veterans' 1937 Reunion at Jackson, Miss., June 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1937", approved May 24, 1937, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,300.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

UNEMPLOYMENT IS PERMANENT PROBLEM

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, for the past 10 days we have been discussing what is ordinarily known as the "Relief Bill." I made the comment when it first came up that we did not have any policy-making committee on the questions involved.

The bill went to a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and the subcommittee, I think, was composed of four or five members. Then the bill was brought to the floor, and we began to debate whether unemployment was "permanent" or "temporary."

The long and tedious debate, the violence of argument, indicated about 5 or 10 cross-currents. I did not stand with the "earmarkers" because I do not believe there was enough money provided for relief. However, in principle they were right, and we must eventually definitely set out how the money is to be used. But before that is done we must have a policy committee, just as we have for the Army, the Navy, for banking and currency, for education, interstate and foreign commerce, and Indian affairs; and, as far as I am concerned, I believe that we will have unemployment just as long as we have Indians; in other words, I believe the problem is permanent.

CONGRESS NEEDS INFORMATION

Anyhow I maintain that we know that substantial unemployment is going to last for at least 5, 10, or 15 years. Therefore, we should establish a policy-making committee in this House to deal with the subject and its related problems, and that we should have a full and proper investigation.

When the W. P. A. appropriation bill reached the floor I said we should have $2,200,000,000. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] said the amount should be $1,500,000,000. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said it should be $1,000,000,000. I am not reflecting on the other gentlemen, but I do not think that I knew exactly why it should be $2,200,000,000, and I do not think that they knew their reasons either, except maybe, I believe it should be more, and they thought it should be less. It might be said that we were all guessing.

There is a lot of information available about relief needs and about the people applying for relief which such a committee could make available to this body to guide it in future legislation.

THERE SHOULD BE A STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS AND WELFARE

Mr. Speaker, we should have a standing committee on public welfare and relief and subjects of that kind. In order to bring this matter before the Congress I am today introducing three resolutions which I think are very important. One of them creates a new standing committee to deal with proposed legislation concerning public works, public health—and that is a very important thing too, public health—social security, the relief of unemployment, and the relief of destitution caused by flood, drought, and other emergencies. This committee would be known as the Committee on Public Works and Welfare. (See below I, Committee on Public Works and Welfare.)

Mr. Speaker, this does not take away jurisdiction of land, flood control, or other matters from present standing committees.

But it puts matters concerning unemployment and destitution in one committee, along with social security and related questions. In that way we shall have an intelligent policy-making major committee composed of 25 Members on which the various political parties will be represented.

When the Interior Department appropriation bill came out the hearings were 2 inches thick. The hearings on the relief bill were about three-quarters of an inch thick, and although they contained a considerable amount of data, in proportion to importance, the relief bill hearing should have been 2 feet thick. As a result we had an unceremonious and disagreeable battle over relief for a long time. Had there been any policy committee to develop and digest the information already in existence this might have been eliminated.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO GET MATTER STARTED

I am also introducing a resolution for the creation of a select committee to investigate the Works Progress Administration. (See below II, Investigation of W. P. A.) If there is anything wrong with the Works Progress Administration, let us know it and correct it.

In the resolution for the creation of a select committee it is provided that Congress shall determine the number of employables, the number who are unemployed, the number of unemployables who need relief, and also conduct an investigation as to the administration of the W. P. A.

The third is a resolution on the matter of appointing a commission on national unemployment and relief; and in this connection I may say that a similar measure has been introduced in the Senate. (See below III, National Commission Unemployment and Relief.)

THREE RESOLUTIONS BEAR DIRECTLY ON SERIOUS PROBLEMS

As I have said, there are three resolutions. This is something that the House of Representatives ought to consider if we are to act in an intelligent way. As far as I am concerned, if a policy committee reported after a definite investigation and due consideration, recommending $1,000,000,000, $2,000,000,000, or $3,000,000,000, we could all, no doubt, give it support, because we would know the facts had been duly considered and we were following a definite policy. But under the present conditions we do not know what we are doing. I urge this House to seriously consider the resolutions which I am now introducing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed, so I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman referred to the printing of the Interior Department bill and the scope of the printing of the relief bill. May I ask the gentleman whether he does not believe the propaganda statistical books issued by the Works Progress Administration would compare with Dr. Eliot's 5-foot shelf of books?
